PRENDERGAST, J. The appellant was indicted for burglary in two counts, the first, daytime, and the second, nighttime. Both charged that it was done with intent to murder Bertha Woodworth, and the house burglarized was the private residence of W. W. Woodworth. The nighttime count only was submitted. The jury convicted appellant and fixed his penalty at six years in the penitentiary. The records in this case are voluminous. The record proper has 90 pages of typewritten matter, the statement of facts 105, and appellant's printed brief 61.

In the consideration of this case and the questions raised, we have given all of these records a thorough investigation. A large number of witnesses were introduced. While all this is true, the main questions are few. It is unnecessary to give any lengthy statement of the testimony. We will give such of it only as we think is necessary to so discuss and decide the questions.

The family of W. W. Woodworth consisted of himself, his wife, and his said daughter Bertha. His business and duties required him away from his said home in Houston, most of the time, and he was there very little. The family had rented and occupied as private residence a certain house in the city of Houston at the time and before the burglary which is charged to have been committed on December 3, 1910. During the spring and early summer of 1910 a young man, it seems, by the name of Rogers was paying attention to Bertha. About then the appellant became acquainted with her and so manipulated as to turn her against said Rogers and caused her to dismiss him and accept appellant as her suitor. Early in July she and appellant became engaged to be married. In the latter part of November, 1911, it seems that Bertha in some way learned of appellant, in inducing her to dismiss Rogers and no longer associate with him or receive his attentions, had misrepresented Rogers in some way, and she and Rogers did then become aware of it. It seems that this, or something else, about a week before December 3, 1910, resulted in Bertha breaking the engagement of marriage with appellant; he claiming, however, that this did not occur until about the night before the offense as charged to have been committed. The burglary occurred just before or about daylight on Saturday morning December 3, 1910, while it was still dark. Bertha testified that she saw appellant on the Thursday night before, and that he then threatened to kill her or breaking their engagement. On Friday night, early in the night, she phoned to said Rogers and had him to come to her house; he reaching there about between 5 and 6 o'clock. A little later, about 7 o'clock, appellant appeared upon the scene and found Rogers there in company and conversation with Bertha. He thereupon became incensed and demanded to know what his business was there. Rogers then accused appellant of being the cause of Bertha's dismissing him (Rogers), and some words and altercation then occurred between them in the presence and in the house of Bertha and her mother. Bertha and her mother desired appellant to leave the house, and, upon his declining to do so, they requested Rogers to forcibly put him out of the house, which Rogers then did. Appellant claims that in this altercation and forcible ejection Rogers struck him a blow on the face on the side of the nose. Rogers, Bertha, and her mother all testified that he did not strike him any blow, but they all substantially testified that he did roughly take hold of him and forcibly eject him from the house and closed the door on him. Rogers shortly afterwards left the house and was not in or about it any more during that night or the next day. Appellant testified that after he was thus ejected from the house he walked up and down the sidewalk of the block in which this house was situated in the city of Houston until about or after 10 that night, and that he remembered what he did and where he went, detailing more or less of this, but that after about 10 that night, on this trial, he did not remember anything that occurred during the remainder of that night or early the next morning.

The testimony further shows, without doubt and without material contradiction, that the next morning, Saturday, December 3, 1910, just before or about daylight, and while still dark, the appellant appeared at the said Woodworth's house and attempted to get in it, but, not succeeding otherwise, he kicked out one of the glass sidelights of the entrance and through that then got into said house, and thereupon went up the stairway to the second story and to the door of the room which was occupied as the bedroom of Bertha and her mother that night; that he was familiar with the house, both up and down stairs, and knew where Bertha and her mother slept; that, upon reaching the bedroom door, he demanded an entrance, but was refused by Bertha and her mother, who were then still in bed and undressed. He thereupon proceeded to burst in the panels of the door and through this break entered the said bedroom, Bertha and her mother screaming and running, and Bertha went out of the room through one of the windows on to the second story of the front gallery; appellant following her with a black-handled open razor and after her with it. That in attempting to escape from him she got outside of the banisters of the gallery, holding and clinging thereto, leaning as far away from him as she could; that in some way she then fell from this gallery to the ground below, the appellant attempting to cut her all this time, causing her to fall in attempting to escape. He thereupon hurriedly retraced his steps, went back through the window, through the room and door which he had succeeded in breaking through, down the stairway out on the front gallery below, and then proceeded to cut and slash Bertha with this razor, inflicting serious wounds upon her therewith; that he cut her neck, attempted to cut her throat, cut her on top of the head, cut her finger on one hand and the thumb on the other, and that, in perpetrating these wounds upon Bertha, he broke the edge of the razor off, part of this broken piece lodging in her hair at the wound in her head. Another piece was broken off and lodged in her finger. These pieces of the razor were found by the physician who was at once called in to dress her wounds. She was confined to her bed some three weeks from the wounds. By the screams of Bertha and her mother, the neighborhood was aroused and some men came to where she was; the appellant thereupon fleeing. Shortly after this he went into the back premises of a neighbor of the Woodworths and with the same razor cut his own throat, partially severing part of the windpipe and vocal organs. A pool of blood, the razor, and a handkerchief saturated with blood were found apparently where he fell or lay down when he cut his throat.

Shortly after this he appeared at the back door of this neighbor, knocked at the door, and, upon her opening it, she discovered him with his hair disheveled, no hat on, and blood all over him, and was so frightened that she immediately slammed and locked the door and ran from the house. Shortly afterwards he was apprehended and taken to one of the infirmaries in the city, and a doctor was immediately called to attend him. The nurse or person who called this physician briefly told him the condition of the appellant, and he instructed the nurse to administer anesthetics and that he would reach there as soon as he could and dress his wound and give him attention; that he shortly afterwards did appear at the infirmary, found appellant with his throat cut, as stated, and had other anesthetics and morphine administered to him, and proceeded to dress and sew up his wound. The razor found with the handkerchief saturated with blood at the pool of blood was identified by the witnesses as the razor with which he had cut Bertha Woodworth; the witnesses sitting in the broken pieces found in her head and finger with the broken razor. The doctor at the infirmary dressed his wounds between 8 and 9 o'clock, and, just after the wounds were thus dressed and sewed up, Mr. Kessler, the chief of police, who had been called by the crime to the scene thereof soon after it occurred, appeared at the infirmary, saw appellant, and talked with him about the facts of the case. He asked him questions and he replied partially vocally, though his voice was much affected by his self-inflicted wounds, but, in addition to nodding his head and thus talking, he wrote briefly of what had occurred, and then and there gave it to the chief of police. On this occasion, in substance, he told the chief of police that said Rogers had assaulted him in the early part of the night or evening before; that when he had this conversation with appellant, and appellant told him these things and wrote what he did, he was conscious and sensible and nothing was wrong with him beyond his wounds, and, while he said he could not speak, he told this witness about cutting this young lady and, as he understood from him, had later inflicted the wounds upon himself. The writing thus made by appellant and given to the chief of police was produced and identified. It was written or scribbled on pads of paper—the chief would ask him the questions and he would answer with the scribbling, or shake or nod his head, as he was asked the questions. The appellant thereupon introduced this writing of appellant which was as follows: "I tried, killed that girl over Mrs. Woodworth and myself, give it to the police." "I got beat up by Rogers, he works over No. 7 fire station arrest him." This witness further testified: "When he read those things to me, he made no claim he did not know what he was doing the night before; there was no pretense in his conduct there with me that he had lost his mind or was insane, or anything wrong with him the night before; he was pretty rational when talking to me." The infirmary physician who first reached him between 8 and 9 o'clock carefully examined him, washed and dressed his wounds, and he testified, in substance, that he examined him thoroughly, and there were no other wounds or bruises on him whatever than the self-inflicted cut on his throat, and there were no external signs of violence, and he had no bruises or wounds on his face, nor was his face or eyes swollen.

Appellant's defense was insanity, he claiming and testifying that he knew nothing about his breaking in the Woodworth house or his assaulting or cutting Bertha or himself; that, after he was ejected from the house about 7 o'clock the night before, he remembered what he did and where he went and practically all until about 10 o'clock that night, and that he remembered nothing after that; that after he was ejected from the house and assaulted and struck by said Rogers the night before that he did not feel right; that he felt like something was the matter with him; that it did not occur to him to go to any of his friends or a doctor, or away from his proximity to the Woodworth house to get help or to have anything done for him; that he did not know, while he was testifying, what was his trouble that night—what was the matter with him; that it had been so long since then that he could not swear whether his then condition was due to the lick he claimed to have received from Rogers the night before; that he did not know what there was to cause him to just forget and everything to become a blank after 10 o'clock that night; that he did not then, at the time he was testifying, know of anything else that could have caused it.

His foster mother testified that she did not see him until the next evening about 3 o'clock after all of this occurred on the morning before, and he had been in the infirmary and his wounds dressed and sewed up about 8 or 9 o'clock that morning; that at that time—3 p. m.—the side of his face was swollen, and that it was black and blue and green; that the side of his face showed the color was purple, broken, and bruised; that his whole face was discolored and he had a pale, greenish appearance as of a person having lost a great deal of blood, and his swollen face had greenish streaks all over it.

While not a single one of appellant's many bills comply with the rules (section 857, p. 557, and section 1123, p. 732, of White's C. C. P.), yet we will briefly take up and pass upon the questions attempted to be raised by them.

[1] By appellant's first bill he complains that this question was asked by the state's attorney: "You spoke of this conversation at 7:30 and then at 9. I don't understand explain that," because it was leading and suggestive. The bill in no way shows that it was leading or suggestive, nor does the question. The answer of the witness is not given. This shows no error. His next bill complains that the court would not permit the stenographer, at his request, to read a certain question which had been asked, to which he excepted. This shows no error. The third bill contains about 3½ pages of typewritten matter of questions and answers and colloquies between the counsel and the court, and that the court then asked this question, "When was it, let us get this time straight?" That he objected to the court stopping him in his cross-examination and asking the above question. Then the bill proceeds to show that the witness, in answer to the questions, attempted to explain. No error is shown by this bill.

[2] By his fourth bill he complains, in substance, that some of the state's witnesses were in sight and hearing of the witness testifying, although the rule had been enforced and they sent out of the room. The court in explaining the bill states that the witnesses were in a room out of sight and hearing of the court or witnesses on the stand. This bill shows no error.

[3] The seventh bill contains 13½ pages of typewritten matter and, among other things, shows that the appellant attempted to prove by his foster mother what he had told her about his engagement to Bertha Woodworth soon after it occurred in July, 1910, and some months before the alleged offense. We get from this bill that appellant was seeking to introduce this testimony, and the court would not permit him to do it because it was hearsay and improper. The bill shows no error whatever, but it does show a patience and long suffering by the court that should not have occurred. When appellant offered his testimony, which we think was clearly hearsay and inadmissible, it was promptly objected to by the state, and the court sustained the objection, and then, at appellant's instance, the court retired the jury and had a long controversy and colloquy with appellant's counsel about the matter. When the appellant offered his testimony and it was objected to by the state and the objection sustained and the evidence excluded, this should have ended the matter, and the court should have proceeded with the trial, as the bill shows he repeatedly attempted to do, but was in effect prevented by appellant's attorney. There is no eighth bill in the record, and the court refused to approve his ninth bill.

[4] By the tenth bill it is shown that appellant asked his foster mother, in substance: As thoroughly as possible the general character as she observed it, and the acts and conduct of the defendant as evincing his disposition, whether it was that of a quarrelsome or peaceable person, and whether it was that of one who respected the rights of others, or whether it was that of a murderer or a harmless person, tell all about it during his whole lifetime. This was objected to by the state as immaterial and irrelevant and as attempting to prove character in the wrong way, and that it was the opinion of the witness about matters that are not relative to appellant's marriage engagement to Bertha. The court sustained the objection. It is not stated what the witness would have testified. In approving the bill the court qualified it by stating that it was already proved by the witness that appellant's reputation as a peaceable, quiet, and law-abiding citizen was good. By the eighteenth bill appellant attempted to prove by another witness what his reputation was as an upright citizen. And by the twentieth, by another witness, that his reputation was that of a gentle and humane disposition. These bills, and neither of them, show any reversible error.

[5, 6] The eleventh bill, of five pages of typewritten matter, shows that appellant attempted to prove that he did not have fights when he was a boy. And in his fourteenth that, when the court would not let the witness answer certain questions along the same line, the court threatened, or perhaps did, as he states in qualifying the bill, fine or punish him for contempt on account of his repeatedly refusing to abide by the ruling of the court; that all this occurred in the absence of the jury. This bill does not state what the witness would have testified. None of this shows any error.

[7] By his fifteenth bill appellant complains that the court would not permit his foster mother to testify what he told her about 3 o'clock the next day after the crime was committed about daylight of that day, that he did not know how his wound on his throat was inflicted, and that it was not self-inflicted. The court correctly sustained the state's objection to this because it was hearsay and self-serving and it shows no error.

[8] By his seventeenth bill appellant complains that the court would not let him show the conversations between Mrs. Sheperd, appellant's foster mother, and the officers about their finding the said handkerchief saturated with blood at the pool of blood where the razor was found; the court stating that he could prove any fact by any person who knew such fact about the handkerchief, but not conversations between the witness and other persons. There was no error in this.

[9] No error is shown by appellant's nineteenth bill wherein he complains of some side-bar remark of the state's attorney during the trial; the court stating that he instructed the jury not to consider the remarks of counsel for the state. Nor was there any error shown in a side-bar remark by the prosecuting attorney, as complained of in his twenty-first bill.

[10] Neither was there any error in the court refusing to permit the appellant to testify that he had been in jail for some months prior to his trial, and that he had but a few days ago engaged counsel, which was done through his foster mother.

[11] There was no error in refusing to permit appellant to show what the newspapers had published of the occurrence the day after it occurred; the witness stating that he had no personal knowledge of the reports in the newspaper, and that all of his information was hearsay.

[12] There is no reversible error shown by appellant's thirty-second bill to the action of the court in refusing to permit Mrs. Miller to testify that appellant looked like he was insane when he appeared at her back door and knocked and she saw him bloody all over, etc. The court permitted the witness to testify to the condition of the appellant at the time, and simply excluded her expression that he looked like an insane man.

[13] Besides this bill does not in any way give such a statement of the case or questions as to show this court that any injury whatever has occurred to him thereby.

[14] The court correctly held that the state had a right in cross-examination of the appellant to have him testify, in substance, that he could not say whether his lack of remembrance after 10 o'clock the night of the assault was due to the lick he received as complained in appellant's bill No. 33.

[15] Nor did the court err in refusing to permit appellant, as complained in his bill No. 34, to prove that Mrs. Woodworth, Bertha's mother, paid a large fee to Messrs. Lane, Walters & Storey, attorneys, to prosecute him.

[16] Nor did the court err in permitting the witness Kessler, the chief of police, to testify about appellant's condition and his writing and delivering what he did to him on the morning after the crime, as substantially stated in the statement above, as complained by appellant in his thirty-fifth bill. Nor did the court err, as complained in his thirty-seventh bill, in not permitting his expert Doctor Ross to give an illustration of some patient, which was not in point in this case.

[17] His bill No. 39, complaining that the court erred in cross-examination of his expert Doctor Ross in permitting the state to include in the hypothetical question the substance of the testimony of the chief of police, shows no error.

[18] Nor did the court err in permitting the state's witness Dr. Green, who treated appellant and dressed his wounds the morning of his cuts, to testify that there was no evidence of concussion of the appellant.

[19] The court in this case gave a correct charge on insanity, strictly in accordance with charges on the subject which this court has many times and uniformly approved as a correct charge on that subject. Nugent v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 67, 80 S. W. 84; Hurst v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 379, 46 S. W. 635, 50 S. W. 719; Cannon v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. R. 467, 56 S. W. 351; Tubb v. State, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 618, 117 S. W. 858; and many other cases might be cited, but it is unnecessary. In his motion for new trial he complains of this charge because he claims it was error "in restricting the insanity which would acquit defendant in this case to 'a defect of reason and disease of the mind'; whereas the insanity shown to exist in this case, if defendant did commit the act, was caused solely by concussion, and was almost instantaneous, and was not such as would commonly be called a 'disease,' and the jury were wholly misled by the charge into believing that they could not acquit on account of such insanity as was described by Dr. F. B. Ross, which they could not have understood as a 'disease,' and they were thereby misled to the prejudice of the defendant. And this especially in view of the fact that the correct proposition of law was called to the attention of the court in defendant's special charge No. 1, which should have been given." This special charge is to this effect: "Insanity such as will excuse the crime alleged herein is that state of mind in which the person is mentally irresponsible through loss of consciousness such as is normal, produced from any cause which is shown to be capable of producing it."

The evidence in this case, without question and without doubt, shows that appellant's mind, for all of his life previous to the time of the commission of this crime and afterwards, was that of a normal, ordinary sane person. The effect of his testimony on the subject is that from some cause unknown to him and for which he cannot account, he, at the time he testified in this case, could not remember what occurred from about 10 o'clock the early part of the night of December 2, 1910, till after he, late in the evening of the next day, realized that he was in the infirmary with his throat cut, and he claimed that he had been struck in the face by the side of the nose about 7 o'clock the night before by said Rogers in the house of Mrs. Woodworth and in the presence of her and her daughter, Bertha. Rogers, Mrs. Woodworth, and Bertha testified Rogers did not then strike him as claimed by him. Then he put Dr. F. B. Ross on the stand who sufficiently showed that he was an expert, and he was asked a long hypothetical question purporting to recite, from appellant's standpoint, all of the testimony tending to sustain his contention, and then the said doctor was asked: "If you know in your professional and scientific mind whether the action of such an assault comports with that of a sane or insane mind?" He answered: "Up to the time of injury to himself, the blow on the head, I will say there would be no question about the soundness of mind. Now it is possible for a blow of that kind to create a concussion, and there are different degrees of concussion, and one suffering from concussion might do acts that were utterly at variance with his former character." He further shows in his testimony that, as a matter of opinion, it was a very difficult question to answer; that the way the question was put there were two possibilities—the symptoms related in the question were symptoms of a concussion, but, on the other hand, angry and ordinary human emotions might prompt the same thing. That the symptoms of concussion which were detailed to him in the question were not explained completely so as to show the proper effects of a concussion, and that several requisites of such effect are wholly lacking in the question. Then the same witness, in answer to the state's hypothetical question, states that he would answer that the appellant was not insane.

Whart. Crim. Ev. vol. 1 (10th Ed.) § 417d, says: "In all cases where medical experts are called as witnesses, their testimony should be received with great caution, and like opinions from neighbors and acquaintances should be regarded as of little weight if not well sustained by reasons and facts that admit of no misconstruction, and supported by authority of acknowledged credit. And in all cases the amount of reliance to be placed upon such an opinion depends upon the means of judging of the mental condition of the person, and the facts upon which such opinion is based." In note 2 cited from this text he also cites with approval what Judge Maxwell says in Burgo v. State, 26 Neb. 639, 42 N. W. 701: "Ordinary medical expert testimony in regard to insanity, particularly where graduates of different schools of medicine are pitted against each other, is of the most unreliable character." And a Mississippi case, Russell v. State, 53 Miss. 367: "It was said that medicine not being an exact science, the testimony of a medical witness on the question of sanity or insanity is at best of an exceedingly unsatisfactory character, and is often as much calculated to mislead as to guide to a correct conclusion."

In section 417e, Mr. Wharton says: "Thus, in those jurisdictions where the right and wrong test obtains in insanity, and such inquiry is permissible and proper, the fact that a person is unable to discriminate between right and wrong is best ascertained, not by the opinion of any medical witness nor by any medical theory, but by the acts of the individual himself. And such acts and conduct on the part of one accused of crime, showing conclusively that he had sufficient reason to contemplate the act that he did and its consequences at the time he did it, are of more value as evidence on the question of capacity than the opinions of witnesses, however learned or experienced they may be." And in note 2 he approves what was said in Rankin v. Rankin, 61 Mo. 295: "And where the mental capacity is thoroughly established by evidence other than by hypothetical reasoning of experts, their mere speculation on the subject is entitled to but little weight." And in State v. Hockett, 70 Iowa, 442, 30 N. W. 742: "And expert testimony in a prosecution for crime which is made up largely of mere theory and speculation, and which suggests mere possibilities, ought never to be allowed to overcome clear and well-established facts."

In the recent work of Legal Medicine, by Stewart, § 142, he says: "We now know that insanity is a disease just as much as typhoid fever, and that frequently we can trace its rise, progress, culmination, and disappearance. We should never forget this, but treat it as a disease and those suffering from it as other patients, diagnosing their symptoms and treating them as sick people requiring the best of care."

14 Cyc. 385 defines disease as: "Any derangement of the functions or alteration of the structure of the animal organs; a morbid condition resulting from some functional disturbance or failure of the physical function which tends to undermine the constitution." All of the authorities on insanity treat it and discuss it as a mental disease—a disease of the mind. As a matter of fact, it is a mental disease, whatever the cause, and however long or short the duration. Clearly so, as distinguished from a disease of the hands or feet or lungs or stomach, or any other disease of the body other than the mind. Clearly, in our opinion, the special charge requested by appellant, above quoted, is not the law and should not have been given, and the charge complained of is correct and was not subject to the criticism made on it by appellant and did not and could not have prejudiced appellant's rights as claimed by him. Code Cr. Proc. 1911, art. 743.

[20] The court did not err in submitting only the second count in the indictment. The evidence clearly established nighttime burglary as contradistinguished from a daytime burglary, and the court charged the jury in effect that if it was not a nighttime burglary, submitting the requisites thereof for a finding, to acquit appellant. The jury did not fix the lowest punishment for nighttime burglary, but fixed a higher penalty.

There is nothing in appellant's contention criticising the charge of the court in defining murder in quoting the statutory definition thereof: "Every person with a sound memory and discretion," etc. The record shows that the court, in hearing appellant's ground of his motion for new trial attacking the juror Lawrenson, heard evidence thereon, and, after hearing the evidence, overruled the motion. No error is shown in this.

The judgment is affirmed.

BYRD v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 18, 1912. Rehearing Denied Dec. 18, 1912.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 101*)—COURTS—JURISDICTION—TRANSFER OF CAUSES.

A transfer of a prosecution under an indictment returned in the district court for pursuing the occupation of selling intoxicating liquors in local option territory to the county court is properly denied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 198-205; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 87*) — STATUTORY OFFENSES—REQUISITES OF INDICTMENT.

An indictment charging the commission of a statutory offense subsequent to the passage of the statute need not contain the allegation that the offense was committed subsequent to the passage of the statute, and the indictment is good on its face.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 244-255; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 205*)—PURSUING THE OCCUPATION OF SELLING LIQUORS IN LOCAL OPTION TERRITORY—INDICTMENT—REQUISITES.

Under the Code, providing that an indictment need only allege the facts which will enable accused to plead the judgment given on it in bar of any prosecution for the same offense, an indictment alleging that accused on or about October 5, 1910, unlawfully pursued the occupation of selling intoxicating liquor, and on a given date made a sale to one man and on a different date a sale to another man, and that during the months of June, July, August, September, October, November, and December, 1910, and January, February, March, and April, 1911, all anterior to the filing of the indictment, made sales to persons to the grand jury unknown, is not defective for not alleging that during all the time accused continued to pursue the business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 225; Dec. Dig. § 205.*]

4. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 148*)—"PURSUING THE BUSINESS OF SELLING INTOXICATING LIQUORS."

The offense of pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquors in local option territory is a distinct offense from that of making a sale of intoxicating liquors, and is a felony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 148.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1091*)—INDORSEMENT ON INDICTMENT OF WITNESSES—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Where the court, in approving the bill of exceptions complaining of the denial of a motion to require the state to indorse on the indictment the names of all its witnesses, stated that the indictment contained the indorsement of witnesses who were all of the main witnesses, the bill presented no error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2803, 2815, 2816, 2818, 2819, 2823, 2828-2833, 2843, 2931-2933, 2943; Dec. Dig. § 1091.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1166½*)—RULINGS ON CHALLENGES—REVIEW.

Where no objectionable juror served in the case, accused could not complain of rulings on challenges to jurors.

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 730*)—IMPROPER ARGUMENTS OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—CORRECTION BY COURT.

Where accused objected to the remarks of the district attorney, and the court at once reprimanded him and orally directed the jury not to consider the remarks, and also gave the charge requested by accused, the remarks did not call for a reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1693; Dec. Dig. § 730.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 372*)—PURSUING BUSINESS OF SELLING LIQUOR IN LOCAL OPTION TERRITORY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—OTHER SALES.

Under an indictment alleging that accused pursued the business of selling liquor in local option territory, the state may show sales of liquor on dates other than the date mentioned in the indictment, and proof of sales is a circumstance to show that accused engaged in the business.

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—EVIDENCE—MATERIALITY.

The age of a state's witness is immaterial, and the mere fact that a witness is permitted to state his age presents no error.

10. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 233*)—PURSUING BUSINESS OF SELLING LIQUOR IN LOCAL OPTION TERRITORY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Under an indictment alleging that accused, on or about a designated date, pursued the business of selling liquor in local option territory, and that in enumerated months he sold liquor, the state was properly permitted to show the amount of liquor received by accused and that it was delivered at the place where he carried on the business.

11. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 235*)—PURSUING BUSINESS OF SELLING LIQUOR IN LOCAL OPTION TERRITORY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

The refusal to permit accused, charged with pursuing the occupation of selling liquor in local option territory, to show that it was the custom of patrons of his place of business to have him order intoxicating liquors for them was proper where each witness called to testify was permitted to state whether or not he had requested accused to order liquor for him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 299; Dec. Dig. § 235.*]

Davidson, P. J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from District Court, Brown County; John W. Goodwin, Judge.

John Byrd was convicted of crime, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Harrison & Wayman, of Brownwood, for appellant. O. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HARPER, J. Appellant was prosecuted and convicted of pursuing the occupation of selling intoxicating liquors in local option territory, and his punishment assessed at 2½ years' confinement in the penitentiary.

[1] Appellant moved to transfer this case to the county court. This was decided adversely to the contention of appellant in the cases of Fitch v. State, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 366, 127 S. W. 1040, and Mizell v. State, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 228, 128 S. W. 127.

[2] The indictment is also assailed, but we do not deem it necessary to discuss all the grounds; they having been passed on so often by this court. Mizell v. State, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 226, 128 S. W. 127; Slack v. State, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 362, 136 S. W. 1073; Dozier v. State, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 258, 137 S. W. 679, and cases cited. However, appellant assigns, as an additional ground to those heretofore passed on, the ground that, as the indictment charged that the offense took place on or about the 5th day of October, 1910, and the law under which he was prosecuted only became effective July 10, 1909, that the indictment is invalid, because it did not contain the words "and subsequent to the passage of the law." As the date of the offense is alleged 15 months after the law became effective, no such allegation was necessary. Indictments can only be quashed for defects apparent on the face thereof, and, as the offense is alleged to have been committed subsequent to the passage of the law, it was good on its face. The authorities cited by appellant do not sustain his contention. In Alabama, from which state a number of cases are cited by appellant, it is not necessary to allege the date of the offense unless it is a material ingredient of the offense, and in that state, on an indictment in which no date was alleged, it was held that a date ought to be alleged, or the indictment make it manifest that the act was committed subsequent to the passage of the law. In this case a date is alleged, and the indictment charges the offense to have been committed subsequent to the passage of the law.

In the case of Hodnett v. State, 66 Miss. 26, 5 South. 518, a Mississippi case cited by appellant, the date alleged as the date of the commission of the offense was prior to the passage of the law, consequently for this defect the indictment was declared invalid. In that case it was held the indictment must allege the offense to have been committed subsequent to the passage of the law. This indictment does so charge. In the case of State v. Massey, 97 N. C. 465, 2 S. E. 445, a North Carolina case cited by appellant, the law as amended became effective February 16th, and thereafter, on April 1st, the pleader in the indictment did not allege the elements of the offense as defined by the amended act, and, the indictment having alleged the offense as subsequent to the passage of the act, the court held the indictment bad because it failed to allege the elements of the offense at the alleged date of the commission thereof. As hereinbefore stated, none of the cases cited by appellant sustain his contention, but all the authorities hold the indictment valid, drawn as in this case on that issue.

[3] Appellant further contends that, as the indictment alleges "that on or about the 5th day of October, 1910, the appellant did then and there unlawfully engage in and pursue the occupation and business of selling intoxicating liquor in violation of law, and did, on a given date, make a sale to one man, and on a different date make a sale to another man," etc., and that during the months of June, July, August, September, October, November, and December, 1910, and January, February, March, and April, 1911 (all being anterior to the filing of the indictment), did make sales to persons to the grand jury unknown," it is defective in that it did not contain an additional allegation that during all that time appellant continued to engage in and pursue the business and occupation. Having alleged that appellant on a given date pursued the business or occupation, this allegation would admit proof that appellant was engaged in such occupation within any time prior to the presentment of the indictment within the period of limitation, or, in this instance, subsequent to the enactment of the law, covering the months charged in the indictment. Cudd v. State, 28 Tex. App. 124, 12 S. W. 1010; Abrigo v. State, 29 Tex. App. 143, 15 S. W. 408; Shuman v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 69, 29 S. W. 160. The offense denounced by this statute is the pursuing of a business or occupation, not the making of a sale, but evidence that sales have been made is admissible as proof going to show that one is engaged in the business, and the state having alleged that he was pursuing the occupation and business, and adduced proof as to sales over a period of time as tending to show that he was so engaged, if the state should attempt a second prosecution covering the same period of time, a plea of former conviction would necessarily be sustained; but, having once made a proper allegation that he was pursuing the business and occupation, it was not necessary to repeat such allegation each time a sale was alleged to have been made, as the allegation that "he on or about a given date" covered and admitted proof over a period prior to the filing of the indictment generally for the full period at which the law has fixed a limitation as a bar, but in this instance from and after the law became effective until the filing of the indictment herein, and the court so limited the testimony. Subdivision 6 of article 439, Code of Criminal Procedure; State v. White, 41 Tex. 64; Wharton's Precedents of Indictments and Pleas, 9. The indictment in this case follows the forms in this respect as laid down in White's Annotated Penal Code, §§ 156, 158, 159, 160, 162, and 163, and which have been frequently approved by this court. Our Code provides that the certainty required in an indictment is only such as will enable the defendant to plead the judgment that may be given upon it in bar of any prosecution for the same offense, and this conviction would bar any further prosecution of appellant for the offense charged, under the evidence adduced, from and after the law became effective until the date of the filing of the indictment herein.

[4] The indictment in this case charges appellant with pursuing the business or occupation of selling intoxicating liquors, and is a distinct offense from making a sale of intoxicating liquors, and is a felony in this state, and the court did not err in so holding. Fitch v. State, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 366, 127 S. W. 1040.

[5] The appellant filed a motion requiring the state to indorse on the indictment the names of all its witnesses. The court overruled the motion and, in approving the bill, states the indictment contained the following indorsement: "Found on the testimony of Ed Blevins: Names of witnesses: Ed Blevins, A. N. Davenport, Elmer Jones, Tom Ward, T. B. Speed, Dan Harris, T. A. Morrison, L. L. White, C. C. Lockwood"—and the court states these were all of the main witnesses. As thus qualified, the bill presents no error. Section 327, White's Ann. Proc., and authorities cited.

[6] In two of the bills defendant complains of being required to exhaust peremptory challenges on two jurors, S. F. Haynes and W. G. Churchill. As to the juror Churchill, he did not serve on the jury, was not challenged by defendant, but was challenged by the state. As defendant did not exhaust any challenge on that juror, and he did not serve on the jury, he has no ground for complaint. The juror Haynes answered that he had an opinion formed from hearsay, but such an opinion would not influence his verdict; that he had talked with none of the witnesses. This juror was challenged both by the state and defendant, and did not serve on the jury. The court did not err in his ruling. Subdivision 13 of article 673. In addition to this, it is not shown that any objectionable juror served in the case.

[7] In another bill it is shown that defendant objected to certain remarks of the district attorney, and the court at once reprimanded that official and orally instructed the jury not to consider such remarks, and in addition to this he gave the charges requested by defendant in this respect, and, under such circumstances, the remarks were not of that nature that would call for a reversal of the case.

[8] There are a number of bills of exception objecting to the court permitting witnesses to testify to sales of whisky on dates other than the date named in the indictment. The indictment charged that appellant pursued the business or occupation on or about the 5th day of October, and each sale testified to was a circumstance tending to show that appellant was engaged in that business. As we discussed this question in passing on the sufficiency of the indictment, we do not deem it necessary to do so again.

[9] In another bill it is shown that a witness for the state was asked his age. The age of the witness could not be material in this case, and the fact that he stated his age presents no error.

[10] The record in this case discloses that appellant from on and after June 9, 1911, signed for and had consigned to him the following shipments of intoxicating liquor:

|----------|---|
| June 9. | One cask of beer, weight 250 pounds. |
| June 22. | Two boxes of liquor, weight 110 pounds. |
| June 29. | One cask of beer, weight 250 pounds. |
| June 30. | One box of liquor, weight 50 pounds. |
| July 8. | Two boxes of liquor, weight 100 pounds. |
| July 11. | Two boxes of liquor, weight 100 pounds. |
| July 15. | Box of liquor, weight 70 pounds. |
| July 25. | Two boxes of liquor, weight 100 pounds. |
| July 29. | One package of liquor. |

These items continue on through the months of August, September, October, November, December, January, and February, showing shipments of liquors to appellant in quantities. It was shown that appellant receipted for these shipments, and that draymen during these months delivered packages to appellant's place of business. In admitting all this testimony there was no error, as appellant was charged with pursuing the business or occupation of selling intoxicating liquors, and it was permissible for the state to show the amount of liquors received by him, and that it was delivered at the place where the evidence would show that appellant carried on this business.

[11] In another bill it is complained that the court refused to permit appellant to show that it was the custom of patrons of his place of business to have appellant order intoxicating liquors for them. The court permitted each witness called to testify whether or not he had requested appellant to order liquors for such witness, and it was not error to exclude evidence of the "general custom." If appellant ordered the the liquors he received for others, he knew that fact, and could have had such person summoned to testify in the case.

[12] What the defendant may have told another person would be but a self-serving declaration. Inasmuch as the defendant did not testify in this case, he could not make evidence for himself by proving by others that on a given occasion he had told them certain things.

[13] Beginning with paragraph 21 up to and inclusive of paragraph 32, complaints of the various paragraphs of the court's charge are criticised in the following language: "Because the court erred in charging the jury as follows, to wit:" Then follows a paragraph of the charge. No error is pointed out, nor attempted to be pointed out, merely the paragraph of the charge being set out in hæc verba. What is the object and purpose of requiring a motion for new trial to be filed in the court trying the case? Is it not to call the attention of the trial judge to the error, if error there be, that he may correct his mistake, and thus avoid the necessity of an appeal? Appellant in his brief cites us many civil cases in which the Courts of Civil Appeals and our Supreme Court have held that in civil cases this is a sufficient assignment, and that in the assignments of error filed later, or in the propositions stated under the assignments in the brief, the error may then be specifically pointed out for the first time, and asks why a more strict rule should be enforced and applied in cases where men's lives and liberty are at stake than in cases where mere property rights are affected. Upon the writer's accession to the bench, he entertained the views now so forcibly presented by appellant's counsel, and gave voice to such an opinion in the case of Ryan v. State, 142 S. W. 878, and we feel even now that there is no just ground to make such distinction in the two character of cases, but if anything a more liberal rule should be applied in criminal than in civil cases, for life and liberty are far more dear to an individual than his property rights. Yet the Court of Criminal Appeals is not the lawmaking power in this state, and it is bound by such rules of procedure as the lawmaking body may prescribe; and, as the Legislature has deemed it proper to provide different rules governing appeals, we are not to pass upon the wisdom of such legislation, but merely to enforce and abide the law as they have written it. If the law is wrong, this court ought not to be requested nor expected to ignore or change the law, but application should be made to the lawmaking body. In its wisdom the Legislature has seen fit to prescribe in civil cases on appeal that the charge shall be deemed to have been excepted to without any exception having been taken.

Article 1318 of Sayles' Revised Civil Statutes 1897 provides: "The charge of the court shall constitute a part of the record, and shall be regarded as excepted to and subject to revision for errors therein, without the necessity of taking any bill of exception thereto." Thus it is seen that the Legislature has provided that in civil cases the charge of the court is subject to review by the appellate court although not excepted to, and this permission has been construed by the courts to be a command to review it under such circumstances, even though unexcepted to if the error be such as it might and probably did work an injury. Again article 1363 of the Revised Civil Statutes provides: "The ruling of the court in giving, refusing or qualifying, if requested, instructions, shall be regarded as excepted to in all instances." However, the reverse of this is the rule in criminal cases, and made so by legislative enactments. As to why they prescribed a different rule is not for us to theorize over, but merely to obey, if they have done so. And by reading the Code of Criminal Procedure it will be seen that they have provided that the charge of the court shall not be regarded as excepted to, but it requires specific complaint to be made, and, if this is not done, we are without authority to review the charge of the court. Article 743 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that no criminal case shall be reversed by this court on account of error in the charge of the court unless the charge was excepted to at the time of the trial or in the motion for new trial, and the error pointed out.

As hereinbefore stated, as to why the Legislature made this distinction in civil and criminal cases is a question not for us to determine; that they have made it is manifest; and that they had authority so to do cannot be denied, and this court feels and has always felt bound thereby. The difference in the rules thus prescribed is best illustrated by stating that any defect in a charge in a civil case may be reached by a general demurrer or exception, and the specific objections to the charge may be called attention to by propositions under the general exception, while in a criminal case it takes a special exception to reach the error in the charge—the exception must specifically point out the error, whether saved by bill of exception, or by a ground in the motion for new trial. If this difference in procedure is deemed unwise, application should be made to the Legislature to change it. And this construction is not of recent origin, as some seem to think. Emphatic attention was called to it by Judge Davidson in the case of Quintana v. State, 29 Tex. App. 402, 16 S. W. 258, 25 Am. St. Rep. 730 (in which the decisions are collated up to that time), and the rule there prescribed has been followed in an unbroken line of decisions now for more than 20 years. In that case he said: "The primary object or purpose of a bill of exception reserved to a charge of the court is to call the attention of the trial judge to the particular matter complained of, so that he may be afforded an opportunity to correct any error he may have fallen into, to the end that the rights of the defendant may not be prejudiced. A general exception does not accomplish this. Another reason why the bill of exception should point out specifically the errors complained of is to enable this court to ascertain what error was committed without having to examine other portions of the record. This is not done by a general exception. The bill must be so certain and full in its statements that the errors complained of are made to appear by the allegations of the bill itself." And we want to reiterate that while the complaint to the charge may be preserved by a bill of exception or by a ground in the motion for new trial, but when it is preserved in either way, the error, as stated in that opinion, must be specifically pointed out. Sims v. State, 30 Tex. App. 606, 18 S. W. 410; Benavides v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 175, 20 S. W. 369, 37 Am. St. Rep. 799; Mayes v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 42, 24 S. W. 421; Hearne v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. R. 436, 66 S. W. 773; Hudson v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 258, 70 S. W. 764.

We have cited no case decided since the writer of this opinion has been on the bench, but, to disabuse the minds of some that this is but a recent rule of decision, we have cited only opinions of our predecessors, and many more could be collated. Individually the writer thinks the rule in both civil and criminal cases should be the same in this respect, and he also thinks the same rules of procedure should govern on appeal whether the case is a felony or misdemeanor, but the Legislature has otherwise provided, and we cannot undertake to legislate by judicial construction. In the present day and time when much is being said about simplifying court procedure, it seems to him that some one would make an effort to have the Legislature provide one rule of procedure on appeal applicable alike to all courts and to all cases, whether civil or criminal, felony or misdemeanor. We have said this much, as the Legislature will shortly convene, that steps may be taken, if it is desired, to have the Legislature take action on these matters. But until the Legislature is prevailed on to act, the law as written by them will be applied to all cases on appeal. There is no sound reason that we can see why a man, when convicted for a felony, may, after adjournment of court, file an appeal bond and be prohibited from so doing when convicted of a misdemeanor; no reason why in a felony case he should be granted 90 days to prepare and file a statement of facts and bills of exception, and only 20 days in case of a misdemeanor; no reason why in a felony case he may first complain of the charge of the court in his motion for new trial, and not be permitted also to do so in a case of misdemeanor; no reason why he should be required to ask a special charge to cure any omission in the charge in a misdemeanor case, and not be required to do so in case of a felony; no reason why he can reach any error in the charge of the court in a civil case by a general exception, or in fact by no exception, and yet in criminal cases, of the grade of felony, be required to file a special exception and point out the error, and be absolutely denied this right in a case of the grade of misdemeanor. But such is the law, and, so long as it is the law, it will be respected and followed, and, as the law has thus been written, we cannot consider such complaints of the charge of the court, nor the failure to give the special charges requested, unless fundamental error be presented, and this law will be applied to all alike when called to our attention in future.

There are a great number of grounds stated in the motion for new trial, and we have carefully reviewed each of them and each bill of exception filed in the record, and none of them present reversible error. The evidence in the case shows that appellant received a very large amount of whisky, shows a number of sales, and evidence of each sale was admissible as tending to show that appellant was engaged in the business and occupation. Robinson v. State, 147 S. W. 245. The testimony as a whole fully supports the verdict.

The judgment is affirmed.

DAVIDSON, P. J. I think the indictment should charge distinctly and affirmatively that the alleged sales occurred while the accused was pursuing the business of selling intoxicants. The statute requires that at least two sales be made while the accused party is engaged in the prohibited business of selling intoxicants. The two sales, or more sales, would not be sufficient unless they occur while the party was engaged in such business.

In regard to the procedure relating to exceptions to charging the jury, I have heretofore written to some extent. I will, when time affords, write at some length my views of such practice and what is sufficient under the present statutory provisions.

WARD v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 13, 1912. Rehearing Denied Dec. 18, 1912.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 598*)—CONVEYANCE—ABSENCE OF WITNESSES—DILIGENCE.

Accused applied immediately after his arrest for a subpoena for a witness residing in another county to appear on the day set for trial five days later. The sheriff returned the subpoena unserved on the ground that the witness could not be found. No other process was attempted to be procured, though accused and the witness had been together after the indictment in the county in which the indictment was found and the case was set for trial. Held, that the court in its discretion properly denied a continuance because of want of proper diligence.

2. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 54*)—"AGGRAVATED ASSAULT"—ACTS CONSTITUTING.

Pen. Code 1911, arts. 1008, 1009, 1011, 1022, define an assault and battery and declare that, when an injury is caused by violence to the person, the intent to injure is presumed; that an assault and battery may be committed by the use of anything capable of inflicting the slightest injury; and that an assault becomes aggravated when committed in the house of a private family. Accused, while a guest at the home of prosecutrix, went into her bed at night and was discovered by her brother. He claimed that he had received her permission to come to her bed, and that he roused her during the night by touching her with a stick, and that she then awoke and opened the door for him. She denied that she had given her consent. Held, that he was properly found guilty of aggravated assault.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1088*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—ARGUMENT OF STATE'S ATTORNEY—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

The bill of exceptions complaining of the argument of the state's attorney must show the circumstances under which the argument was made, and that accused requested a charge directing the jury to disregard the argument and the refusal of the court to give any charge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2746-2751, 2757, 2766, 2782, 2802, 2899; Dec. Dig. § 1088.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 721½*)—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—REFERENCE TO ABSENCE OF WITNESSES FOR ACCUSED.

The state's attorney may in his argument to the jury comment on the absence of a witness for accused.

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1059*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—INSTRUCTIONS—OBJECTIONS.

Where a special charge is refused and accused merely excepts thereto, taking a bill of exceptions and quoting the charge without giving any reason why it should have been given, and in the motion for new trial merely complains of the refusal to give the charge, giving the number thereof and nothing more, the court will not consider the question.

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1059*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—INSTRUCTIONS—OBJECTIONS.

In a misdemeanor case the only way the charge of the court can be attacked on appeal is by specially excepting to any omission therein at the time of the giving of the charge, and requesting in writing a charge covering the point, and specially excepting to the refusal to give the requested charge, assigning the reasons why the court's charge shows an omission and why the special requested charge should have been given.

7. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 189*)—OFFENSES INCLUDED—LESSER OFFENSE.

Under Code Cr. Proc. 1911, art. 771, providing that, on a prosecution for an offense consisting of different degrees, accused may be found guilty of any degree inferior to that charged in the indictment, and article 772, subd. 2, providing that an assault with intent to commit any felony includes all assaults, and article 837 providing that a verdict is not contrary to the law and evidence where accused is found guilty of an offense of an inferior grade to, but of the same nature as, the offense charged, one indicted for an assault with intent to rape, and for an attempt to have carnal knowledge of a female without her consent, and with burglary at nighttime, with intent to have carnal knowledge of the female without her consent, may be convicted of aggravated assault.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 582-596; Dec. Dig. § 189.*]

Appeal from District Court, Frio County; J. F. Mullally, Judge.

Joe Ward was convicted of aggravated assault, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Jno. T. Bivens, of Pearsall, De Montel & Fly, of Hondo, and Hicks & Hicks and B. W. Teagarden, all of San Antonio, for appellant. C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

PRENDERGAST, J. On September 28, 1911, the grand jury of Frio county indicted the appellant in three counts: First for an assault with intent to rape Annie Lee Burgin; the second for an attempt to have carnal intercourse with her without her consent, said attempt not constituting an assault with intent to commit rape; and third with burglary at night of the house of T. I. Burgin, actually occupied as a private residence by him and his family, without his consent, and with intent by force, etc., to have carnal knowledge of said Annie Lee Burgin without her consent, she not being his wife. On the trial, all of these counts were submitted to the jury, and so was an aggravated assault. The jury convicted appellant of aggravated assault and fixed his penalty at a fine of $100 and 12 months in jail.

It is unnecessary to give any extended statement of the evidence. It, however, shows that the appellant, a young man 18 or 19 years old, went with his cousin to the residence of T. I. Burgin at night as the guest of Burgin with the avowed purpose and intent on the part of appellant to have sexual intercourse that night with Annie Lee Burgin, the young daughter of T. I. Burgin. He claims and testified that, along in the night shortly before midnight and before he and his cousin and some two brothers of the girl and the girl herself went to bed, he had a private interview with the girl and got her consent to have sexual intercourse with him that night, and that about 2 o'clock that night, after having made two attempts previously to reach her, he did so for the purpose of having intercourse with her with her consent. The testimony for the state, by the girl and her two brothers, excludes the idea that appellant had the opportunity or procured her consent. Her mother was away from home. The girl was the only female of the family present that night. The way the house, the beds, and the rooms were situated, it made it proper, if not necessary, that she should sleep in the rear room of the house, the other members of the family in other rooms, and one, if not two, of her brothers, with the appellant and his cousin, on beds made down for them respectively on the front gallery of said Burgin's residence. That appellant went into the room where the girl slept for the purpose of having intercourse with her is shown without question, testified to by appellant, and in no way disputed. Her older brother, whose bed was on the gallery, having had his suspicions aroused by the acts and whispered conversation of the appellant and his cousin, listened and watched appellant's movements, and when appellant, for the second or third time, falsely pretending to get up and go to the rear of the house towards where the girl slept for the purpose of attending to a call of nature, heard him in the room and on the bed, hearing this by the creaks of the bed, hurriedly arose from his bed on the front gallery, went back through the house, opened the door of his sister's room, struck a match, and discovered the appellant in bed with his sister. This brother on this point, among other things, testified that when he pushed the door of his sister's room open and struck a match he discovered appellant on the bed with his sister, his sister being on the front side of the bed and appellant on the back of it; that appellant, when this occurred, came over his sister and she jumped up and he (the witness) holloed for his father; that appellant was undressed, only having on his shirt and drawers; that, when he opened the door and saw appellant, his sister was on the side of the bed between him and the appellant, the appellant being on the far side of the bed next to the window; that appellant was then leaning with his right elbow down, facing the witness, something like he was trying to brace himself to raise up, or to brace his head about half up; that his sister's and appellant's heads were at the same end of the bed; that when he struck the match appellant just came rolling over his sister; that his sister jumped up, but appellant got up before she did and jumped out and ran out at the door. That when he looked in he could not tell whether appellant was touching his sister in any way or not; he was lying close to her, right by the side of her; he could not tell whether he had his hands on her or not; that his right hand was like this (illustrating); that he could not tell how his left hand was; that he did not know where his other hand was.

On this point Annie Lee Burgin testified that when she lay down on the bed that night, it being quite late, she pulled off her shoes and lay down on the bed with her clothes on and went to sleep; that when her brother holloed she felt appellant rolling over her, and that was all she knew; that she felt appellant rolling over her. Again she testified that, when she was awakened by her brother holloing and striking the match, appellant was crawling over her and that was the first thing she knew. That appellant went over her; that he was lying on the bed between her and the window, and that he just crawled over her; that she did not know whether with his hands and feet or not; that she was frightened and could not say.

Appellant himself testified, among other things, that he and his cousin after they supposed Annie Lee Burgin's brothers were asleep got up and went around the house and located where the girl was sleeping, and that, her brother having detected them around there, he and his cousin came back and went to bed again on the gallery; that still later, supposing her brother was asleep, he alone got up and went around to the window where the girl was asleep; that he whispered to her and could not wake her up; that he could not reach her and had to get a little stick and touch her, call her attention, to wake her up; and that when she woke up she rolled over on the side of the bed close to the window and he had some conversation with her, and that she later got up and opened the door of the room for him, and that he went in that way. She disputed all of that testimony by appellant. Again appellant testified that, after he and his cousin had gone around and peeped in the window and saw where the girl was sleeping, they came back to bed, and that he alone got up the third time about 1 or 2 o'clock and went to the window and whispered, supposing she was asleep—she made out she was asleep, if she heard she never answered—and then he went and got a stick and touched her and she awoke; that he touched her with a stick; that he talked to her at the window and she rolled over to the window close to him where they whispered together and talked. Then he claims she got up from the bed, opened the door, and he went into the room and got on the bed from that way and not through the window.

[1] Appellant's first complaint is that the court committed reversible error in overruling his application for continuance on account of the absence of his said cousin, Monroe Ward, who was with him on the night of this claimed assault, and that he expected to prove by him that they were together at the residence of the prosecutrix on the night of the alleged assault, and that Monroe interviewed the prosecutrix in his behalf and obtained her consent that he (appellant) should on that night have intercourse with her on the premises. On the trial appellant testified he himself interviewed her and got her consent. That she only wanted to see his cousin before she went to bed.

The record shows that the appellant was indicted on September 28, 1911, the indictment returned into court about 4 o'clock that evening, and that he was arrested about 5 of the same evening, and that he immediately made an application to the clerk of the court for a subpoena for said Monroe, who resides in Medina county, to appear on October 3d following, being the day on which the case was set for trial. It is shown that this subpoena was promptly issued and sent (mailed) to the sheriff of Medina county, received by him the next day, and returned and filed before the case was called for trial, showing that the witness Monroe Ward was not to be found in Medina county. The state contested by affidavits and by the district attorney the diligence for this witness, and showed that the appellant and his said cousin, Monroe Ward, were together in the city of Pearsall in Frio county, where the prosecution was had and indictment found, and that they were so together in Pearsall after indictment found and the case had been set for trial, and that they had so been together both in the forenoon and afternoon of said date in Pearsall. Appellant in no way disputed the contest of the district attorney or in any way disputed the affidavits of the parties showing the facts above. Neither did the appellant, in his motion for new trial, in any way contest the facts set up by the district attorney and shown by affidavits in opposition to his motion for continuance, nor did he procure the affidavit of said absent witness to what he would testify, nor why he was not present on the trial. Appellant is not entitled in law to a first or any other continuance. It is all in the discretion of the court. In our opinion, there was no error by the court in overruling this motion for continuance nor in not granting a new trial because thereof. We think the court was clearly justified in holding that no diligence was used to procure this witness and to believe that he was not present by the consent, if not the procurement, of appellant himself for the very purpose of obtaining a continuance on account of his absence. Besides, the record clearly shows that the cause was called for trial and the trial begun on October 3, 1911; that it continued until some time during October 6th. The witness is shown to have lived only 17 miles from Pearsall, the county seat of Frio county, where the trial occurred. The return of the sheriff of Medina county on the process issued to that county is shown to have been made on the 2d day of October, 1911, returned and filed in the trial court October 3, 1911. No other process whatever was issued, nor was the attendance of the witness attempted to be procured after the overruling of appellant's motion for a continuance. Doubtless, if process had then been issued for the witness to Frio county, where he unquestionably was when the subpoena was issued, he could and would have been obtained in the first instance if he had not been run off and kept away by the appellant for the purpose of procuring a continuance. Or if other process had been issued on the return of the first, he would have been secured before the trial concluded. Giles v. State, 148 S. W. 317, and authorities therein cited.

[2] Appellant's next contention is that the verdict of the jury was contrary to the law and the evidence, and that the evidence does not show that the appellant committed any assault and battery on the prosecutrix, and, if so, no intent to injure her. We have given the substance of some of the testimony on this subject above in the statement of the case. That, together with the other evidence in the case, in our opinion would have justified the jury to believe and find that the appellant did commit an assault and battery upon the prosecutrix in the house and residence of her father. No charge was asked, and none given on circumstantial evidence, and no complaint whatever in any way made because such charge was not given. We think the whole trend of the testimony, together with and in addition to that stated above, would justify the jury in finding, as stated above, that an assault and battery with intent to injure was committed by appellant in the prosecutrix's father's house and in response to the correct and specific charge of the court on the subject.

Our statute (P. C. art. 1008) expressly enacts that "the use of any unlawful violence upon the person of another with intent to injure him, whatever be the means or degree of the violence used, is an assault and battery." The next article (1009) is: "When an injury is caused by violence to the person, the intent to injure is presumed. * * * The injury intended may be either bodily pain, constraint, a sense of shame, or other disagreeable emotion of the mind." Judge White in his note (section 969, P. C.) says: "In assault and battery, the necessary act, viz., the 'use of violence upon the person of another,' is easily understood. But the necessary 'intent to injure him' is not so easily explained by an affirmative description. Still, the necessary act being proved, the necessary intent to injure is known to exist as a legal necessity, whether we can discover, understand, or explain it or not; so that the two concurring will constitute the legal injury of assault and battery, unless it be shown that the act was accidental or the intention was innocent. It may therefore be said that practically, in legal contemplation, the proof of the necessary act either is or carries with it the proof of the necessary intention to injure, so as to constitute the legal injury, unless it is rebutted by evidence showing that the legal presumption should not be indulged, which may not be by showing an absence of intention to injure, but by showing that the intention was innocent with which the act was done. McKay v. State, 44 Tex. 43." The least touching of another's person willfully is a battery. Norton v. State, 14 Tex. 387; Johnson v. State, 17 Tex. 515. From the state's evidence, there can be no doubt that the jury were authorized to believe that appellant went into this house where this girl was, without her consent, to commit and did commit an assault and battery upon her. They were so authorized to find from appellant's own evidence, together with all the other facts and circumstances. That he did intend to commit an assault and battery upon her is unquestionable; that it was with her consent, or without it and with intent to injure her, was correctly submitted by the court and found against appellant by the jury.

Again, article 1011, P. C., says: "An assault and battery may be committed by the use of any part of the body of the person committing the offense, as of the hand, foot, head, or by the use of any inanimate object, as a stick, knife, or anything else capable of inflicting the slightest injury, or by the use of any animate object, as by throwing one person against another, or driving a horse or other animal against the person." Then article 1022, P. C., prescribes: "An assault or battery becomes aggravated when committed under any of the following circumstances: Subdivision 3. When the person committing the offense goes into the house of a private family and is there guilty of an assault and battery."

An assault and battery ipso facto is an aggravated assault when the house of a private family is entered and it is committed therein. State v. Cass, 41 Tex. 552. As stated above, in our opinion the evidence justified the jury to find the appellant guilty of an aggravated assault and battery. The above disposes also of appellant's complaint that the court erred in submitting to the jury at all the offense of aggravated assault.

[3] Appellant has two bills of exceptions complaining of certain remarks of the state's attorney in argument before the jury, quoting a very brief statement of what the attorney said, which is complained of. The bills and neither of them show the status of the case, the occasion for the argument, nor anything else connected with it, except merely and simply that he complained of certain language in argument by the state's attorney to the jury. We have frequently recently passed upon these questions and announced the law as we find it settled for many years that in a misdemeanor case, and even in felony cases, it is necessary for the bills to show the circumstances under which such remarks are made. This character of bills are just like any other, and they must conform to the rules many years ago laid down by this court and adhered to before we can consider such questions. Section 557, p. 557, and section 1123, p. 732, of White's C. C. P., where some of the cases and rules are cited. Besides, appellant is not shown to have requested any written charge to the jury to disregard such remarks, and the court did not refuse any such charge. Clayton v. State, 149 S. W. 119. It is unnecessary to cite the many other cases to the same effect.

[4] As to the state's comment upon the absence of appellant's witness, his cousin Monroe Ward, there was no reversible error, even if a charge had been asked because of the state's attorney so commenting. Sweeney v. State, 146 S. W. 888, and cases therein cited.

[5] The rule is so well and so long established in this state and uniformly adhered to that where a special charge is requested and the court refuses it, and the appellant merely excepts thereto, taking a bill and quoting such charge, without giving any reason therein showing why it should have been given or was called for, and in the motion for new trial merely complaining that the court erred in refusing to give such special charge, giving the number thereof and nothing more, that this court will not consider such assignment, we deem it unnecessary to again discuss the question. See Byrd v. State, 151 S. W. 1068, this day decided and the cases therein cited; Ryan v. State, 142 S. W. 878; Berg v. State, 142 S. W. 884; Perkins v. State, 144 S. W. 244; Giles v. State, 148 S. W. 320, where many of the cases are collated. This disposes of several complaints of appellant which are only so stated, as shown by the record.

[6] It is also so well established and so long, in this state, by the uniform decisions that in a misdemeanor case the only way the charge of the court can be successfully attacked or assailed is by specially excepting to any omissions therein at the time the charge is given, and then requesting in writing written charges covering the point and specially excepting to the refusal to give such charges as refused, assigning the proper reasons why the court's charge shows an omission and why the special charge requested should be given covering the point, that we deem it unnecessary to take up appellant's complaint in this way to some features of the court's charge. Giles v. State, 148 S. W. 320; Perkins v. State, supra; Mealer v. State, 145 S. W. 354.

[7] The only other question raised and necessary to be decided is appellant's contention that the indictment herein did not authorize the court to submit to the jury in its main charge the question of aggravated assault and battery, on the statute so providing above quoted, because there was no allegation in either of the counts in the indictment charging that an assault and battery was committed in a private residence. Both the statute and the uniform decisions of this court thereunder are expressly against appellant and need no discussion. Article 771, C. C. P., is: "Where a prosecution is for an offense consisting of different degrees, the jury may find the defendant not guilty of the higher degree (naming it), but guilty of any degree inferior to that charged in the indictment or information." And the next article is: "The following offenses include different degrees: Subdivision 2. An assault with intent to commit any felony, which includes all assaults of an inferior degree." And article 837, C. C. P., prescribes on what grounds a new trial may be granted and for no other. Subdivision 9 says: "Where the verdict is contrary to law and evidence. A verdict is not contrary to the law and evidence, within the meaning of this provision, where the defendant is found guilty of an offense of inferior grade to, but of the same nature as, the offense proved." See Lacoume v. State, 143 S. W. 626, and cases therein cited.

The judgment is affirmed.

SNELL v. HAM.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 76*)—FINAL JUDGMENT.

The fact that a judgment was entered nunc pro tunc did not affect its finality.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 426-443; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

2. PARENT AND CHILD (§ 3*)—PARENTS NEEDED TO SUPPORT—CONTRACT FOR NECESSARIES.

A parent is under a legal and moral duty to support minor children; and while he can only be charged for necessities furnished by a stranger for his minor child by his express or implied promise to pay, such promise may be inferred from his legal duty to furnish necessities.

3. PARENT AND CHILD (§ 3*)—ACTIONS AGAINST PARENT—INSTRUCTIONS—PROMISE TO PAY.

In an action against a father for wearing apparel furnished to a minor child, the court charged that, to entitle plaintiff to recover, the jury must find an express or implied authority given by defendant to his children at the time of the purchase to pay plaintiff therefor, and that there must have been an express promise by defendant to plaintiff at the time of the purchase to make defendant responsible for payment for goods received by his children other than necessities of life. Held, that the charge was erroneous, having omitted consideration of whether the articles furnished the children were necessities, and not stating what would constitute an express or implied promise, and it was also calculated to impress the jury that explicit evidence of a promise was essential.

4. PARENT AND CHILD (§ 3*)—SUPPORT OF MINOR CHILDREN—LIABILITY FOR NECESSARIES.

If articles furnished to minor children were reasonably necessary for their support and comfort, the father's promise to pay therefor would be inferred, in absence of a showing that he was ready to himself supply the children therewith.

5. PARENT AND CHILD (§ 3*)—SUPPORT OF MINOR CHILDREN—PARENT'S LIABILITY.

To charge a parent with payment for articles, other than necessities, furnished minor children, the children must have been expressly authorized by the father to purchase them, or he must have permitted their purchase with knowledge thereof, leading the seller to believe that they were purchased with his consent, or must have expressly agreed to pay for them; and this is true, whether the child had been emancipated or not, if the seller did not know thereof.

6. PARENT AND CHILD (§ 3*)—PARENT'S LIABILITY.

If goods furnished a minor child were necessary, so that the law would imply the parent's promise to pay therefor, his knowledge that the seller expected him to pay would be immaterial, on his liability.

7. PARENT AND CHILD (§ 3*)—PARENT'S LIABILITY—NECESSARIES FOR CHILDREN.

It was error not to charge, in an action against a parent for clothing furnished a minor child, that direct and positive evidence was not necessary to prove defendant's promise to pay for such necessities.

8. CONTRACTS (§ 108*)—EMANCIPATION OF CHILD—PUBLIC POLICY.

An agreement by a parent to emancipate his minor children, so as to relieve himself of their support for necessities, is invalid, as contrary to public policy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 498-503, 505, 507, 509-510½; Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

Error from Crosby County Court; Pink L. Parish, Judge.

Action by R. M. Snell against C. D. Ham. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed, and remanded for new trial.

J. W. Burton, of Crosbyton, for plaintiff in error. R. A. Sowder and D. W. Puckett, both of Lubbock, for defendant in error.

HUFF, C. J. R. M. Snell, plaintiff in error, sued C. D. Ham, defendant in error, on an open account for $124.10, in the justice court, and obtained judgment therefor in said court, from which judgment defendant appealed to the county court of Crosby county, and upon trial in that court, January 26, 1911, judgment was rendered that the plaintiff take nothing and defendant recover his costs, from which judgment plaintiff brings the case to this court on petition and bond for writ of error.

The account is for wearing apparel furnished defendant's three boys, John, Orvin, and Julius, who at the opening of the account were 12, 13, and 15 years of age, respectively. The account was opened July 28, 1909, and closed August 13, 1910, and appears to be for wearing apparel, such as hats, caps, shoes, shirts, pants, gloves, rompers, and the like. At the time the first items were purchased and charged, defendant and his boys were present in the store, and the goods selected and delivered while all were present. At that time the defendant told plaintiff to keep the boys' account separate from his, as the boys were going down east to pick cotton, and he wanted to make the boys pay their own account. During the running of the account the defendant was frequently in the store when the boys got the goods, and at no time did he forbid or object to the plaintiff making sale of goods to the boys, or notify plaintiff he would not pay for them. Plaintiff did charge the items which the boys got on the daybook or blotter separately from those purchased by the defendant for himself, but in carrying the items to the ledger the individual purchases for himself personally and for the boys were charged to the account of the defendant. Before starting the account, the boys with their father had purchased goods, and the father sometimes paid for them, and sometimes the boys paid for them. Defendant testified at the trial in January, 1911, the boys had been away from home about two years. He could not control them and let them do whatever trading or anything else they wanted to. He said they would break him up if he tried to keep them, and that he never told Mr. Snell he would pay the boys' account if they did not, but supposed he looked to them for the money. Plaintiff testified that he looked to the defendant for the bill, and did not know that the boys were not at home living with their father. It is shown that Orvin worked for a Mr. Hendricks in the spring of 1910, and received the pay, and that his father never called on Mr. Hendricks for the money. Defendant's wife, the mother of the boys, was adjudged insane and sent to the asylum in the spring of 1909. The above is believed to be a sufficient statement of the case in order to understand the questions discussed.

[1] First. We overrule appellee's motion to dismiss the petition for writ of error, based on the ground that the judgment appealed from is not final, and failed to dispose of the issues. The fact that it was a nunc pro tunc judgment does not affect its finality. The county court had the power and authority to enter such judgment.

[2] Second. The appellant complains of the court's charge in the first, second, and third assignments of error. In some of the particulars pointed out by the assignments, we believe the charge complained of to be erroneous, and to have injuriously affected the rights of the plaintiff in error. "The English authority is strong to the point that a father can never be liable for necessities furnished his children, unless he has expressly or impliedly authorized the child to purchase them, or expressly or impliedly contracted to pay for them. There is no legal obligation on a parent to maintain his child independent of the statutes, and therefore a third person, who may relieve the latter, even from absolute want, cannot sue the parent for reasonable remuneration, unless he expressly or impliedly contracted to pay. The mere moral obligation on a parent to maintain his child affords no legal inference of a promise to pay a debt contracted by him, even for necessities. Some American authorities have gone almost, if not quite, as far as the English rule." Note to Bennett v. Gillette, 74 Am. Dec. 779. In the case of Moore v. Moore, 31 S. W. 533, it was there said, on page 534: "It is the common law that a father who supports his child has no claim for indemnity against the latter's estate. His legal duty to support them is well recognized in this state"—citing Bell v. Schwartz, 56 Tex. 357; Kendrick v. Wheeler, 85 Tex. 252, 20 S. W. 44; Fowlkes v. Baker, 29 Tex. 137, 94 Am. Dec. 270. As we understand the decisions of the court of our state, the English rule as above set out is not followed in this state. Fowlkes v. Baker, supra.

We quote from Porter v. Powell, 79 Iowa, 151, 44 N. W. 295, 7 L. R. A. 176, 18 Am. St. Rep. 353, an opinion by the Iowa Supreme Court, which we think announces the rule more in consonance with the rule as we understand it in this state. That court quotes from 5 Wait, Act. & Def. 50, the following: "The duty of parents to support, protect, and educate their offspring is founded upon the nature of the connection between them. It is not only a moral obligation, but it is one which is recognized and enforced by law. * * * In order to hold persons liable in any case for goods furnished, their actual authority for the purchases must be shown, or circumstances proven from which such authority may be implied. * * * The legal obligation of parents in respect to support extends only to those things which are necessary, and if a parent refuses or neglects to provide such things for his child, and they are supplied by a stranger, the law will imply a promise on the part of the parent to pay for them." That court then says: "Without further citation of authorities, we announce as our conclusion that it is the legal as well as moral duty of the parent to furnish necessary support to their children during minority; that a parent cannot be charged for necessities furnished by a stranger for his minor child, except upon an express or implied promise to pay for the same; and that such promise may be inferred on the ground of the legal duty imposed." Judge Willie, in Fowkes v. Baker, 29 Tex. 137, 94 Am. Dec. 270, says: "Much conflict of authorities exists as to the ground upon which rests the legal liability of a father for necessities furnished his infant child. Some insist that it grows out of the natural duty of the parent to provide sustenance and support for his offspring. Others say it is a question of agency and authority, and that a parent is only bound for such articles as are furnished with his consent, express or implied. The former doctrine is laid down by Chancellor Kent, and with him is the weight of American authority. * * * The question, therefore, as to whether articles purchased by the minor are necessary or not, became important only as it regulates the amount of evidence necessary to establish the father's liability. The authority of the parent to make the purchase must be proved in the one case, and in the other it is inferred, unless rebutted by circumstances showing that the parent had supplied the infant himself, or was ready to supply him." Parsons on Confs., vol. 1, p. 253.

[3] Assignments 1 and 2 object to paragraph 3 of the court's charge, which is as follows: "You are further charged herein that, before plaintiff can recover from the defendant, you must believe from the evidence that there was an express or implied authority given by the defendant to his children to purchase said goods, or that there was an express or implied promise at the time of the purchase of the goods on the part of the defendant to pay said plaintiff for said goods or be responsible for the payment of the same. You are further charged that there must have been an express promise on the part of the defendant to the plaintiff, at the time of the purchase of same, to be responsible for the payment of the same, before the plaintiff can recover from defendant for anything bought or received by his children from plaintiff, other than necessities of life." We believe this charge, as given, was such error as should reverse the case. The charge quoted leaves out of consideration whether the articles were necessities or not. The jury are not told in the charge, as applied to the facts of the case, what would constitute an express or implied authority or promise. Upon what facts could the jury imply a promise or authority? As drawn, it was calculated to impress the jury that explicit evidence as to authority or a promise must be introduced.

[4] We think the jury should have been told the law does not require that the father give express authority or that he make an express promise to pay for necessities furnished his children, but that it was the legal duty of the father to furnish his children with the necessities, and if the articles sold to the children were reasonably necessary to their support and comfort, then that such promise would be inferred, and their verdict should be for the plaintiff, unless rebutted by circumstances showing the father himself supplied the children, or was ready to do so.

[5] If the articles were not necessities, or any portion of them were not, then as to such as were not necessities the plaintiff must show that the children were expressly authorized by the father to purchase such articles, or that he expressly agreed to pay for the same, or if the father knew that they were being purchased by the children, and he stood by and permitted them to purchase the goods, and his words, acts, or conduct induced the plaintiff to believe that they were being purchased by his consent and permission, for which he would be responsible, and if the father did not object to the same being so purchased, and did not notify the plaintiff that he would not be responsible therefor, for such articles so purchased, the father would be liable to the plaintiff; and this would be true, if as a matter of fact he had emancipated the children, and plaintiff did not know of such emancipation. The objections to the second paragraph of the charge of the court, set out in the plaintiff's third assignment, are sustained, for the reasons set out in the assignment and propositions thereunder.

[6] We think the phrase in the charge: "And the defendant knew that the plaintiff expected defendant to be responsible"—is erroneous. If the facts under the law imply a promise, his knowledge of what plaintiff expected was immaterial.

[7] The fourth requested special instruction, refused by the court, of which complaint is made in the fifth assignment, while perhaps not correct in every particular, is sufficient to call the court's attention to the omission in the main charge, and the court was in error in not charging that direct and positive evidence was not required to prove authority or a promise on the part of the defendant to pay for necessities. Under the most restrictive rule as to the father's liability, held in England and in this country, by some courts, for necessities, it has universally been held that it may be shown by circumstances. "The authority of the infant to bind the father by contract for necessities is inferred both in England and this country from very slight evidence." Parsons on Con- tracts, vol. 1, page 301; Hunt v. Thompson, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 179, 36 Am. Dec. 538; McMillen v. Lee, 78 Ill. 443.

[8] It has been suggested by the appellee that the defendant emancipated the three boys. We do not think the evidence sufficient to raise that issue. It, in our opinion, more nearly evidences abandonment. The mother of these boys was in the asylum. The assertion of the father that he saw they would break him up, and he permitted them to go, in the absence of some fact showing extravagance or incorrigibility on the part of the boys, we do not think sufficient to show emancipation, especially when it is shown they were with their father frequently in the purchase of the goods. The eldest was only 15 years of age. We would hesitate, under the strongest evidence, to hold that the father, by agreement with children of their age, could relieve himself from his legal liability to support, care for, and maintain them. If he can agree for them to leave his home and go from under his control, free to go at will, then they would fall under the term of "delinquent and neglected children," as defined by article 2184, Revised Statutes 1911 (Acts of the Legislature 1907, p. 135, § 1): "For the purpose of this chapter the words 'dependent child' or 'neglected child' shall mean any child, under sixteen years of age, who is dependent upon the public for support, or who is destitute, homeless or abandoned, or who has not proper parental care or guardianship." Children the age of these three boys should be taken charge of by the authorities at the public cost, if turned out or permitted to leave home without money and without care from a parent or guardian.

Will the policy of the law permit a father to make an agreement with his infant children which will result in turning them out homeless on their own responsibility? Can he thus evade or shift his responsibility? While it is not necessary to a decision of this case, we believe an agreement by the father to so abandon his minor children is against the policy of the law, and that he cannot evade his legal or moral responsibility to care for his children by any such arrangements.

For the errors above pointed out, this case is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial; and it is so ordered.

Evidence held to support a finding that an owner employing a broker to procure a purchaser of real estate fraudulently withdrew the property from the broker to defeat the right to commission earned by procuring a purchaser and effecting a sale.

4. BROKERS (§ 84*)—COMMISSIONS—FRAUDULENT ACT OF OWNER—EVIDENCE.

A fraudulent intent of an owner employing a broker to procure a purchaser of real estate in withdrawing the property from the broker to defeat the right to a commission may be inferred from the surrounding facts; and a fraudulent connivance on the part of the owner and purchaser to defeat the right to commission may be inferred from the fact that the parties took the matter up directly with each other, when both knew of the efforts of the broker to effect a sale, and from the further fact that the purchaser had previously made an effort to eliminate the broker.

5. BROKERS (§ 56*)—COMMISSIONS—WHEN EARNED—EVIDENCE.

Where a broker employed to procure a purchaser of real estate produced several persons willing to purchase, and a sale was made to some of them, the broker had earned his commission.

6. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 46*)—ACTION BY BROKER FOR COMMISSIONS.

A cause of action by a broker for commissions for procuring a purchaser of real estate actually purchasing accrues when the sale is finally consummated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 240-253; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

7. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 195*)—BURDEN OF PROOF—RECORD.

A defendant has the burden of showing that the cause of action sued on is barred by limitations.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 909*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where a cause was tried on the second amended petition filed after the running of limitations, in lieu of the first amended petition filed before the running of limitations, and the first amended petition is not in the record, the court, on appeal will not assume that the first amended petition was based on the contract described in the original petition; but since the record fails affirmatively to show that the cause of action was barred the contention that the action was barred must be overruled.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 742*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—PROPOSITIONS.

Assignments of error submitted as propositions, without disclosing the point, as required by Courts of Civil Appeals rule 30 (142 S. W. xlii), will not be considered on appeal.

10. TRIAL (§ 252*)—INSTRUCTIONS—IGNORING ISSUES.

A requested instruction ignoring issues raised by the evidence is properly refused.

11. TRIAL (§ 233*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUISITES.

An instruction properly submitting an issue in a case need not include all the other material issues submitted by other instructions, and the former instruction is not misleading.

12. TRIAL (§ 260*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL OF REQUEST.

Where, in an action for commission for procuring a purchaser, the undisputed testimony showed that the commission should be $1 per acre, and the court in its charge limited the recovery to 50 cents per acre, the refusal of a special charge limiting the recovery to one-half of the contract price was not prejudicial.

13. TRIAL (§ 260*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTIONS COVERED BY CHARGE GIVEN.

Where, in an action by a broker for commission for procuring a purchaser, the court charged that the burden of proof was on plaintiff to establish the fact that he was the procuring cause of the sale by a preponderance of the evidence, and the instructions, in their entirety, indicated the questions to be determined in favor of plaintiff before the jury could find for him, the refusal of a charge that the burden of proof was on plaintiff to prove the material allegations of the petition was not reversible error.

14. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 742*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—PROPOSITIONS—REQUISITES.

An assignment of error not supported by a proper proposition, but which merely refers to propositions under another assignment of error, will not be considered.

15. BROKERS (§ 87*)—COMMISSIONS—ACTIONS—RECOVERY.

Where a broker's right to a commission for procuring a purchaser was by virtue of his agreement with a third person, who had been employed by the owner to procure a purchaser, and the third person, in writing, had assigned to the broker all interest in his claim for commission against the owner, the broker could recover the entire commission on procuring a purchaser.

16. JUDGMENT (§ 253*)—AMOUNT OF RECOVERY—CONFORMITY TO PLEADING.

The amount plaintiff may recover is limited by the allegations of the petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 443, 444; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; Charles E. Ashe, Judge.

Action by J. W. Crow against John C. Anderson. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. W. Anderson and Ed. H. Bailey, both of Houston, for appellant. Maco & Minor Stewart and R. W. Houk, all of Houston, for appellee.

HIGGINS, J. This was a suit by appellee for the recovery of commission alleged to be due by appellant, arising out of the sale of 9,525 acres of land contracted for sale to C. S. Fowler & Bro., of San Antonio, Tex., a firm composed of C. S. Fowler and J. G. Fowler, by written contract dated December 5, 1908, by the terms of which appellant contracted to convey the same to Fowler & Bro., or whomever they might designate. The contract price was at the rate of $16 per acre, and in accordance with the contract the land was conveyed by Anderson to G. W. Gale, J. R. Cottingham, B. L. Nailor, and C. S. Fowler & Bro. by deed dated March 25, 1909. A trial before a jury resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of appellee for the sum of $4,762.50, with interest from March 25, 1909, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

The material allegations of the petition, briefly stated, are that the land was placed in the hands of J. M. Lee for sale in August, 1907; that by the terms of the agreement between the parties Lee undertook to effect a sale of the land at $15 per acre, or to find, produce, or interest parties in the purchase of same, who would purchase the same at such price or terms acceptable to Anderson, in consideration of which Anderson was to pay Lee the sum of $1 per acre for each acre sold, payable when sale was consummated; that such agency continued up until the sale to Fowler and others was consummated; that Lee associated with himself the plaintiff, Crow, under a partnership agreement, whereby they were to act together in finding a purchaser or effecting a sale and to divide the commission, which agreement was acquiesced in and approved by Anderson; that Crow called the land to the attention of B. L. Nailor and Fowler & Bro., who became interested therein and entered into negotiations for the purchase of same and concluded to purchase same, which fact was communicated to Anderson, and after much delay and negotiation they, in connection with others, did purchase the same; that after Fowler & Bro. became interested in the land they and the defendant conspired together to defraud Lee and Crow out of the commission, and in furtherance of that purpose Anderson pretended to withdraw the land from sale, but, as a matter of fact, he did not withdraw the same, and at the time Fowler & Bro. were negotiating for the land with Anderson and completing arrangements to buy the same; that Lee and Crow found the purchasers to whom the land was sold, and were the procuring cause by which the sale was made, and would themselves have effected the sale had it not been for the connivance of the defendant and the purchasers. It was further alleged that Lee had assigned his one-half interest in the claim for commission to Crow.

By the first assignment it is urged the court erred in refusing a peremptory instruction for defendant; the contention being that under the pleading and proof the plaintiff, as a matter of law, was not entitled to recover. This necessitates a review of the testimony, which is voluminous, and we will not undertake to state the same in detail, but will confine ourselves to those portions thereof bearing upon the decisive and controverted issues in the case.

In August, 1907, it appears Anderson placed the land for sale in the hands of Lee, who associated Crow with himself upon the terms indicated in the pleadings. They interested Nailor and Fowler & Bro. in the land, and the same was shown to Nailor by Lee and Crow; Nailor, in the inspection, representing himself and Fowler & Bro. The land and price of $15 per acre being satisfactory, the prospective purchasers submitted an offer for the land, the terms of which were by the agents submitted to Anderson, who accepted the same. Thereupon Lee and Crow, in October, 1907, went to San Antonio for the purpose of entering into contract with the purchasers, but after arriving there Fowler & Bro. declined to enter into same, assigning as their reason the condition of the money market, which was then in a serious condition, due to the financial panic of that year. Nailor was willing to consummate the proposal made by them, but Fowler & Bro. declining to do so, the trade at that time, and for the time being, was dropped by all of the parties. Anderson was advised that these prospective purchasers had been procured by Lee and Crow, and was aware that Crow was co-operating with Lee in endeavoring to sell the land. The land remained for sale in the hands of Lee until it was withdrawn by Anderson by telegram, dated September 24, 1908. After October, 1907, Lee and Crow continued their efforts to sell the land, and on August 20, 1908, they entered into negotiations with J. M. Magill of Bay City, Tex., for the sale of the land at $16 per acre, the price at which they were then authorized to sell the same by Anderson. Magill, being satisfied with the land and price, submitted a proposal to purchase, and Lee and Crow went to Carlinville, Ill., for the purpose of submitting same to Anderson, being there on September 14 and 15, 1908. Anderson declined to accept the terms of purchase proposed by Magill, but submitted a counter proposition through Lee and Crow, which Magill declined to accept, and these negotiations appear to have been dropped about September 24, 1908. After October, 1907, no further effort to purchase the land was made by Fowler & Bro. until about the middle of August, 1908. T. K. Gore, an employe of Fowler & Bro., was acquainted with Anderson, and with his land also, and in August, 1908, at request of C. S. Fowler and in behalf of Fowler & Bro., he wrote Anderson, asking for a price upon the land. In this connection it may be said that the testimony is sharply conflicting upon the issue of whether or not the land was first called to the attention of Fowler & Bro. by Gore, or Lee and Crow, and also as to whether or not the efforts of Lee and Crow were the procuring cause by which the Fowler & Bro. contract of sale was effected, or whether it was due to the activity of Gore in inducing his employers to purchase the same. All of these issues being resolved in favor of Lee and Crow by the jury, we are therefore, in this statement of the facts, making no effort to recite the conflicting evidence bearing thereon, but are stating only those portions which support the jury's finding. Immediately following up the writing of this letter to Anderson by Gore in August, 1908, Fowler & Bro., in person and through Gore, entered into active negotiations for the purchase of the land, both C. S. Fowler and Gore making trips to Carlinville in the conduct thereof; the exact dates of these trips and conferences with Anderson not being shown, but probably before the withdrawal by Anderson of the land from the hands of Lee and Crow. On December 3, 1908, J. G. Fowler went to Carlinville, and there, on December 5, 1908, the contract of sale was entered into.

The uncontradicted testimony shows that after October, 1907, Fowler & Bro. did not thereafter negotiate for the purchase of the land through Lee and Crow; but it is the contention of the plaintiff that he continued his efforts to effect the sale, and continued to urge upon them the advisability of its purchase, and that it was his efforts in the matter which finally resulted in the consummation of the contract of sale, and as supporting this contention we think his testimony sufficient, and quote therefrom as follows:

"I left them two or three days after that [referring to the time when Lee and Crow conferred with Fowler & Bro. and Nailor in San Antonio, in October, 1907, at which time further negotiations were broken off on account of the money panic]. I think on the evening of the 26th of October I left them, and I did not see them any more, because I went North myself then. I did not see them any more until November 16th at San Antonio, and at that time, that date, it was a very disagreeable rainy day, and I arrived in town the night before, and I called them over the phone instead of going to the office. I was stopping at the Hot Wells Hotel, and instead of going to see them, as I had proposed doing, I remained at the hotel on account of the bad weather, and called them on the phone, and then I stayed over until Monday, and then I saw Mr. Nailor and Mr. Fowler both and renewed the proposition with them, and discussed the situation. Well, of course, at that time in November things had not improved any at all, and the situation remained the same. I did see them after that. I saw them very many times after that. The next time after that I saw them was on the 22d of November. I was in San Antonio on that day, and I asked him whether or not—I mean by 'him' C. S. Fowler. I am referring to C. S. Fowler all the time. I always transacted my business with him, and asked him whether or not things did not look better to him, and we talked the situation over in a general way; and the next day I chanced to be going down in the country, and he was on the train, and we talked over an hour or so about this matter, and, of course, other current events that were happening, talked over the general situation; and the next time I saw him was in January. I spoke of November 22d; that was November 22, 1907, and the next time was January 21, 1908. No; I made a mistake; the 22d was the day in San Antonio, and was the time I saw him on the train. He was going to Alice, and I was going towards Corpus Christi, and we rode together on the train, and we talked over the matter in a general way. That was January 21st. I had just confused the two previous dates. Well, then, on January 27th I was called to San Antonio to consult with them about an extension of time on a payment that was coming due on the property I previously sold them, owing to the bad times. Of course, I was representing Kountz Bros. of New York in that deal, but they called me there for a consultation about getting an extension of time on this payment, and asked me to go to New York, and, of course, at the same time we talked of the Hayes ranch, and I always assumed it was a logical proposition for them to buy it, and they apparently wanted it, and Mr. Fowler never took any other attitude. Always said he wanted the property; that he would like to have it; but, under the circumstances, he said he thought Mr. Anderson was a little stiff in his earnest money. He wanted them to cover up their properties with earnest money, and that seemed to be a thing that was a consideration with them at the time. On March 16th I was in San Antonio, and had a special conference with both Mr. Fowler and Nailor in regard to this property, and March 17, 1908, we talked it over, and Mr. Nailor then renewed his proposition to go ahead, and Mr. Fowler wasn't ready; and on March 17th I arranged with J. G. Fowler—that is, the young man—to show the property within two or three days to some parties they had that they thought might be interested in buying it, and they did not materialize. I did not know who the parties were; but he asked me if I would not show it the coming week, and he would notify me what day he wanted me there. He suggested he would want me to show it to his customers; that was a suggestion of his. August 24th was the next time I had it up with them in San Antonio and with C. S. Fowler. I discussed the advisability of them taking it; for about that time they had practically closed out the 16,000 acres at El Campo, and they were, as a matter of fact, in the market for another proposition. He told me so. That was in August, 1908, the 4th day of August, 1908; and at that time I urged upon him the importance of closing this deal, and working it out, inasmuch as his organization was operating in that neighborhood, and his advertising was running for that neighborhood; that he should close for this property. But he still held off; did not assign any special reason one way or the other; did not say he would not take it, or that he would; just left the matter standing open. As to whether the panic was over or not, or still in existence then, of course, the worst of it was over with; but everybody was still feeling the effects of it. It had hurt the land business very much. The next time I saw him after August 4th in regard to it, on the 7th day of August I spent the day with Fowler again, and another gentleman, in connection with another matter, and, of course, this deal was referred to. I don't think I ever met Fowler during all this time that I did not bring this matter to his attention, and his attitude was he was always friendly towards the proposition; but he never seemingly would come to the point where he wanted to close it. Of course, he talked of hard times and various reasons. At one time I remember he said they had decided to go back to some locality down beyond Alice. They had a lot of land left over down there. And he said they had concluded to go back down there and sell that out after it got to raining. As to what occurred after that, September 8, 1908, I visited with J. G. Fowler in San Antonio, spent most of the day, and I did discuss this deal with him at that time, and his attitude towards the property was always very friendly. He thought they ought to have the property; that they ought to have taken it before they did; but, of course, he said C. S. seemed to think different. That was the 10th of August, 1908, and the other date was the 8th of August, and I saw them the 10th of August. I was at Fowler's office, and spent the day there at the office; and the effort I made at that time to close the deal, just in a general way, we were discussing another proposition and, being with them all day, of course, about what had happened, and the times and conditions were talked over; and we referred to the Edna ranch as one of the propositions we had had up. He did not make me any definite answer on it then. I was with them the day of August 11th also; spent the entire day with them on that day. On the 11th this deal was referred to incidentally. I never was with them on any occasion during all the time I was meeting them, I never brought this up. I thought it was a proposition they ought to have, and they agreed to take it, and they never called it off. I always expected them to buy it. I could not understand why they did not. It was a mystery to me. The last date I have been talking about was August 11, 1908, and I saw them after that on the 12th of August also, and that night I left San Antonio; and the next time I saw them in regard to it was on December 22d. That was at their office in San Antonio. And I do not recall whether the question was discussed at that time or not. I just called on them briefly on that date. As to when the deal was actually closed by Mr. Anderson to Fowler Bros. by contract, I understand the contract was made November, 1908. That's the information I have. I don't know the date. I never saw the instrument. Yes; I did, during the month of August, 1908, talk with Fowler Bros. in regard to this five times, as I have enumerated. This memorandum I have is just a memorandum of the dates. I am not using it to testify from, just to refresh my memory. This memorandum was not made at the time this transaction occurred. I made it from the daily diary that I keep. I took off the dates. These are some of my annual diaries, and I keep a record every day of what I do, etc., and that is how I happened to be able to give these dates exactly. That is all; otherwise, of course, I couldn't be so exact about it. * * * I never recognized the deal with Fowler Bros. as over; they had never called it off. I never seen any letter from Mr. Fowler saying he had called the deal off. I have seen a letter from Mr. Fowler; but he didn't say that. The letter referred to of November 13th is the letter that Mr. Fowler wrote Mr. Anderson, or Mr. Lee, asking him to eliminate me from the proposition, and take him in and them two handle it and divide the commission; and Mr. Lee sent me that letter to San Antonio. I was there at the time—the day Fowler wrote that letter—and he sent it to Mr. Lee, and Lee forwarded it back to me by return mail, and wrote a letter within a day or so and asked Mr. Fowler to show me what he had written; but Mr. Fowler never showed me the letter. * * *

Referring to the visit of Lee and Crow to Anderson at Carlinsville on 14th and 15th of September, 1908, Crow testified: "I certainly think it would interfere with our carrying out the deal for Mr. Anderson to sell it to our customer without our knowledge and consent. Mr. Anderson certainly knew that Fowler Bros. were our customers. He did know that. We spent a half day—we spent a full day, almost, in conversation with Mr.

Anderson when we were there; and we rehearsed everything that had happened in connection with our efforts to make the sale, and we used it as an argument to get Mr. Anderson to accept the proposition that we were having at that time. We referred to the hard times and the panic that had caused Fowler Bros. not carrying through their deal. That was in September, 1908. We went over all of our transactions with Fowler Bros. and Nailor. We rehearsed the whole thing; spent the afternoon of the first day we were there, and the evening, talking over those matters with Anderson especially. That was the 14th and 15th of September. Mr. Anderson did not tell me Fowler Bros. had been to see him, or had under consideration the purchase of this ranch with him. We discussed with him Fowler and Mossheim and Magill, and those parties where the negotiations had assumed definite form, and where there was a good prospect of making a sale. I did take up the Magill deal and explain it in detail to him. I explained my connection with the Magill deal. * * * When I was in Carlinsville, I explained the Magill deal to Anderson just as it was. I told him, of course, Mr. Lee and I were associated. Mr. Lee explained that to start with in introducing me. I was the man that had been associated with him in these deals in the effort to sell this ranch, and we had come for the purpose of presenting another proposition; and during the afternoon and evening, especially at night, we spent some two hours in Mr. Anderson's bank going over what had happened during the past year, all the incidents of the panic that had interfered with our success in closing the sale, and we talked especially over the Fowler matter, because that had been presented to him in the form of a definite proposition; and we went further into explanations on that as to why it was not closed. I told Mr. Anderson in person how the matter had dragged along; that I was disappointed that it was never closed up."

From the foregoing testimony of Crow, it will be noted he continued his efforts to effect a sale to Fowler & Bro. after the failure of the original effort in October, 1907, and these efforts continued up until the month of August, 1908. During the first half of that month he was in San Antonio for a number of days upon different occasions, and repeatedly discussed with Fowler & Bro. the Anderson land, and endeavored to effect a sale thereof to them; and, in considering whether or not his efforts were the procuring cause by which the sale to Fowler & Bro. was effected, it was most significant that it was during this same month, and shortly after Crow's last visit to San Antonio and conference with Fowler, that Fowler, through his employé, Gore, initiated the negotiations with Anderson direct, which finally terminated in his purchase of the land.

[1] Under the facts and testimony detailed above, we think the jury amply sustained in their finding that the efforts of Crow were the procuring cause of the sale. The fact that the negotiations were not conducted through Lee and himself we deem of no importance, under the circumstances, in determining the question of Anderson's liability. The testimony discloses that upon one occasion prior to this time C. S. Fowler had suggested to Lee the elimination of Crow from any participation in the right to the commission. This was denied by Fowler in his deposition; but the untruthfulness of his denial was conclusively shown by the production of his letter to Lee, making the proposal. The testimony of the two Fowlers upon other important issues was likewise shown to be untrue by their letters.

[2-4] As above stated, it is true the sale was not negotiated by Crow and Lee, and the land had been withdrawn from Lee's hands prior to December 5, 1908, when the formal contract of sale was entered into, but these facts do not impair their right to the commission; they having found and produced the purchasers and labored with them to effect a sale, all of which facts were known to Anderson. Their right to the commission could not be defeated by the seller and purchaser entering into negotiations with each other direct, or by the act of Anderson in withdrawing the land from the hands of the agents prior to the making of the contract, if such withdrawal was for the fraudulent purpose of defeating the right of the agents to the commission. Graves v. Bains, 78 Tex. 94, 14 S. W. 256; McDonald v. Cabiness, 98 S. W. 945; Goodwin v. Gunter, 142 S. W. 667. And under all of the circumstances connected with this matter it cannot be said that the finding of the jury that the withdrawal was for such a fraudulent purpose has no support in the evidence. A fraudulent intent of this kind necessarily cannot ordinarily be proven by direct testimony, and it may be inferred and found to exist from all of the surrounding facts and circumstances. A fraudulent connivance upon the part of Anderson and Fowler & Bro. to defeat the right of the agents to their commission may in like manner be inferred, and especially from the fact that the parties took the matter up direct with each other, when both knew of the efforts the agents had been making to effect the sale, and from the further fact that Fowler had theretofore made an effort to eliminate Crow.

[5] We see no merit in the contention that there is a variance between the verbal contract and the correspondence between the parties, and overrule same. We also overrule the contention that there was no evidence showing a contract to pay a commission; neither is there any merit in the contention that a recovery of the commission could not be had, because the testimony shows that the persons to whom Lee and Crow had offered the land were Fowler & Bro. and Nallor; whereas the sale was made to Fowler & Bro. only. All of these parties were found and produced by Lee and Crow, and the fact that the negotiations were with the two parties jointly, whereas the contract of sale was made by Anderson to Fowler & Bro. alone, would not affect their right to a commission.

[6-8] There is no merit in the contention that the cause of action was barred by the two years' statute of limitation. The commission was earned and the cause of action accrued when the sale was finally consummated by execution and delivery of the deed on March 25, 1909. The cause was tried upon a second amended petition, filed April 17, 1911, which upon its face shows that it was in lieu of a first amended petition, filed February 24, 1911. The original petition declared upon a contract alleged to have been made with Crow; whereas the second amended petition alleges, and the proof discloses, a contract with Lee. The burden is upon the appellant to show that the cause of action was barred by limitation; and, the first amended petition not appearing in the record, we are unable to determine whether it declared upon the contract described in the original petition, or upon the contract with Lee. If it declared upon the Lee contract, it was filed within two years after the cause of action accrued, and was therefore not barred by limitation. We will not assume that the first amended petition was based upon the same contract described in the original petition; and, the record failing affirmatively to disclose that the cause of action was barred by limitation, this contention must likewise be overruled.

[9] The second, third, and fourth assignments complain of the action of the trial court in overruling certain exceptions to plaintiff's petition, and the twelfth assignment of the refusal to give a special charge requested by the defendant. They are all submitted as propositions, but as such are insufficient, because they do not disclose the point. See rule 30 for Courts of Civil Appeals (142 S. W. xiii). They are therefore not considered.

[10] Assignments complaining of the refusal of special charges 5, 6, 12, and 15 are overruled. They all entirely ignored the vital issue of whether or not the efforts of Lee and Crow were the procuring cause of the sale; and No. 12 is further defective in ignoring the issue of whether or not Anderson fraudulently withdrew the land from the hands of Lee prior to making the sale.

[11] The ninth assignment is overruled. Under the facts and testimony heretofore quoted, there is ample evidence to show that the efforts of Lee and Crow were the procuring cause of the sale. As to the further objection to the charge that it excluded other material issues, it is sufficient to say that same properly submitted the important issue of procuring cause; and it was not necessary in that one paragraph to include all of the other material issues in the case. There is no merit in the further contention, under this assignment, that the jury may have been misled by this portion of the charge.

[12] The tenth and eleventh assignments complain of the refusal of the court to give special charges limiting the right of the plaintiff, Crow, to recover only one-half of the contract price of $1 per acre agreed upon by Lee and Anderson as a commission. The undisputed testimony shows that the commission was to be $1 per acre, and the court in his general charge limited plaintiff's recovery to 50 cents per acre; and we therefore cannot see how appellant could possibly be injured by the refusal of these charges.

[13] The court did not err in refusing a special charge, requested by the defendant, to the effect that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to prove all of the material allegations in his petition by a preponderance of the testimony. The determining and controlling issue of liability in this case was whether or not the efforts of Lee and Crow were the procuring cause of the sale, and the court, in his general charge, instructed the jury that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to establish this fact by preponderance of the evidence, and the charge of the court, in its entirety, sufficiently indicated the questions of fact to be determined by the jury in favor of plaintiff before they could find in his favor; and it was therefore not reversible error to refuse the special charge of which appellant is here complaining. *Blum v. [14] The fourteenth assignment is not considered, because unsupported by proper propositions. We are here referred to the first, second, and third propositions under the ninth assignment, and for the reasons stated in San Antonio Foundry Co. v. Drish, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 214, 85 S. W. 440, this is not regarded as a proper method of briefing. Under the fifteenth assignment we are likewise referred to the first, second, and third propositions under the ninth assignment, and for the reasons stated we do not consider these propositions. We do not regard the charge as subject to the criticisms made in the fourth, fifth, and sixth propositions under this assignment, and overrule the same.

Under the sixteenth assignment we are again referred to the first, second, and third propositions under the ninth assignment, and for the reasons indicated we decline to refer to these propositions. As to the fourth and fifth propositions under this assignment, we do not regard the charge subject to the criticism there made; but if so, it is not such an error as would require reversal of the cause at the hands of this court, under rule 62a adopted by the Supreme Court for the government of Courts of Civil Appeals (149 S. W. x), effective November 15, 1912.

The seventeenth assignment is overruled; the criticism of the court's charge here made being regarded as hypercritical.

Assignments 18 to 27, both inclusive, are disposed of by what has been heretofore said, and are overruled.

[15, 16] By cross-assignments of error appellee complains of the action of the trial court in limiting his recovery to a commission of 50 cents per acre. As heretofore stated, the testimony discloses an agency contract between Lee and Anderson, by which Anderson was to pay him a commission of $1 per acre for effecting the sale. There is no privity of contract whatever between Crow and Anderson; Crow's right to a commission being by virtue of his agreement with Lee. Lee, by instrument in writing, transferred and assigned to Crow all of his right, title, and interest in his claim for commission against Anderson, and was amply sufficient to transfer to Crow and support a recovery by him of the entire commission. However, Crow, in his petition, alleged the transfer by Lee of a half interest in his claim for a commission, and is therefore limited in his recovery by this pleading to one-half of the commission.

The judgment is in all things affirmed.

PYE et al. v. WYATT.

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 135*)—JUDGMENTS—INJUNCTION.

To warrant injunction against enforcement of a judgment of a justice of the peace, it must be wholly void for want of jurisdiction and not merely erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 426-447; Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 8*)—CONCLUSIONS.

In a suit to enjoin collection of a judgment recovered in the justice court, averments that it was void, and that the justice of the peace had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit or the person of plaintiff, are purely legal conclusions, and are not such averments of facts to warrant the granting of an injunction on the ground of invalidity for want of jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 12-28½; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 135*)—JUDGMENT—RESTRAINING ENFORCEMENT—PRIVILEGE AS TO VENUE.

That a judgment in the justice's court was recovered against plaintiff in a district other than that in which he was properly entitled to be sued will warrant its being enjoined, for the privilege to be sued in a given district is a matter a party is required to plead and prove and the determination of which will not affect the validity of the judgment.

4. COURTS (§ 120*)—AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

Where the amount in controversy in an action in the justice court was less than $20, the judgment cannot be corrected by injunction in the district court.

5. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 106*)—PRACTICE—NONSUIT.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1301, providing that when the case is tried by the judge a party may take a nonsuit at any time before the decision is announced, and article 1877, providing that the same mode of procedure shall apply to justice's courts, a party may take a nonsuit after the justice has announced what his decision will be and before formal judgment is rendered.

6. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 135*)—JUDGMENT—NONSUIT.

In an action to enjoin the judgment recovered in justice court on the ground that defendant had been defeated in a previous action where a judgment of nonsuit had been entered, an allegation that the justice in the first action stated that he would be compelled to render judgment for the defendant is not equivalent to an allegation that judgment had been announced so that no nonsuit could be taken.

7. JUDGMENT (§ 948*)—CONCLUSIVENESS—NECESSITY OF PLEADING.

Res adjudicata must be pleaded and proven, and a judgment recovered after plaintiff had been defeated in a previous action is not void where that defense has not been proven and pleaded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1787-1794; Dec. Dig. § 948.*]

Appeal from, District Court, Jefferson County; W. H. Pope, Judge.

Suit by W. C. Wyatt against B. F. Pye and others. From an order granting a temporary injunction, defendants appeal. Reversed and rendered.

REESE, J. This is an appeal from an order of the district judge granting a temporary injunction. There are no briefs nor assignments of error in the record, which contains only the petition and answer, the order of the judge, and the appeal bond. The petition presents, in substance, the following material facts as grounds for the injunction: S. Beck, who is made defendant in the injunction proceeding, instituted suit in the justice's court (in which precinct or county is not stated) on April 16th (year not stated). The defendant B. F. Pye was the attorney of Beck. It appears that the plaintiff's cause of action in said suit was an assignment of wages by an employe of Wyatt to Beck. This cause came on for trial on June 12th (year not stated). Quoting from the petition: "And after the justice of the peace, J. B. Synnott, had heard the evidence and argument of counsel on the following day, the 13th day of June, he informed the defendant B. F. Pye that he would be compelled to render judgment for the defendant; that as soon as the defendant Pye found what the judgment of the court would be, later in the day, he, without warrant of law, justice, or right, had the said justice of the peace to enter a nonsuit in said case, and then afterwards in order to harass this plaintiff and to obtain an advantage over him, filed the suit in Galveston county, in the city of Galveston, in the justice court of precinct No. 1, which had no jurisdiction either of the subject-matter or of the parties, and no jurisdiction was alleged or proven, and obtained the void judgment out of which this execution had been issued. Plaintiff shows: That this subject-matter was fully litigated and tried in J. B. Synnott's court, and by all the canons of right and justice and law a judgment should have been rendered and in fact was given in favor of plaintiff, but, as aforesaid, it was not entered up, and instead a judgment of nonsuit was entered after the defendant Pye discovered that he could not recover. That the suit in Galveston county was brought without any color of right, and that the court had no jurisdiction over either the subject-matter or the parties, and plaintiff, believing that the said matter had been settled in J. B. Synnott's court, and further knowing that said Galveston justice court had no jurisdiction over him or the subject-matter, was ignorant of the fact that any judgment was rendered against him, and that any execution had been issued, and believed that the vexatious matter had been dropped. That the conduct of defendant B. F. Pye is most reprehensible and outrageous in filing said suit in Galveston county, and, when the smallness of the sum is considered, the judgment being only for $11.20, this plaintiff believes that said suit was done for the purpose of annoying and harassing him, and has injected loss and damages on him by reason of his acts." An execution was issued on this judgment rendered by the justice court of Galveston county and placed in the hands of A. W. Land, constable of precinct No. 1 (county not stated), who, at the instigation of the said Beck and Pye, was about to levy the same upon the property of appellee, and injunction is prayed for to restrain him from doing so, and also to restrain Beck and his attorney, Pye, from recovering. Upon presentation of the petition to the district judge a temporary writ was ordered to issue. The defendants appeal from this order.

[1] The right of appellee to the writ depends upon whether or not the judgment was void, and this depends upon whether or not the justice's court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit and of the defendant Wyatt at the time of the rendition of the judgment. If the judgment was merely erroneous, appellee cannot have it corrected through the means of an injunction in the district court.

[2] It is true that the general statement is made in the petition that the judgment is void, and that the justice of the peace had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit, nor of the person of appellee; but these are purely legal conclusions. The amount in controversy, upon which the jurisdiction of the justice's court depends, is not shown, nor is there any statement of facts tending in the remotest degree to show that the justice's court did not have jurisdiction of the person of appellee, and authority to render the judgment, by proper legal service of citation upon him, or regular appearance by him. Such general allegations of purely legal conclusions as to essential facts in a petition for injunction cannot be considered as statements of facts.

It is stated that the judgment was rendered, and it cannot be impeached in this way. We might conclude by inference from the amount of the judgment—$11—and the fact that it is the same subject-matter that was litigated in Justice Synnott's court, that the matter in controversy was within the jurisdiction of the justice's court, and, in the absence of any allegation in the remotest degree tending to show that appellee had no proper legal notice of the suit, it might be presumed from the mere rendition of the judgment that the court had acquired jurisdiction of his person. It is alleged that appellee is now—that is, at the time of the filing of the suit—a resident of Jefferson county; but there is no allegation that he was not a resident of precinct No. 1, Galveston county, at the time that suit was instituted.

[3] It would not, however, have made any difference if appellant had been at that time a resident of Jefferson county, and properly suable only in the precinct of his residence there. This would have been a matter of personal privilege which he was required to plead and prove in that court, and if he failed to do so, or if he did so and his plea was overruled, this would not have affected the validity of the judgment. It would only have rendered it erroneous and subject to revision on appeal.

[4] If the amount thus in controversy was less than $20, such error could not be corrected by injunction in the district court. H. & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Young, 137 S. W. 380.

[5, 6] If reliance is placed upon the facts alleged with regard to the previous action in Justice Synnott's court, that cannot help appellee. We gather from the allegations of the petition that the nonsuit was taken by the plaintiff Beck before the decision of the justice was announced. R. S. 1301; Hoodless v. Winter, 80 Tex. 638, 16 S. W. 427. The information given by the justice to Beck's attorney, Pye, "that he would be compelled to render judgment for the defendant," as alleged in the petition, cannot be taken as an allegation, or as intended as an allegation, that the decision had been announced before the nonsuit was taken. It is further stated "that, as soon as the defendant Pye found what the judgment would be," he later in the day had the justice enter a nonsuit. It is not alleged that any objection was made thereto. From the allegations of the petition it appears that the defendant Beck was strictly within his rights when he took the nonsuit, and had the cause dismissed. This was not a bar to another action. Foster v. Wells, 4 Tex. 101. The statute cited relates to the practice in the district and county courts, but by article 1677, R. S., is made applicable to justice's courts as well.

[7] But if the facts alleged had shown that the nonsuit was taken too late, and after a judgment had been announced in favor of the plaintiff, appellee Wyatt, and so the matter was res adjudicata, still this would have been a defense that the defendant would have been required to set up, in the action in Galveston county, and cannot be made the ground of an indirect appeal by way of injunction, in the absence of allegation of fraud, or that appellee was prevented, through no fault of his own, from making the defense. It is true that it is alleged that the appellant Beck had no cause of action against appellee, that he had a good defense to the action, and there is a general charge that the action of appellant Pye, as attorney for Beck, in bringing the second suit in Galveston county, was outrageous; but these facts do not tend to show that the judgment was void. Appellant Beck may be a loan-shark, as alleged, a creature against whom there is a well-grounded and universal prejudice; but that does not affect the validity of the judgment. H. & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Young, supra. The petition presented no grounds for the issuance of the writ of injunction, and the district judge erred in not so holding.

The order granting the writ is vacated, and the temporary writ is dissolved. Cariker v. Dill, 140 S. W. 845; Railway Co. v. Lunn, 141 S. W. 538; Beaty v. Goggan, 131 S. W. 631; Hudson v. Smith, 133 S. W. 487.

RALLS et al. v. PARISH et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Amarillo.
Nov. 10, 1912. Rehearing Denied
Dec. 14, 1912.)

1. COUNTIES (§ 35*)—REMOVAL OF COUNTY SEAT — ELECTION CONTEST — BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden was on parties contesting a decision that an election for the removal of the county seat had resulted favorably to removal to show that the old county seat town was within a radius of five miles of the center of the county, and that the voters originally voted for the county seat as located.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. §§ 38-45; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 84*)—PRESUMPTIONS—COUNTY SEAT—LOCATION.

The court cannot presume that, because a part of the plat of an existing town was within five miles of the center of the county, any part of the town itself, as it previously existed, was within that radius; that being a matter of proof.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 934*) — PRESUMPTIONS—SUPPORT OF JUDGMENT.

The evidence should be viewed in the light most favorable to the judgment.

4. EVIDENCE (§ 67*)—PRESUMPTIONS—STATUS OF TOWN.

It cannot be presumed, as a matter of law, that the houses in the built-up part of the town were the same in 1910 as in 1891, when the town was made a county seat.

5. DEEDS (§ 96*)—RECITALS—EVIDENCE.

Every citizen in a town was privy to a deed dedicating a section as the site of a town for use as streets, etc., whether the deed was formally accepted or not, so that recitals in such deed that a town had been built on the section were admissible in evidence in a suit by its citizens to retain the county seat at such place, especially where they themselves put the deed in evidence, without restriction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 256-260; Dec. Dig. § 96.*]

6. DEEDS (§ 96*)—RECITALS—CONSIDERATION.

A recital in a deed as to its consideration is prima facie evidence on the question.

7. COUNTIES (§ 35*)—COUNTY SEAT CONTESTS — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in a suit by citizens of a town to contest an election by which the county seat was removed to another town, held to sustain a finding that in voting the county seat of such town the voters intended to vote with reference to the actual location of the buildings and not the town plat.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1042*)—HARMLESS ERROR.

Any error in striking a part of the petition became harmless, where the trial court heard the evidence on the question raised thereby and filed findings thereon.

9. ELECTIONS (§ 203*)—LOCATION OF VOTING PLACE.

Where the voting place at a certain town was situated on the boundary line of the county, which had long been a disputed strip also claimed by another county, and the right of the voters to vote at that place had not previously been questioned, and no one outside of the precinct voted at the election, or was deprived of his vote because of the location of the ballot box, the counting of the votes cast in such box did not violate the spirit of the Constitution, though the voting place was in fact located out of the county.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1027*)—HARMLESS ERROR—FINDINGS.

Any error in findings that certain votes were not fraudulent would be immaterial, where the result of the election would not be changed if such votes were thrown out.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4033; Dec. Dig. § 1027.*]

On motion for rehearing. Rehearing ordered, and judgment below affirmed.

For former opinion, see 149 S. W. 810.

HUFF, C. J. At the last term of this court this case was reversed and rendered by this court. Appellee, the contestee, filed his motion for rehearing, and thereafter this court certified certain questions to the Supreme Court for its determination. On the 29th day of May, 1912, that court handed down its answers and opinion which had been certified to this court for its observation and guidance and which is reported in 147 S. W. 504. By that opinion it is left to us as an issue of fact to ascertain what constitutes the boundaries of Emma, and in doing so, as we understand the opinion, we must ascertain the intention of the voters at the time of selecting the county seat, as that intention will control. The Supreme Court, in its opinion, says: "The original town plat of Emma as it existed at the time it became the county seat of Crosby county, in 1891, did not constitute the county seat, but rather the collection of inhabited houses and the area pertaining to such houses constituted the town, and therefore the county seat. The town of Emma, as the voters knew it and as they intended it should constitute the county seat, should control." In the light of the opinion of this court rendered in this case and the facts in question certified to the Supreme Court, it would appear that the Supreme Court has eliminated the plat from consideration as the county seat of Crosby county, selected by the voters at the election in 1891. The contestants in this case assail the order of the county judge of Crosby county which declared the town of Crosbyton was selected by the voters at the election September 17, 1910. Article 1393, R. S. 1911, old article 815, provides: "The officers holding the election shall make return thereof to the officer ordering said election within ten days after the same was had, who shall then proceed to open said returns and count the same and declare the result, which shall be entered upon the records of said commissioners' court and shall also state the name and place from which the same is removed and the name and the place to which the same is removed." Until this order so made is set aside or vacated, the town therein named is the county seat. The burden is on the party or the parties assailing it to show that it does not correctly name the town for the county seat. Wallace v. Williams, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 623, 110 S. W. 785.

[1] We hold that the burden was on the contestants in this case to show that Emma was within the radius of five miles of the center of Crosby county, and that it was the intention of the voters of 1891 to vote for such town, and that they did vote for it as located; and, unless contestants discharged that burden, it was not incumbent upon the trial court to disturb the result so announced by the order of the county judge. The contestants introduced a deed from C. A. Benedict, together with a plat of section 2, certificate 16, N. & O. B. R. R. Co. The deed is as follows: "State of Texas. C. A. Benedict of Crosby county, Texas, has laid off section 2, certificate 16, N. & O. B. R. R. Co., original grantee, Crosby county, Texas, into lots and blocks with streets and alleys as shown by the above plat, and whereas a town has been built upon said section so laid off as aforesaid to be known and called by the name of Emma; therefore, know all men by these presents, that I, the said C. A. Benedict, for and in consideration of the fact that a town has been built upon said section of land and for the purpose of securing the inhabitants of said town in the enjoyment of its streets, alleys and public square, do hereby declare that I have and do by these presents consent to the said subdivision of said section by said plat shown into lots, blocks, streets and alleys of dimensions in feet as shown by the dimensions above given. I do hereby donate unto the said citizens of the aforesaid town the free and uninterrupted use of said streets and alleys and to be held and enjoyed by them so long as so used, otherwise to revert to me, the said C. A. Benedict, or my heirs. The southeast corner of the public square to be the starting point in surveying blocks, lots, streets and alleys. [Signed] C. A. Benedict." They also introduced testimony to show that portions of the town plat were within the five-mile radius, but the facts also show that this plat was filed on the day before the election in 1891 to remove the county seat from Estacado to Emma. The deed purports to be in consideration of "the fact that a town had been built upon said section," and to secure "the inhabitants of said town in the enjoyment of its streets, alleys," etc. And further, "I do hereby donate unto the said citizens of the aforesaid town the free and uninterrupted use of said streets, and alleys." This instrument, together with the plat, is to be treated as one instrument. The town is part of the description of the section and aids in the identification of the land.

[2] The town built on the section is no more to be discarded than the plat of the imaginary streets and alleys; but on what part of the section was it situated in 1891? Shall this court presume, because part of the plat was within the five-mile limit, that the town or any part of it was also? We think the proof ought to furnish the trial court and this court facts to show that some portion of the town was then within the required radius. The voters doubtless knew the town as it would be open to observation. Not necessarily so with the plat. It will not answer the requirements to say the filing of the plat constituted constructive notice. This is not a question of notice, but is one of "intention" on the part of the voters at the time. Did they vote for the plat or the town as then known? On this point, as we understand the record, there is no proof on this vital issue in the case; that is, the "intention" of the voters as to the boundary of the "place." The court must resort to inference to bridge the hiatus. It occurs to us the nature of the case required better evidence. It should be stated that contestants, upon the trial of the case in the court below and in this court, urged that the certificate issued by the Land Commissioner in 1891 should control in fixing the center of the county. As we understand the facts in this case, should that certificate control, then contestants made out a prima facie case; but the Supreme Court has settled that question adversely to contestants. The trial court filed his conclusions of facts and of law. In the fourth finding of facts he finds: "The town of Crosbyton to be situated and was on the day of the election within five miles of the geographical center of Crosby county, as shown by the certificate of August 26, 1910. and that the town of Emma is not and was not at the date of the election within said five miles, but is more than five miles from the geographical center of such county, as shown by the certificate of August 26, 1910."

[3] The trial court, after hearing the evidence, rendered his judgment, and we believe the evidence should be viewed in the light most favorable to the judgment. It has been urged by counsel that the court in his finding did not find that Emma, when first selected as the county seat, was without the five-mile radius. He must have found that Emma since 1891 up to the election in 1910 was the county seat, and that it was then being sought to be removed. We must impute to him the finding that Emma, when chosen for the county seat in 1891, was more than five miles from the center, as shown by certificate of August 26, 1910. In the order declaring Emma the county seat in 1891 it is shown by the order that 109 votes were cast to remove to Emma, 19 votes to section 1, certificate 336, and 3 votes to remain at Estacado. The evidence shows in measuring from the center of the county as ascertained by the certificate of the Land Commissioner, August 26, 1910, the five-mile limit is reached 197 varas east of the courthouse, according to the witness Orand. This witness says: "There are some houses west of the point we came out as the five-mile radius in the town of Emma." J. C. Woody testified to houses in the town of Emma and east of the courthouse, but fails to show whether the houses are within or without the five-mile radius. The deed of dedication clearly indicates there was a town on the section before the grantor executed it. If this section was platted longer than one day before the election, the evidence does not show it. There is no testimony to show that the voters intended to vote for the platted section, unless the filing of the plat the day before is such. We think there is evidence which will support the judgment of the trial court. At least, we are not prepared to say there is none.

[4] It has been urged by appellants that from the situation of the houses the town of Emma in 1910 cannot be presumed where thus situated in 1891. This is true. The presumption will not prevail retrospectively, but the situation in 1910 was a circumstance which can be looked to for what it is worth. It does not rise to the dignity of a presumption, but it is nevertheless a fact or circumstance which may be entitled to some consideration. The fact that voters in 1891, when they cast their ballot for a section of land, said section 1, certificate 336, when they voted for a town they named Estacado or Emma, as the case might be, indicates that, if they had been voting for section 2, they probably would have so stated.

[5] It is earnestly contended by counsel for contestants the phrase, "whereas a town has been built upon said section," in the deed from Benedict, cannot and should not be considered as testimony on the question as to whether there was a town known as Emma on the section. It is urged that such recital is not evidence against third persons who are strangers to the deed. This proposition is true and sustained by the authorities cited by contestants. But are contestants strangers to the deed they offered in evidence themselves to sustain their case? Benedict, by his deed, recited, "I do hereby donate unto the said citizens of the aforesaid town, the free and uninterrupted use of said streets and alleys," and he further does so "for and in consideration of the fact that a town has been built upon said section of land and for the purpose of securing the inhabitants of said town in the enjoyment of its streets, alleys and square." That was the consideration or reason for platting the section. That is, because a town was on it, and to secure the inhabitants in the enjoyment of such streets.

[6] Recitals in the deed are prima facie evidence of such consideration. Haldeman

v. Chambers, 19 Tex. 1; Sachse v. Loeb, 69 S. W. 460; Williams v. Talbot, 27 Tex. 159. This was a dedication deed; otherwise it might be held invalid because it was uncertain as to who were the grantees. It was evidently the purpose of Benedict to deed to the public the right to the streets and alleys, and he was moved thereto because he found a town on his section to secure the inhabitants thereof in the use of the streets, etc.; they were dedicated to their enjoyment. City of Corsicana v. Zorn, 97 Tex. 317, 78 S. W. 924. Judge Brown of the Supreme Court said in that case: "The fact of the deed from Mrs. Zorn and her husband to the different purchasers of lots in Zorn's addition was to convey to such purchasers the right that they and all persons should be permitted to use the streets and alleys for the purposes designated upon the said plat for all time, and this conveyance vested in the public and in the city of Corsicana, as the organized representative of the public, the right to take possession of and use said streets and alleys whenever the progress and development of the town should make it necessary so to do. It is objected on the part of Mrs. Zorn that there has been no acceptance by the city of the dedication. There was no necessity for such an acceptance, for the right which vested in the purchasers of the different lots, and through them in the public, was irrevocable." Also, see Sanborn v. City of Amarillo, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 115, 93 S. W. 473. If this deed was to the public, every citizen in Emma and the county, while it was the county seat, held in privity whether accepted formally or not, and enjoyed certain rights in said town by virtue of said deed of which they could not be deprived. This suit is by citizens of Crosby county in behalf of the public to retain the county seat at Emma, and as evidence of the fact they introduced this deed and invoked the stipulation in the deed which is in their interest.

[7] The fact that there is recited in the deed that a town existed on the land before the deed is called a hearsay declaration, which is not evidence, so say contestants. The deed is to a town for the enjoyment of a town and its inhabitants and to make a town. If one part is admissible, why not all of it? These parties, contestants and contestee, stand in the same relation to the deed. If one part is to be treated as an unsworn declaration by a stranger, then it is so as to all of it. Complainants themselves introduced the deed and did not restrict it, or ask the trial court to do so, but now insist in this court that it was not and is not evidence as to the existence of a town on the land before the plat. We have concluded it is, and especially since contestants themselves put it in evidence without any restrictions or limitations. The trial court, according to our view, had testimony that there was a town on that section in 1891, and that it was inhabited. The evidence does not disclose its boundaries at that time, but the testimony does show in 1910 the location of some houses at that time, none of which were proven to be within the five-mile radius, and such fact was a circumstance, though slight, upon which to base a judgment, in the absence of proof to the contrary. The record in this case is silent as to any intention on the part of the voters to vote for a town plat as the county seat in 1891. Such intention could be established only by inference. The trial court, from the evidence before him, drew the inference that the voters at the time intended to vote for the town of Emma as then known at a place more than five miles from the geographical center of the county, and that the county seat was then located at that point. On the evidence before that court we cannot say the trial judge erred in such conclusion, and, not being able to say so, it becomes our duty to affirm him upon that point.

There are a number of assignments to the action of the court in sustaining exceptions to contestants' amended petition; but in the disposition we shall make of the case, in our opinion, they become immaterial, and are therefore overruled. The opinion of the Supreme Court disposes of several of the assignments.

[8] The twelfth assignment complains of the action of the court in striking out the twenty-third paragraph of the first amended petition, in which it was alleged that 35 votes were cast at the voting box of Estacado, 30 for Crosbyton and 5 for Emma, and in which it was alleged that the votes so cast were illegal and should not have been counted, for the reason that each of said voters voted outside of the election precinct in which they resided. The names of the parties so voting were given in the petition. The court, during the trial, heard evidence on the question raised by the pleading so stricken out and filed conclusions of facts thereon. We hold that, even though the court may have been in error in striking out that portion of the petition, it became immaterial or harmless error; he having heard evidence introduced by both sides. Harle v. Texas Southern Co., 39 Tex. Civ. App. 43, 86 S. W. 1048; McClenny v. Floyd, 10 Tex. 159.

[9] The court found as a fact that the west boundary line was not where contestants claimed it, and in the eighth finding of facts states "that the voting place of Estacado is not shown by the evidence to have been west of the west line of Crosby county." There is testimony in the record supporting this finding. It is also shown by the testimony that the people in that precinct have been voting at the schoolhouse where the election was held September 17, 1910. There is no testimony that any voter was deprived of his vote, or that there was any unfairness by any one in holding the election at that place. Ex parte White (Cr. App.) 28 S. W. 542; Am. & Eng. Enc. vol. 10, p. 597; Quinn v. Lattimore, 120 N. C. 426, 26 S. E. 638, 58 Am. St. Rep. 797. In the North Carolina case the court said: "When qualified voters living near the dividing line of two townships, which line was not definitely located, in good faith registered and voted in the township in which they did not actually reside, but it appeared they had listed their property for taxation, sent their children to school for many years previous, had registered and voted in the same township, it was held the votes of such electors having been cast must be counted." In the White Case, above cited, it is stated: "The object of a provision of this character is to insure a fair and honest election by requiring each voter to cast his ballot at the same place where his neighbors voted and those to whom his qualifications were best known and by whom if necessary they could be challenged." From the record, it appears that the west boundary line of Crosby county was in dispute and had been for years. Its true location was difficult of ascertainment; different surveyors running different lines. The voting box at Estacado appears to be situated on the disputed strip, and until this controversy no question as to the right of the voters in that precinct to cast their ballots at that box had been questioned. The record does not show that any one living outside of that precinct cast his ballot at the election held September 17, 1910, or that any one living therein was deprived of his vote on account of the box being so situated. We do not believe the spirit of the Constitution has been violated by counting the votes so cast. It would be a harsh rule that would disfranchise a whole community because of an honest mistake or because surveyors could not agree as to the true line. We therefore overrule all assignments, whether as to pleading, exception, court's finding, or the like, bringing into question the legality of the votes so cast.

Contestants in this case object to some 70 voters because of improper conduct and influence being brought to bear on them to secure their votes in favor of Crosbyton. They set up substantially the following grounds for attacking said votes: "That in precinct No. 1 there were permitted to vote at the election 21 persons named in the pleading who voted in favor of the removal of the county seat to Crosbyton, and whose votes were counted in declaring the result of the election. That each of said 21 votes were illegal for the reason that prior to the election the C. B. Live Stock Company, a foreign corporation doing business in Crosby county, its agents and employes, for the purpose of inducing such voters to vote in favor of the removal of the county seat from Emma to Crosbyton, contracted with each of such voters to give and donate to each of such voters certain town lots in the town of Crosbyton in consideration of their voting in favor of Crosbyton for the county seat. That each of such voters accepted such contracts and donations and were induced thereby to vote for Crosbyton. That after entering into such contracts, said live stock company, its agents and employes, organized a town-site company and conveyed the town site of Crosbyton to such town-site company, and the town-site company agreed with the live stock company to carry out the illegal contract of said live stock company with the 21 voters named in the pleading. That the live stock company further agreed with such voters to remove at its own expense all the houses, barns, and other improvements of the voters from Emma to Crosbyton. That each of such voters was influenced by such promises and contracts to vote, and did vote, in favor of the removal of the county seat from Emma to Crosbyton, and that each of such votes was therefore illegal." And also attack the votes of some 70 voters in all, including No. 1 and seven other voting precincts, on the same allegation substantially as above set out.

In appellants' thirty-second assignment of error it is complained that the court erred in his ninth finding of facts, to the effect that neither the C. B. Live Stock Company nor any of its agents offered any inducement or made any propositions looking to having as their object and purpose the giving to any voter or voters any financial consideration or aid for their votes for the removal of such county seat from Emma to Crosbyton or from Ralls, for the reason that the evidence adduced upon the trial clearly shows that between the time the election was ordered on the 8th day of August, 1910, and the day on which the same was held, on the 17th day of September, 1910, the C. B. Live Stock Company, through its duly authorized agents, did hold out to the voters of Crosby county inducements and representations looking to and having as their object the purpose of giving to such voters financial aid and consideration for their votes. Then the same question is raised by various other assignments, and in the sixty-fourth assignment appellants make the assignment that the court erred in holding and concluding that the vote of each of the following voters was a legal vote, and set out some 70 names, for the reason that the pleadings and evidence conclusively show that said witnesses were unlawfully influenced in their determination to vote for Crosbyton against Emma, by the acceptance of each of said voters of the unlawful proposition and offer of the C. B. Live Stock Company, whereby each of said voters acquired a property interest in the town of Crosbyton, prior to the election and after the same had been ordered.

Under the sixty-fourth assignment, contestants present seven propositions setting out, in part, the testimony of each of the voters whose votes were claimed to have been illegal. The court's ninth finding of fact was as follows: "I find that neither the C. B. Live Stock Company nor any of its agents offered any inducements or made any propositions looking to and having as their object and purpose the giving to any voters or voter any financial consideration or aid for their votes for the removal of such county seat from Emma to Crosbyton, or to Ralls, and that no voters were bribed or intended to be bribed, but that the exchange of lots between the citizens of Crosby county and the manager of the town site of Crosbyton was for business considerations and without regard to the question of the county seat, and that the donation of lots for building purposes was made to the citizens of Crosby county generally, and not for the purpose of influencing voters, and that as a matter of fact no votes were influenced thereby. That there has been shown by the evidence no illegal votes to have been cast at said election in favor of either town. That on the whole evidence of Sam H. Botts it appears and is found here by the court that he was not an illegal voter and was offered and accepted no consideration for his vote; and the same is here found as to the voter Hugh Metcalfe." There is a great deal of testimony in the record with reference to the propositions and contracts by the C. B. Live Stock Company which we deem it unnecessary to set out at any length, as it would render this already too lengthy opinion cumbersome. We believe it is sufficient to state that there is sufficient evidence in the record to sustain the court's findings of fact as to those several parties set out in the assignment, and for that reason overrule said assignment and all others pertaining to the same question raised thereby.

All other assignments made in this case are overruled as having been disposed of in this opinion and that of the Supreme Court.

[10] Should the votes which it is claimed were unduly influenced be thrown out, it would not change the result of the election, as there would still be left a majority in favor of Crosbyton, and, if the court was in error in his finding of fact on this point, it could not and would not change the result of the election in our opinion.

We therefore conclude that a rehearing should be ordered, and the judgment of the court below in all things affirmed, and it is so ordered.

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 835*)—RECORD—CORRECTION AFTER SUBMISSION—REHEARING.

Under Court of Civil Appeals Rule 22 (142 S. W. xii), requiring all parties before submission to see that the transcript of the record is properly prepared, and providing that failure to observe omissions or inaccuracies therein shall not, after submission, be reason for correcting the record or obtaining a rehearing, one may not on rehearing present and have considered a certified copy of a judgment not shown by the transcript of the record on original hearing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3241-3246; Dec. Dig. § 835.*]

On motion for rehearing. Overruled.
For former opinion, see 151 S. W. 630.

TALBOT, J. We held in the original opinion that the action of the court in overruling appellant's special exception No. 1, which was complained of in its fifth assignment of error, could not be reviewed by this court because no judgment or record entry was found in the record showing such ruling. Appellant now comes, and with its motion for a rehearing presents and asks to be considered a certified copy of such a judgment. This cannot be done. Rule 22 (142 S. W. xii) prescribed by the Supreme Court for the government of this court provides: "All parties will be expected before submission, to see that the transcript of the record is properly prepared and the mere failure to observe omissions or inaccuracies therein will not be admitted, after submission, as a reason for correcting the record or obtaining a rehearing."

We can see no good reason for changing our views as heretofore expressed, and the motion for rehearing is overruled.

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 274*)—PUBLIC NUISANCE—INJUNCTION.

A private person, to be entitled to a temporary injunction under Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 4674 (1), providing that any person pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquors, without first procuring a license, creates a public nuisance, and may be enjoined at the suit of any private citizen, must allege that a person named pursued the business of selling intoxicating liquors without a license; and a mere allegation in the petition that liquors are kept for sale on premises described, without defendant obtaining a license, is insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 410; Dec. Dig. § 274.*]

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 261*)—RELIEF—INJUNCTION—NUISANCE.

Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 4643, authorizing the issuance of injunctions where the party applying therefor is entitled to the relief demanded, does not authorize the court to enjoin a public nuisance created by one pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquor without a license, but the party seeking the remedy must show himself entitled to the writ under the general principles of equity, unless he brings himself by pleading and proof clearly within the letter of some statute enlarging the remedy.

3. NUISANCE (§ 60*)—ABATEMENT—STATUTES.
Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 4689, providing that the habitual use of any building for a bawdyhouse shall be enjoined at the suit of the state or any citizen, except where bawdyhouses are regulated by ordinances of incorporated towns and cities acting under special charters, makes bawdyhouses, except those so situated, nuisances, subject to be abated by injunction at the suit of the state or any citizen; and such right may be limited as is done in the proviso.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Nuisance, Cent. Dig. § 137; Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 920*)—REFUSAL OF TEMPORARY INJUNCTION—ABUSE OF DISCRETION—RECORD.

Where, in a suit to enjoin a public nuisance in pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquors without a license, and in maintaining bawdyhouses, defendants, under oath, answered that plaintiffs were not injured, either in person or property, the court, on appeal from a judgment denying a temporary injunction, will presume that the trial judge did not abuse his discretion, in the absence of any statement of facts, bills of exceptions, or findings of fact in the record.

Appeal from District Court, El Paso County; A. M. Walthall, Judge.

Action by Frank A. Spence and another against Wm. H. Fenchler and another. From a judgment denying an interlocutory injunction, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Gunther R. Lessing, of El Paso, for appellants. Beall, Kemp & Parker, Joseph U. Sweeney, Turney & Burges, and T. A. Falvey, all of El Paso, for appellees.

HARPER, J. This is an appeal from an order of the judge of the district court, El Paso county, Forty-First judicial district, in chambers, refusing to grant an interlocutory injunction against W. H. Fenchler and Bess Montell, appellees.

The appellants' petition sets up, first, a claim for an injunction under articles 4689 and 4690, Revised Civil Statutes of Texas 1911, to restrain the maintenance of a bawdyhouse, which he alleges was rented by W. H. Fenchler, or his agents, to said defendant Bess Montell, and which said bawdyhouse is in close proximity to certain property of the appellants; second, that spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors were kept for sale on said property, 214 Broadway St., El Paso, Tex., without the said defendants, or any one holding under them, having obtained a license; and, third, under the general principles of law and equity, unaffected by statute, alleging that the keeping and maintaining of said bawdyhouse is a nuisance, and seriously damages and depreciates the rental and market value of plaintiffs' property, situated in close proximity to the said 214 Broadway, and makes the houses of the plaintiffs and others similarly situated unfitted for occupancy by respectable people, and that the rental and market value of their said property is greatly lessened by reason thereof, and seeks to have same declared a nuisance and enjoined.

Upon presentment of the petition to the judge in vacation, it was ordered that the clerk issue the usual notice to defendants to show cause why the injunction prayed for should not be granted, and set the same for hearing. Notice was given in accordance with the order of the court, and the parties defendant appeared and answered. Upon hearing the court refused the temporary writ, and entered the following order: " * * * On the 7th day of September, 1912, came on to be heard, in chambers, upon the petition of plaintiffs, and upon all the testimony before said judge, when, after having heard the pleadings and the several affidavits attached and the exhibits in support thereof and argument of counsel, the judge did then and there render judgment that said application for a temporary writ of injunction as prayed for be, and the same is hereby, refused." Whereupon appellants gave notice and perfected their appeal, as the law required.

We shall not take up the questions involved in this appeal in the order in which they are presented in the assignments of error or the briefs of the parties, but in that order which seems to us most convenient.

[1] Appellants contend that they should have their writ upon the following allegations in their petition: "That spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors are kept for sale on the said property at 214 Broadway St., without the said defendants, or any one holding under them, having obtained a license."

Article 4674 (1) provides "that any person, firm or corporation who may engage in or pursue the business of selling intoxicating liquors, without having first procured the necessary license and paid the taxes required by law, are declared to be the creators and promoters of a public nuisance, and may be enjoined at the suit either of the county or district attorney in behalf of the state, or of any private citizen thereof."

Under this statute, for appellants to be entitled to a temporary writ of injunction, they must allege, under oath, that a certain person (naming him) did engage in or pursue the business of selling intoxicating liquors. The appellants only charge in their petition that spirituous and vinous and malt liquors are kept for sale on the said premises, without the said defendant, etc., obtaining a license. There is nothing to show that the appellees, or any one of them, was connected with the keeping for sale of any liquor, or that any person in their employ kept or sold intoxicating liquor at 214 Broadway. We are therefore of the opinion that plaintiffs have failed to show that appellees were violating the statute. Ex parte Griffin, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 502, 132 S. W. 770.

[2] Appellants contend that any criminal act which is declared by the statute to be a nuisance is abatable at the instance of the state authorities, or any individual. This is not the law of this state. Article 4643, Stat. 1911, provides that judges of the district and county courts shall, either in term time or vacation, hear and determine all applications, and may grant writs of injunction, returnable to said courts, in the following cases: "1. Where it shall appear that the party applying for such writ is entitled to the relief demanded, and such relief or any part thereof requires the restraint of some act prejudicial to the appellant. 2. Where, pending litigation, * * * a party is about to do some act, * * * which would tend to render judgment ineffective. 3. In all cases where the applicant may show himself entitled thereto under the principles of equity, and as provided by statutes in all other acts of this state, providing for the granting of injunctions."

[3] There being no statute applicable, the party seeking the remedy of injunction must show himself entitled to the writ under the general principles of law and equity; for, as was said by Justice Neill, in State v. Patterson, 14 Tex. Civ. App. at page 469, 37 S. W. at page 479: "It is only where property or civil rights are involved, and irreparable injury to such rights is threatened, or is about to be committed, for which no adequate remedy exists at law, that courts of equity will interfere by injunction for the purpose of protecting such rights. * * * But courts of equity never interfere for the purpose of restraining acts constituting crime because they are criminal; for they have nothing to do with crime as such." Our Legislature has, in certain instances, enlarged this right since the above opinion was written, and assumes that any person within the jurisdiction is injured, and provides that he can make complaint and have the restraining order issued if he brings himself by pleading and proof clearly within the letter of the statute, and appellants urgently insist that article 4689, Rev. Civ. Stat. 1911, extends to them this statutory remedy. This statute reads as follows, to wit: "The habitual, actual, threatened or contemplated use of any premises, place, building or part thereof, for the purpose of keeping, being interested in, aiding or abetting the keeping of a bawdy or disorderly house, shall be enjoined at the suit of either the state or any citizen thereof: * * * Provided that the provisions of this and the succeeding article shall not apply to nor be so construed as to interfere with the control and regulation of bawds and bawdyhouses by ordinance of incorporated towns and cities acting under special charters, and where the same are actually confined by ordinance of such city within a designated district of such city." The defendants, in order to bring themselves within the provision of the last clause of this statute, have pleaded, under oath, that El Paso, where the alleged bawdyhouse is situated, is a city incorporated under special charter and was regulating bawdyhouses by ordinance, and had confined same to a designated district, and that to grant an injunction would interfere with such regulation and the confinement of such houses to the limits designated by such ordinance, to which limits such houses are actually confined by virtue of such ordinance.

In one form or another, the propositions are announced that this statute, or, at least, the above-named portion of it, is unconstitutional and void.

Every possible phase of these questions was expressly decided or necessarily involved in Ex parte Allison, 99 Tex. 455, 90 S. W. 870, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1111, 122 Am. St. Rep. 653, Id., 48 Tex. Cr. R. 634, 90 S. W. 492, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 622, 13 Ann. Cas. 684, construing a similar statute, and any further discussion by us would be entirely superfluous. But, in view of a trial on the merits, will add that the exact question here raised was raised by exception and passed on by the court in the case of Lane v. Bell, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 213, 115 S. W. 918; i. e.: "The trial court erred in holding that the premises described in the plaintiff's petition under the answer of defendants was exempt from the operation of the statute, because said proviso is invalid, in that the caption of the said House Bill No. 10, 30 Leg. Laws 1907, states that the writ of injunction may issue at the suit of the state or any citizen to prevent the use of any building, while article 362a of said Bill No. 10 provides, in substance, that such injunction shall not issue as to houses situated in an incorporated city or town acting under a special charter, etc. * * * Therefore said House Bill No. 10 is violative of article 3, § 35, of the Constitution of this state, which is as follows: 'No bill (except general appropriation bills * * *) shall contain more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title. But if any subject shall be embraced in the act which shall not be expressed in the title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be so expressed.'"

The right to suppress, by injunction, the running of a bawdyhouse is mentioned in the title of the bill, and in that opinion the court says: "We fail to see how the fact that under possible contingencies the title would embrace more territory than the act itself would render the act repugnant to that portion of the article of the Constitution, above quoted, which renders void any subject embraced in the act which is not mentioned in the title."

The Legislature, in passing this statute, intended to and did declare all bawdyhouses within the state, except those situated within a designated district of incorporated cities and towns, to be nuisances, and subject to be abated, under the provisions of this statute, by injunction at the suit of either the state or any citizen, and we hold that the Legislature had the right, under the Constitution, to so limit the extent of the statute, and that it was properly done: for it will be presumed that cities of over 10,000 inhabitants, with ample police power, could and would regulate and control such places, and that the other parts of the state are not so likely to be so well policed, and such houses would, in fact, be such a nuisance as that any citizen should have the right to enjoin them from operation.

[4] Under the proposition that appellants are entitled to the temporary writ under the general principles of law and equity, we hold that the answer of defendants, under oath, "that the plaintiffs have not been injured, either in person or property," and there being no statement of facts, bills of exceptions, or findings of facts by the judge in the record, it will be presumed that the judge refusing the temporary order did not abuse his discretion. Whitaker v. Gee, 61 Tex. 219.

Appellees raise the question by exception that appellants have not made proper allegation of citizenship, and that therefore they are not entitled to the relief prayed for. Without passing upon the merits of the assignment, we suggest that more definite allegation as to citizenship of the plaintiff should be made in a trial upon the merits.

In conclusion will say that the other questions raised by the parties are not material to proper disposition of this appeal and we will not pass on them.

Affirmed.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Amarillo.
Nov. 23, 1912. Rehearing Denied

1. PLEADING (§ 205*)—GENERAL DEMURRER—EXCEPTION.

Where an exception in an action for breach of a contract for the sale of land stated that plaintiffs specifically excepted to the allegations of the defendants' answer, which attempted to set up fraud in obtaining a contract differing from a prior understanding between the parties because the facts constituting the alleged fraud were wholly insufficient, indefinite, and uncertain, and failed to show any material difference between the written contract and the prior understanding, and in effect attempted to vary a written contract by parol, it was merely a general demurrer to each of the allegations attacked.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 491-510; Dec. Dig. § 205.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 8*)—CONCLUSIONS—FRAUD AND DAMAGES.

Where the answer in a purchaser's action for breach of a land sale contract alleged that defendant had been induced to sign the contract by plaintiffs' fraudulent representations that it bound him to purchase, "assuming" a certain debt, when in fact it merely bound him to purchase "subject to" such debt, it was not demurrable for failure to allege some special damage resulting from the fraud; it not being necessary for a vendor, after setting up the fraudulent representations, to also specifically allege how he was damaged, since such allegation would be merely a statement of a legal conclusion or of a fact necessarily deducible from the facts stated.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 38*)—CONTRACT OF SALE—VALIDITY—FRAUD.

Where a vendor is induced by fraudulent representations of the purchaser to sign a contract for the sale of land under the belief that it binds the purchaser to assume a certain debt when in fact it binds him merely to take subject to such debt, the contract is unenforceable though the vendor reads same before signing it, if he does not understand its legal effect.

4. EVIDENCE (§ 420*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—DELIVERY ON CONDITION.

In a purchaser's action for breach of a land sale contract, evidence that the vendor executed the contract upon condition that it should not become effective until approved by his co-owner was admissible; it being always permissible to show that a written contract was delivered effective upon condition.

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 16*)—SALE OR CONTRACT—PAROL STIPULATIONS—PARTNERS—AGENT.

A parol stipulation, at the time a partner or agent signs a contract for the sale of land belonging to the partnership or to his principal, that the written contract shall not become effective until the consent of his co-partner or principal shall have been obtained is binding upon the purchaser.

6. TENANCY IN COMMON (§ 43*)—SALE—RATIFICATION BY CO-OWNER.

In order for a person to ratify a land sale contract executed by his co-owner, he must answer or agree to same with knowledge of its material terms.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Tenancy in Common, Cent. Dig. §§ 130-132, 136, 137; Dec. Dig. § 43.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 930*)—VERDICT—EVIDENCE.

Where a general verdict is rendered for defendant in a case involving several defenses, and one defense is sustained by the evidence, it is immaterial that the other defenses are not sustained; the presumption being that the evidence was based on the defense sustained.

8. TRIAL (§ 296*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CURE.

Under Court of Civil Appeals Rules, 62a, providing that a judgment shall not be reversed for error not reasonably calculated to produce an improper judgment, it was not reversible error in a purchaser's action for breach of a land sale contract against two co-owners of land, only one of whom signed the contract, to instruct that, to constitute a partnership, the co-owners must have entered into a partnership contract to buy and sell the land and have agreed to share equally in the profits, and that they should have a community of interest therein, where the court in another instruction stated that a mere joint ownership or a community of interest in land does not constitute a partnership even though the increase from it is divided, and that, where a joint purchase of property is made as an investment merely, each paying his proportion of the purchase money, there is no partnership; it appearing that the jury could not have been misled from a consideration of both instructions.

Action by C. A. F. Parker and another against S. A. Naylor and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Madden, Trulove & Kimbrough, of Amarillo, for appellants. Veale & Davidson, of Amarillo, for appellees.

HALL, J. This is the second appeal in this case. At the former trial the suit was for specific performance of a contract to convey lands, and in the alternative for damages for breach of the contract, and appellants recovered upon their alternative prayer for damages. Naylor v. Parker, 139 S. W. 93. Upon reversal, appellants, plaintiffs below, filed their second amended petition in which they abandoned that part of their cause of action seeking specific performance, and sued only for damages for breach of contract. The contract is copied in full in the former opinion, and, in so far as it is important to the questions to be considered upon this appeal, its provisions and recitals are that the appellees, S. A. Naylor and Arthur Lile, in consideration of $1 paid, granted unto the appellants an option to buy four leagues of land known as the Sherman county school lands, situated in Cochran county, for a period of 15 days from the date of the contract, which was February 17, 1909; that, if appellants should determine to buy the land under the agreement, they should within 15 days deposit in the Western National Bank at Hereford, Tex., $1,500 in escrow, pending the fulfillment of the agreement; that the purchase price should be $5 per acre for the entire tract, plus an additional sum of $500. It is further recited in the contract that the appellees owed Sherman county an average of $2 per acre, plus $500 for said land, and that the amount due Sherman county should be deducted and the land "deeded to said Parker, subject to said indebtedness"; that, upon the acceptance by Parker's attorneys of the title and conveyance to him by the sellers, he should pay an additional sum of $13,500, making a total cash payment of $15,000; and that the remainder should be divided into three equal payments, due on or before one, two, and three years from date, respectively, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum. After setting up the stipulations of the contract in full, the petition alleged that, before the expiration of the 15 days provided in said contract, appellant Parker exercised his option to buy the lands by making the $1,500 deposit in the bank specified, and gave appellees notice of such deposit and requested appellees to send forward for examination the abstracts of title as provided in the contract; that appellee Naylor forthwith advised appellee Lile that appellant Parker had exercised his option and demanded the carrying out of the contract; that appellees and each of them had refused to furnish the abstracts of title for examination, had declined to consummate the contract to sell the lands, and prior to the filing of said petition had expressly repudiated the same and arbitrarily, willfully, and fraudulently declined to comply with its terms. It is further alleged that appellants since the execution of said contract, had an opportunity of selling a half interest in the land to one J. N. Bolard at an advance of $2.50 per acre, and that, at the time the contract sued upon was executed, the appellees were duly advised and notified that appellant, when contracting for an option on the land, was doing so for the purpose of reselling the same at a profit; that, at the time appellees breached the contract, the lands were of the reasonable market value of $8 per acre, and that by said breach appellants were damaged generally, in addition to the special damages alleged, in the sum of $60,000. It is further alleged that the contract was executed by S. A. Naylor, acting for himself and as the co-owner with Lile; that, before or at the time of the consummation of their purchase of said lands from said county, appellees formed a partnership for the purchase, handling, and sale of said lands, by which they were to pay equally the purchase price and to share equally the expense, burden of holding, handling, and selling the same, and were to share equally the income, revenues, and profits derived from said lands and the sale thereof; that each of them, as such partner, was authorized to make a valid contract for the sale of the lands; and that the contract in question was signed by appellee Naylor individually, and also with the partnership name of Naylor & Lile, and that, in so signing said contract, he was authorized to bind both himself and the said Lile. It is further alleged that, if the appellants should be mistaken in alleging that appellees were partners, they nevertheless had an understanding and agreement by which either of them was authorized to represent the other to sell the lands; that appellee Naylor was the owner of an undivided one-half interest in the lands, and by virtue of the facts already set out was bound to convey to appellants the said undivided half interest therein; that he undertook and bound himself to cause said Lile, who was the owner of the other half interest, to convey the same to appellant Parker according to said contract, and breached his obligation in that particular to the further damage of appellants in the sum of $30,000. It was further alleged that, at the time appellee Naylor made said contract, he represented and warranted to appellant Parker that he was authorized to make the contract for the sale of said lands on behalf of himself and as co-owner, knowing full well the extent and limit of his authority, and that, if he was not authorized to represent said Lile, he knowingly, fraudulently, and willfully misrepresented his authority and induced appellant Parker to rely thereon; that appellant Parker was in fact misled and did rely upon appellee Naylor's representation, and that Naylor willfully, wrongfully, and knowingly exceeded his authority in making said contract, if he was not authorized to represent his co-owner, to the damage of appellant in the sum of $30,000; that appellee Lile, having been informed by his co-owner immediately after the making of the contract that appellant Parker had exercised his option to purchase said lands, took no steps to repudiate the same or to deny the authority of Naylor to make the contract on behalf of them both, but on the contrary said Lile, after receiving full notice and with knowledge of all the facts, proceeded to ratify and confirm the contract, permitted Parker to act upon the same and deposit said $1,500 in part performance thereof, and addressed a letter to the bank with which said deposit had been placed, stating that he was informed that the option contract had been executed by appellee Naylor, demanding that appellant Parker close up said purchase by executing additional contracts which he inclosed with said letter, and by these acts and others ratified and confirmed the said contract and estopped himself to deny the authority of appellee Naylor to execute the contract for him.

Appellee Naylor excepted generally, pleaded the general issue and specially in substance as follows: That in January, 1909, prior to the signing and delivery by him of the contract sued on, he was the owner of an undivided half interest in the lands in question; that appellee Lile was the owner of the other half interest, and that in the month of January, 1909, appellee Naylor was approached by appellant Parker, who inquired of him the price and terms upon which appellees were willing to sell their interest in said lands; that appellee Naylor, without knowledge and consent of Lile, or without any authority from Lile, proposed to accept the sum of $3 per acre over and above the amount then due and owing by himself and Lile to Sherman county, or a gross sum to appellees of $52,145; that the terms of said offer were substantially that appellant Parker was to pay the said sum of $15,000 in cash and execute and deliver to appellees his certain promissory notes in the amounts and payable at the times agreed upon, and in addition thereto was to become liable and bound to assume the payment to said Sherman county the amount of money then due and owing said county; that at said time said Parker did not say whether he would or would not purchase said land, and no final agreement was reached between said appellant and appellee Naylor; that at said time he told said Parker that he (Naylor) only owned an undivided half interest in the land; that Parker well knew that the offer on the part of appellee to sell the land was conditioned upon the agreement of said Lile, and that any sale that might be made was conditioned upon and subject to said Lile's approval, and it was then and there understood and agreed between Naylor and Parker that, before any offer on his part to sell should become binding upon him or upon Lile, it would have to meet the approval of Lile; that thereafter on the 17th day of February, 1909, Parker again approached Naylor with reference to the purchase of lands and requested an option for 15 days, and, if at the expiration of said 15 days he desired to purchase, he (Parker) would do so, upon the conditions, at the price, and upon the terms theretofore agreed to between himself and the said Naylor; that Parker took from his pocket some papers which he informed Naylor were contracts, written in duplicate, to be executed by himself, Parker, and the appellees, and then and there assured appellee Naylor that said written contracts embodied and contained all the terms, conditions, stipulations, and agreements theretofore forming the tentative agreement made between himself, Parker, and appellee Naylor at said January conference and none other; that, at the time the contracts were exhibited to him, the train on which Parker desired to leave Chillicothe (Naylor's home where the contract was made) was almost due to leave; that Parker expressed a desire not to miss the train, and together with this appellee read and compared said duplicate contracts in a hurried manner; that appellee Naylor's experience in drafting, phrasing, and wording written contracts is limited, he not having occasion to study the meaning of technical phrases, not being a lawyer skilled in such matters, but for the greater part of his life having been a farmer, almost wholly ignorant of the meaning, as well as of the binding force and effect, of legal and technical phraseology; that he had known appellant Parker for a number of years and had implicit confidence in his honesty and integrity, and was willing to believe, and did believe, all the statements and representations then and there made to him about the contents, wording, and meaning of the contract, and that said contract was made and delivered upon the same conditions as the tentative agreement theretofore had between them; that Parker was a president of a bank, highly educated, shrewd business man, and assured Naylor that the written contract was made upon the same conditions and had embodied in it all of the material provisions and stipulations in accordance with their verbal agreement, and specially assured appellee Naylor, who was induced to believe his representations, that, by the terms of the written contract, appellant was to assume the debt due him by himself and his codefendant Lile to Sherman county as part of the purchase money for the land. It is further alleged that the contract as actually signed does not assume the payment of the sum due said county or any part thereof; that the limited time in which he had to examine said contract was not sufficient in which to secure the services of a lawyer to advise him in the matter; that he relied almost wholly on the statements of appellant Parker as to the contents thereof, which statements were untrue in fact and induced him to sign the contract; that said representations were that said contract was drawn in accordance with the tentative agreement theretofore had with appellant Parker and this appellee, and had the effect to mislead and induce appellee to sign the contract, said appellant well knowing at that time that appellee would not execute and deliver the contract if he knew that appellant was not bound to assume the payment of said debt to Sherman county; that he (Naylor) was wrongfully deceived and misled by appellant in said representations into believing that appellant had obligated himself to assume the payment of said indebtedness to Sherman county; that, acting thereon, he signed said alleged contract; that he would not have signed the same had he not been misled. Appellee Naylor further pleaded that he never represented or warranted to appellants or either of them that he was authorized to sell or make contract to sell the interest of said Lile in said land; that he explained to said Parker at said January conference, and also when the contract was signed, that he owned an undivided one-half interest in the land, and that it was understood between appellee and the said Parker that the said contract would not be binding upon Lile unless he (Lile) should approve the same; that said Parker well knew at all times that appellee Naylor had no authority, was not presuming, and had not agreed to convey Lile's interest in said lands unless the said Lile should consent thereto; that nevertheless, when Parker produced said contract for this appellee's signature, he asked appellee to sign the same "Naylor & Lile"; that this appellee then and there told Parker that he did not understand that he had a right to sign Lile's name to said contract, and then and there told Parker and gave him to understand that he did not want to sign Lile's name thereto, and that he did not know what about so signing "Naylor & Lile" to said contract, but Parker urged him to sign and told him that it would be all right to so sign it; that but for said representation on the part of Parker, and the fact that Parker urged him to sign said contract and told him that it would be all right to do so, he would never have signed Lile's name to said contract; that he had confidence in Parker's honesty and integrity, and was persuaded by him to so sign said contract; that Parker well knew that he (Naylor) was not claiming any authority to execute said contract on behalf of Lile, and did not intend to convey said land except and unless the same should be approved by Lile; that from the very first conference in January, 1909, whether or not a sale of said lands should be finally consummated was dependent upon Lile's approval thereof, and, when the alleged contract sued upon was signed, it was with the understanding that Parker would take the land subject to the agreement on the part of Lile to the contract; that at said January meeting, Parker stated that he wanted to buy all the land or none; that it was understood and agreed at the time of signing the contract that Parker was not buying this appellee's undivided interest, but was buying all the land subject to the approval of said Lile as to the sale of his portion, and that there was never at any time any offer on the part of Parker or any agreement between Naylor and Parker for the sale of Naylor's undivided interest in said land alone; that said Parker asserted that he was offering to buy and would buy all the land or none; that, after said contract was signed, said Parker again at Hereford, about the 22d day of March, 1909, asserted to appellee that he had bought all the land from him; that he did not want only his undivided interest, but had bought it all and would hold this appellee to a conveyance of all the land or none; that it was never in contemplation of the parties that Naylor's interest in said land should be conveyed to said appellant unless said Lile should also agree to convey his interest. The answer further denies the agency of Naylor and the allegation of partnership.

Appellee Lile adopted the answer of his codefendant and alleged specially that the contract was not executed by him or by any person authorized to execute it for him; that it is not his act or deed; and that he is in no sense bound thereby. The case was tried by a jury and resulted in a verdict and judgment for the appellees. The briefs contain numerous assignments which will not be necessary to consider in detail in the disposition we make of the case.

[1] The first assignment of error is: "The court erred in overruling plaintiff's general demurrer as contained in their first supplemental petition in reply to the first amended answers of the defendants." Five propositions are urged following this assignment, and they are substantially as follows: First proposition: That the allegations in the answers of the appellees, attempting to set up deceit, misrepresentation, and fraud, were insufficient to constitute a defense because it was not alleged that there was any material difference to appellees between the pretended representation which it is claimed the appellant Parker indirectly made to the effect that the contract as drawn, embodied a provision that he should assume the indebtedness of appellees to Sherman county on the lands in question, and the stipulation contained in the contract to the effect that the amount of said indebtedness should be deducted from the total purchase price, and that Parker should buy the land subject to the indebtedness. Second proposition: The allegations in the special answers of the appellees to the effect that it was stated at the January meeting, and understood and agreed at the time the contract was signed in February, 1909, that the contract was not to be binding unless and until it was approved or ratified by appellee Lile, is obnoxious to the rule that the terms of a written contract cannot be varied by antecedent or contemporaneous parole agreements. Third proposition: The allegation to the effect that Naylor signed the contract with the mistaken belief that it contained stipulations which it did not contain is no ground for relief against the binding obligation of the contract in the absence of allegation that the other contracting party was also acting under a mistake or that he was guilty of fraud. Fourth proposition: A mistake of law does not avoid a contract in the absence of any confidential relation. Fifth proposition: The allegations of misrepresentations, deceit, and fraud are wholly insufficient, because they fail to show that the appellee Naylor did not have at hand the means of readily and fully informing himself as to the actual terms of the contract which he signed and show that he had such means. It will be seen that some of the propositions are not germane to the assignment. Appellants filed first a general demurrer to the first amended original answer of the defendants, and the following, which they term a special exception: "They specially except to the allegations contained in said answers, attempting to set up fraud, in obtaining the contract sued upon, because the alleged facts constituting the alleged fraud are wholly insufficient, indefinite, and uncertain, and fail to show any material difference between the written contract and the alleged prior understanding in regard thereto, and said allegations and the allegations pretending to set up pretended conditions upon which the contract should become effective are in effect an attempt to vary by parole stipulations the terms of a written contract. Wherefore plaintiffs specially except to all of said allegations as insufficient in law, and pray the judgment of the court." It will be seen that this exception merely attacks the legal sufficiency of a portion of the petition, and is in effect nothing more than a general demurrer to each of the issues attacked thereby. Donnell v. Currie & Dohoney, 131 S. W. 88; Cheek v. Herndon, 82 Tex. 146, 17 S. W. 763; Railway Company v. McElmurry, 33 S. W. 249. It thus appears that we are to consider the sufficiency of that portion of the answer alleging fraud as against only a general demurrer.

[2, 3] It is insisted by appellant that because the answer did not allege some specific damage resulting to appellee by reason of the fraud of Parker in inducing Naylor to sign the contract, wherein Parker bound himself to purchase the land in question "subject to" the Sherman county debt instead of in said contract "assuming" said debt, as had been previously agreed between them at the January meeting, the answer was insufficient as against the general demurrer. We cannot assent to this contention. We think it was sufficient as against a special demurrer upon that ground. That there is a difference of both substantive rights and liabilities from the appellees' standpoint, under the contract as drawn and under the contract as it is alleged it should have been drawn, is obvious. If Parker had agreed to assume the indebtedness due Sherman county, he would have become primarily liable for the debt, and, in the event the land should not sell for enough to pay the notes executed by appellees, they would have been protected against liability for the balance by Parker's assumption. We think this is a clear legal conclusion to be drawn from the facts stated in the answer, and it is never necessary, or even proper, to allege conclusions of law. Storer v. Lane, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 250, 20 S. W. 852; Mussina v. Goldthwaite, 34 Tex. 132, 7 Am. Rep. 281; Milburn v. Walker, 11 Tex. 329. We must not lose sight of the fact that this is not a suit by appellees for the recovery of damages resulting from fraud and deceit. But the suit is by appellants seeking to recover damages for the breach of a contract, and the fraud in this case is pleaded as a defense only. Appellees are not seeking damages; then why should they be required in a defensive plea to specifically point out damages? By their answer appellees assert that the contract sued upon is not the one intended, and, while appellee Naylor admits signing the instrument, yet he says it does not speak the agreement with reference to the assumption of the debt, and that his signature thereto was obtained by the fraudulent statement of appellant Parker that the writing as submitted to him did bind Parker to assume the Sherman county debt, when in truth and in fact the instrument binds appellees to convey the land to Parker, subject to the Sherman county debt. If this is true, the contract is fraudulent and voidable and should not be enforced. The real inquiry is, What was the true agreement of the parties upon which their minds met? And does the written instrument speak the agreement? If it does not, was there such fraudulent representation or conduct on the part of Parker as to deceive Naylor, and was he deceived thereby? And, further, was the matter about which he was deceived material? The matter complained of was certainly material, because the value of his contract as originally agreed upon was materially lessened. There can be no question but that fraud in material matters of inducement will vitiate the contract as a whole, and that it may be used as a weapon of defense, even though the matter alleged to be fraudulent does not appear in the contract itself. Hollifield v. Landrum, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 187, 71 S. W. 979; Davis v. Driscoll, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 14, 54 S. W. 43; Ranger v. Hearne, 41 Tex. 258; Halsell v. Musgraves, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 476, 24 S. W. 359; Plano Co. v. Nolan, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 395, 85 S. W. 821.

In I. & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Shuford, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 251, 81 S. W. 1189, where appellee was induced to sign a release of damages by fraudulent representations of a physician, the court used this language: "But, however, the twenty-eighth assignment of error raises the question that, as the appellee had an opportunity to read and understand the release, she was bound by it when she signed it, and that, as she freely and voluntarily executed it, it is conclusive of her rights. If we conceded that she did voluntarily sign it, and that at the time she did not read it but fully understood its nature and legal effect, and that it is ever so binding and conclusive in its terms against her, still if its execution was procured by reason of false and fraudulent representations of material nature that induced her to execute it, she at the time believing in the truth of such statements, and, acting upon such belief, signed the release, equity would cancel it." It is shown that, while Naylor read the contract before signing it, he did not understand the legal effect of the language used, and under the circumstances the jury was warranted in believing him upon that point.

As was said by Pleasants, Justice, in Fish- er v. Dippel, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 266, 102 S. W. 450: "The first assignment complains of the ruling of the trial court in not sustaining plaintiff's exceptions to defendant's answer on the ground that said answer affirmatively shows that the alleged false representations of plaintiff were not material and were not relied upon by the defendant. The proposition that a false representation which is not material or relied upon by the party intended to be influenced thereby cannot be availed of by such party as a ground for avoiding his contract is sustained by the authorities; but the answer of defendant does not show that the alleged false representations of plaintiff were not material or that they were not relied on by the defendant, and therefore the trial court did not err in overruling the exception. The representations alleged were as to the essential character and value of the subject-matter of the contract; the representations as to value not being the mere expression of an opinion, but made as a statement of fact and with knowledge that defendant had not seen the property and would not investigate the truth of said representations before acting upon plaintiff's offer. We think the materiality of such representations cannot be questioned. It is repeatedly averred in the answer that defendant relied upon the representations made by plaintiff, and the allegation there, 'He was not aware that by accepting Fisher's offer and closing the deal by telegram that a binding contract, enforceable in law under ordinary circumstances, had been entered into by him; that it was his intention at all times to see and examine the property before the trade was finally concluded by the execution of deeds, in order to verify the representations of plaintiff'—does not indicate that he did not rely upon such representations. It means no more than that he was ignorant of the legal effect of his acceptance of plaintiff's offer, and, if he had known that his acceptance by telegram of said offer constituted a binding contract for the conveyance of his land, he would not have closed the contract before seeing the land, and this is not inconsistent with the allegations that in accepting plaintiff's offer he relied upon the truth of plaintiff's representations as to the character and value of the land and the improvements."

In Hayes v. Bonner, 14 Tex. 629, which was an action by a vendor against his vendee to recover the lands on the ground that the latter refused to pay the purchase money, the defendant alleging that the plaintiff had fraudulently represented to him that he had a good title to the land when in fact he had no title thereto, it was held that the allegation of such fact constituted substantially a good defense to the action, and the pleading was good as against a general demurrer. To the same effect is Morris v. Brown, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 266, 85 S. W. 1015.

The testimony is uncontradicted that when Naylor signed the contract in question he thought its provisions bound Parker to assume the Sherman county debt. Justice Stayton in Lott v. Kaiser, 61 Tex. 671, says: "There is no doubt that relief in equity will be granted when the legal effect of a transaction is misapprehended. If such misapprehension be induced or brought about by misleading statements or acts of the other contracting party, for a court of equity will not permit a person to take advantage of another's ignorance or mistake even of law, if such person knew of the misapprehension at the time of the contract and did not correct it. For to make the contract under such circumstances would be fraudulent." Danner et al. v. Ft. Worth Impl. Co., 18 Tex. Civ. App. 621, 45 S. W. 856, was a case where the implement company sought to recover upon two promissory notes and to foreclose the chattel mortgage given to secure them. The defendants, by special answer, set up that the notes were given in consideration of a certain engine guaranteed by the plaintiff to do a certain character of work; that the engine was defective; and that the defects were hidden until after the engine had been placed in position for doing the work. To this answer the plaintiff replied that the defendants had signed a written order for the machine providing that 10 days' use of the machine should be conclusive evidence that it fulfilled the warranty. The defendant sought to avoid this clause on the ground that the order which had been signed by them was procured by the fraudulent representation and assurance of plaintiff's agent that it was only an order for the goods amounting to nothing except to show that the purchasers are acting in good faith and will take the goods if they find them to be as represented. The court sustained a general exception to the defendant's answer, urging fraud of the plaintiff in procuring the order for the machinery. Tarleton, Chief Justice, reversed and remanded the cause, and said: "In this (sustaining the general exception to defendants' answer) we think there was error. The allegations show, as against a general demurrer, active and affirmative fraud on the part of the plaintiff, consisting of false representations, misleading and inducing the execution of the order. If these allegations be true, we think they state a ground for avoiding the clause relied upon." We conclude from the authorities that it was not necessary for appellees, after setting up the representations constituting fraud, to allege specifically how he was damaged, and to have attempted to do so would have been merely the statement of a legal conclusion or at the most the statement of a fact necessarily deducible from the facts stated, neither of which they were required to do.

[4] Nor do we concur in the contention of appellants under the second proposition. The evidence of Naylor, to the effect that he signed and delivered the contract upon conition and with the understanding that it should not become effective and binding upon him until it had been signed and approved by his co-owner, Lile, was not obnoxious to the rule prohibiting parol testimony to vary or contradict the terms of a written contract. It is the settled law of this state that parol evidence is always admissible to show that a written contract was delivered, effective upon conditions. Merchants' National Bank v. McAnnulty, 31 S. W. 1091; Norris v. Cetti, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 28, 79 S. W. 641; Carleton v. Cowert, 45 S. W. 749. Such testimony did not contradict or vary any term of the contract, but on the contrary seemed to accord with it. Upon its face, the contract purported to be the obligation of both Naylor and Lile, and by express terms bound them to convey, not Naylor's interest alone, but the entire four leagues of land owned at that time by Naylor and Lile jointly. It is not contended by appellees that any evidence would be admissible to contradict or vary the terms of the contract in the absence of fraud, but they insist that the writing fails to speak the true intention of the parties in that it does not contain all of the agreement entered into between them. Parol evidence is always admissible in such cases to show the true agreement of the parties, even though it be statements contemporaneous with the execution of the writing, provided it does not vary or contradict the writing itself.

[5] Even if we should hold, as a matter of law, that Naylor and Parker were shown to be partners, still there is evidence sufficient to sustain Naylor's contention that he signed the contract and that Parker accepted it subject to the approval of his partner, Lile; and, if this is a fact, it would be inequitable to give the contract validity against Naylor or Naylor & Lile until the same had been approved by Lile, and this is equally true if we should hold Naylor to be the agent of Lile. While Naylor, as the agent or partner of his co-owner, might have the authority to enter into a contract which would bind Lile, still if he declined to do so, but limited its binding effect by the subsequent approval of Lile, it is clear that such stipulation should not be disregarded by the court. And what has been said disposes of the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, thirteenth, fourteenth, twenty-seventh, thirtieth, and thirty-first assignments, raising the questions already decided in different ways.

[6] In our opinion the nineteenth assignment of error, attacking the trial court's charge upon the question of ratification, is without merit. The charge in question instructs the jury: "That before you can find that the defendant Lile ratified the alleged contract of February 17, 1909, you must find (1) that he had full knowledge of all the material terms and provisions of said contract; (2) then you must further find that after he had obtained such knowledge, if you find that he did, he intentionally accepted and agreed to all the material terms and conditions of said alleged contract. This seems to be a clear and correct statement of the law applicable to this phase of the controversy. Appellants' assignments Nos. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, and 37 present no reversible errors, and are overruled.

[7] The remaining assignments, except the fifteenth and sixteenth, question the sufficiency of the evidence and are overruled, because when a verdict is general we must indulge every presumption in favor of the verdict and judgment based upon it where the case is one involving several issues submitted to the jury for their consideration. Under such circumstances, it will always be presumed by the appellate court that the verdict was based upon the defense which the evidence fully sustains. T. & N. O. Ry. Co. v. Gardner, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 90, 69 S. W. 217; Merriwether v. Dixon, 28 Tex. 18; Baker v. Clepper, 26 Tex. 629, 84 Am. Dec. 591. In our opinion the evidence is sufficient to sustain the defense urged by appellees that the contract in question was signed by Naylor and accepted by Parker upon the express condition that it should not take effect until it had been approved by Lile. For this reason we have not considered in detail the several assignments questioning the sufficiency of the evidence to establish the various issues named in the assignments.

[8] The court instructed the jury that in order to constitute a partnership, as alleged by the plaintiff, it must be shown by the evidence that the defendants, Lile and Naylor, by agreement entered into a partnership contract to buy and sell the land in question, and as a part thereof they agreed to share equally in the profits as such, and that they should have a community of interest therein—that is, proprietorship of property rights in the profits in said business. Appellants complain of this charge because it instructs the jury that, in order to constitute a partnership as alleged by plaintiffs, it must be shown that the defendants by agreement entered into a partnership contract to buy and sell the land in question, and as a part of the agreement to share equally in the profits as such, and that they should have a community of interest in the profits. It seems to be a doctrine in Texas that as to third persons, even if the parties stipulate that they are not to be partners, yet if they engage in an enterprise in which they are to divide the profits as profits, they are partners. In the case of Kelly Island L. & T. Co. v. Masterson, 100 Tex. 38, 93 S. W. 427, the court said: "Masterson was not to receive his share of the profits as compensation for the use of his money, nor were Downey and Kelly to receive their share as payment for services, but each received the profits as the fruit of the joint enterprise—that is, as profits—which made them partners.” In this connection, the appellants further complain of paragraph No. 3 of the general charge, which is as follows: “You are, however, further charged a mere joint ownership or community of interest in land does not constitute a partnership, even though the increase from it is divided. Where a joint purchase of property is made as an investment merely, each paying his proportion of the purchase money, they are joint tenants and not partners, and if from the evidence you find that Naylor and Lile were merely joint owners of the land in question, that they purchased the same as an investment, each paying his proportion of the purchase price, either with the intention of dividing it or making separate sales, or without an agreement to form a copartnership and to participate in the profits thereof as such, then they would be joint tenants and not partners in the land in question and not authorized to bind the other by a contract for the sale of the land, and you should so find, then Naylor had no authority to bind Lile by the contract in evidence for the sale of the land mentioned in this suit unless you find he was acting as agent of Lile therein, or that he was specially authorized thereunto by Lile to make the contract.” While the first charge upon the question of partnership as an abstract proposition is incorrect, it seems to us that paragraph No. 3, last above quoted, is not subject to the criticism contained in the brief, and when the two are considered together with the whole charge, if there was error, we think it was not such error as would require a reversal.

Rule 62a for the Courts of Civil Appeals (149 S. W. x), recently promulgated by the Supreme Court and effective November 15, 1912, provides: “No judgments shall be reversed on appeal and no trial ordered in any cause on the ground that the trial court has committed an error of law in the course of the trial, unless the appellate court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of amounted to such denial of the rights of the appellant as was reasonably calculated to cause, and probably did cause, the rendition of an improper judgment in the case,” etc. This rule is doubtless one outgrowth of the widespread agitation for reform in court procedure, which has for some time been waged by the press, urged by action of many bar associations and recommended by eminent judges, and upon its face is simple enough. The great difficulty is in making the application of the rule to the particular error. It is with some hesitation that we construe it to be applicable to the contentions arising under the fifteenth and sixteenth assignments, and, by authority of that part of the rule quoted above, we overrule said assignments. We frankly confess that more than once during the consideration of the case we have been forced to summon the said rule as a posse comitatus to assist us in suppressing the appellants' brawling assignments and their clamorous propositions.

The judgment is affirmed.

SAN ANTONIO HARDWARE CO. v. SANGER.†

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. San Antonio. Oct. 30, 1912. On Motion for Rehearing, Dec. 18, 1912.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 376*)—CORPORATE POWERS—PURCHASING OWN STOCK.

In the absence of charter or statutory prohibition, a solvent corporation, with the assent of its stockholders, may in good faith purchase its own stock for the purpose of settling the differences in its management and preserving its business integrity, although it pays more than the market price therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1530; Dec. Dig. § 376.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 388*) — CONTRACTS — RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES ON CONTRACTS—ULTRA VIRES.

Where a corporation's ultra vires contract has been fully executed, the courts will not interfere with the rights acquired under such contract, and, where such contract is wholly executory on both sides, neither party is estopped to deny its validity; and hence, where a corporation has purchased its own stock and received the benefit of the contract, it cannot, in an action on notes given therefor, set up the defense that the purchase was ultra vires.

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 519*)—ACTION ON NOTES — EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in an action against a corporation upon notes given by it as part of the purchase price of its own stock, held to show that the corporation, at the time of the purchase of its stock, was solvent and its stock at par.

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 537*) — ACTS OF INSOLVENCY — ABILITY TO PAY DEBTS — “INSOLVENCY.”

“Insolvency,” as the term is ordinarily used, is not the same thing as a mere failure to pay debts, but, in the case of an individual or corporation, it means an insufficiency of property and assets to pay debts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2150; Dec. Dig. § 537.*]

On Motion for Rehearing.

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 376*) — POWERS — PURCHASE OF OWN STOCK—STATUTES.

Acts 1907, c. 166, § 3 (Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 1152), which authorizes a retirement or decrease of a corporation's capital stock, does not prohibit a corporation from purchasing its own stock to settle differences in its management and preserving its business integrity, with the intention of reissuing and selling it again, especially where the seller knew of the directors' resolutions setting forth such intention.

6. CORPORATIONS (§ 67*)—PURCHASE OF OWN STOCK—REDUCTION OF STOCK.

When a corporation buys shares of its own capital stock, the capital stock is not reduced by that amount, nor is the stock merged.

7. CORPORATIONS (§ 244*)—TRANSFER OF STOCK—LIABILITY OF TRANSFEREE.

The transferor of corporate stock directly to the corporation itself without the intervention of a trustee is not released from his liability on the stock, but is liable as though no transfer had been made.

Appeal from District Court, Bexar County; A. W. Seeligson, Judge.

Action by W. W. Sanger against the San Antonio Hardware Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Terrell & Terrell, of San Antonio, for appellant. Shook & Vanderhoeven, Houston, Boyle, Storey & Davis, E. Pendleton Lipscomb, and Phil H. Shook, all of San Antonio, for appellee.

FLY, J. This is a suit by appellee on two promissory notes for $4,000 each, executed by appellant, credits being admitted of $5,066.67, leaving a balance due of $3,765.97, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from January 25, 1910, and 10 per cent. attorney's fees. The defense was that appellee was a stockholder in the company, which was a corporation duly incorporated by the laws of Texas, holding 45 shares; that his wife also held 45 shares; that B. J. Sanger, Joseph W. Sanger, and Edwin Oppenheimer each held 10 shares which they indorsed to appellee, and he endeavored to sell all of said shares, namely, 120 shares, to the company for $12,000, and said corporation endeavored to purchase the same and paid to him $4,000 in cash and executed to him the two notes upon which the suit was based; that said transaction was ultra vires and null and void; that said corporation had no authority to purchase its own stock, and the effect of the same was to reduce the capital stock of said corporation in a manner unauthorized by law and unjustified by its financial condition, which was bad. Appellant offered to issue 120 shares of stock to appellee, and prayed for a cancellation of the notes and for judgment for the sums of money paid to him by appellant. The cause was tried by the court, without a jury, and judgment was rendered in favor of appellee in the sum of $4,312.84, with interest at 5 per cent. per annum from date of the judgment and all costs.

It is admitted that the notes which form the basis of this suit were given as part of the purchase money of 120 shares of stock in the corporation; said shares having been sold by appellee to appellant on April 28, 1908. The execution of the notes, as well as the payment of the cash, $4,000, was duly authorized by the corporation. In the resolution authorizing the purchase of the shares it was provided "that the shares so purchased shall not be retired or merged, but shall be resold and reissued under the direction of the board of directors," and provision is made for the application of the money arising from such sale. On May 25, 1908, a special stockholders' meeting was held, and the purchase of the shares was in all things unanimously "ratified and confirmed." There was evidence tending to show that when the stock was sold it was worth its face value or more. There was evidence to show the solvency of the corporation at the time the stock was purchased and the notes executed. At the time that the purchase was authorized, the president of the corporation reported that "the financial condition of the company will not be injuriously affected by said purchase, and the available resources of the company will still be much more than double the amount of all of its obligations." Stock of the company had been selling, prior to the sale in question, at par. No creditor has ever objected to the purchase of the stock from appellee, and the statements of the corporation show that its assets were largely in excess of its liabilities. The purchase of the stock was made in good faith for the preservation of the integrity of the corporation. The corporation was chartered under the provisions of title 21, subd. 25, art. 642, Rev. Statutes 1896.

[1] There is no provision in the charter prohibiting the purchase of its stock by the corporation, nor is such action prohibited by the statutes of Texas, and in the absence of such provisions in charter or statute the general rule, as applied to corporations by the weight of authority, seems to be that a solvent corporation has the authority to purchase its own stock, where the purchase is made in good faith. It was so held in Howe Grain & Mercantile Co. v. Jones, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 198, 51 S. W. 24, and that case has been cited with approval in several state courts, and the doctrine of that case is recognized and sustained in a large majority of the states of the Union. We cite some of the authorities which have been thoroughly collated by counsel for appellee: Cook on Corp. §§ 311, 312, 313; Adam v. Investment Co., 33 R. I. 193, 80 Atl. 426; Leonard v. Draper, 187 Mass. 536, 73 N. E. 644; Shoemaker v. Washburn, 97 Wis. 585, 73 N. W. 333; Blacklock v. Mfg. Co., 110 N. C. 99, 14 S. E. 501; Bank v. Bruce, 17 N. Y. 507; Lumber Co. v. Telephone Co., 127 Iowa, 350, 101 N. W. 742, 69 L. R. A. 968, 109 Am. St. Rep. 387; U.

S. Mineral Co. v. Camden, 106 Va. 663, 56 S. E. 561, 117 Am. St. Rep. 1028; Insurance Co. v. Swigert, 135 Ill. 150, 25 N. E. 680, 12 L. R. A. 328; Chapman v. Iron Clad Co., 62 N. J. Law, 497, 41 Atl. 690; Hartley v. Pioneer Works, 181 N. Y. 73, 73 N. E. 576. A number of federal courts hold to the same doctrine. The rule is thus clearly stated in the cited case of Leonard v. Draper by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts: "The only question as to legality which has been brought to our attention arises from the fact that the note was given for capital stock of the corporation which its officers thought it desirable to have the corporation buy. It is suggested that the purchase of shares of its capital stock by a street railway company is illegal, and that therefore a note given in payment for such is void. We have been referred to no authority in support of this proposition. * * * The right of corporations to purchase their own stock, unless forbidden by statute, has been recognized. Dupree v. Boston Water Power Co., 114 Mass. 37, and cases cited. We discover no element of illegality in the note."

In the cited case of Shoemaker v. Washburn it was held by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin: "The corporation was perfectly solvent at the time of its purchase of the Powers stock. No stockholder makes any complaint of such purchase. No creditor then existing is here complaining of such purchase. In fact, the plaintiffs appear to be the only creditors of the corporation, and its liability to them was not incurred until seven months after the purchase. There is nothing to impeach the good faith of any of the officers or directors of the corporation." The facts of the case at bar make it a stronger one than the cited case for the application of the doctrine stated. The stockholders in this case ratified the purchase of the stock, and no creditor has been heard to complain of the purchase. The purchase of the stock was represented by the president of the concern, now the sole witness for appellant, to be a method that had been devised "by which the differences heretofore existing among the officers of the company can be settled and removed and a harmonious management of the company's affairs can be effected." Further, he represented to the board of directors "that the financial condition of the company will not be injuriously affected by said purchase, and the available resources of the company will still be much more than double the amount of all of its obligations; that, unless the difficulties arising from the dissensions under which the company has labored can be removed, the company will suffer great and irreparable loss, if not insolvency; that the removal of such difficulties, which can be consummated by said purchase, will enable the company to conduct its business hereafter with success and profit; and that the purchase of said 220 shares at the price and upon the terms stated is fair to all parties and very advantageous to the company."

The act of purchase of the stock might be ultra vires because beyond the powers conferred in its charter—that is, unauthorized by its charter—and still it would not follow that such act would not give rise to legal or equitable rights and liabilities. It was at one time held that no ultra vires act could bind a corporation or create liabilities to it. That is not the modern view, however, for it has been repudiated in a number of cases and the better view is that there is nothing in the nature of a corporation which would prevent it from acquiring rights and incurring liabilities through an ultra vires act.

[2] It has been often held, and may be considered settled, that when an ultra vires contract with a corporation has been fully executed the courts will not interfere with the rights acquired under that contract. First Nat. Bank v. Stewart, 107 U. S. 676, 2 Sup. Ct. 778, 27 L. Ed. 592; Parish v. Wheeler, 22 N. Y. 494; Holmes v. Holmes, 127 N. Y. 252, 27 N. E. 831, 24 Am. St. Rep. 448; Wilson v. Carter Oil Co., 46 W. Va. 469, 33 S. E. 249. Where the ultra vires contract is wholly executory on both sides, neither party is estopped to deny the validity of the contract. Nassau Bank v. Jones, 95 N. Y. 115, 47 Am. Rep. 14. There is a conflict of opinion as to whether the full performance of an ultra vires contract by one of the parties to it would authorize an action to require performance on the part of the other. In New York, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, New Jersey, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Mississippi, and perhaps other states, it has been held that when a contract with a corporation is merely ultra vires, not being prohibited by law and not contrary to public policy, and the party contracting with the corporation has performed his part of the contract, his action cannot be defeated by a plea of ultra vires on the part of the corporation. Bath Gaslight Co. v. Claffy, 151 N. Y. 24, 45 N. E. 390, 36 L. R. A. 664. The same rule has been adopted in Texas. Railway v. Gentry, 69 Tex. 625, 8 S. W. 98; Bond v. Terrell Mfg. Co., 82 Tex. 309, 18 S. W. 691; Bank v. Oil Co., 24 Tex. Civ. App. 645, 60 S. W. 828. These decisions are based on the application of the doctrine of estoppel. In Bond v. Terrell it was said: "It seems now to be settled by the great weight of authority that where there is a question of contract between a corporation and another party, and the contract has been performed by the other party, and the corporation has received the benefit of the contract, it will not be permitted to plead that on entering into the contract it exceeded its chartered powers." In this case appellee had fully complied with his part of the contract and appellant is estopped to deny its liability.

It was said in the case of Lowe v. Pioneer Threshing Co. (C. C.) 70 Fed. 646: "It is a mooted question in this country as to whether a corporation may purchase shares of its own stock. Many states forbid it. In the absence of a charter provision or a statute forbidding it, there is no reason why the stock should not be purchased, at least with the profits derived from the business of the corporation, where all the stockholders assent thereto." And commenting on that proposition Cook, in his excellent work on Corporations (section 311), says: "The cases which appear to uphold a contrary rule are found, upon a close examination, to come within the exceptions given above." That is to say, the purchase of its stock by a corporation is not held invalid unless it is done without the consent of the stockholders, is prohibited by charter or statute, or is done to the injury of creditors. While not in a position to know whether the proposition, as stated by the author, is absolutely correct, the cases coming under our consideration bear out the text.

It is the usual contention of those attacking a purchase of stock that when a corporation purchases its own stock the corporate funds are used and appropriated and that no property is received by the corporation except the right to resell. But that objection can amount to nothing but a limitation of the power of the corporation to purchase. If the creditors of the corporation are not injured, and the stockholders consent to the purchase, and the law does not prohibit it, the limitation does not apply, and the corporation will not be sustained in an attempt to evade performance of its contracts of purchase, under a plea of ultra vires. Burnes v. Burnes (C. C.) 132 Fed. 485; In re Castle Braid Co. (D. C.) 145 Fed. 224; State Life Ins. Co. v. Nelson, 46 Ind. App. 137, 92 N. E. 2. In the federal case last cited, in order to restore peace in the management of the affairs of the corporation and to get rid of vexatious litigation among the directors and officers, certain stock of the corporation was bought by it, which makes it very similar in its facts to this case. The federal District Court held the purchase legal, the corporation being solvent and no creditor objecting. In this connection we call attention to the note to Commercial Bank v. Burch, 141 Ill. 519, 31 N. E. 420, as reported in 33 Am. St. Rep. 331, where there is a review of the authorities on the subject.

[3] There was evidence that justified a finding that the corporation was solvent and the stock at par when it purchased the stock. Appellee testified: "When I sold out I was under the impression that, instead of a loss, the books showed the book value of this stock was worth 100 cents on the dollar. That is what I am testifying to. I think when we took that $12,000, the time before we sold it, when we sold out the stock was worth more at that time, that $12,000 was worth more, is my recollection, I think at the time I sold out that $12,000 was worth dollar for dollar. * * * My impression is that at the time when we sold out the stock the stock was worth 100 cents on the dollar." That statement was contradicted by Jeffers, the president of the corporation, but afterwards he testified that, a short time before the corporation bought the stock, he had bought stock at par, and that Spencer had, about the time of the corporation's purchase, bought stock from Birkhead and Brownlee, and it was shown that such stock was sold at par. It is true that Jeffers swore that there had been an actual loss in the business, but he made statements showing that the corporation had ample means to pay all of its debts when the stock was bought.

[4] Failure to pay debts and insolvency are different matters, for, however much a person may owe, if he has means or property sufficient to pay his debts, he is not "insolvent," as the term is ordinarily used. The term may have a more restricted meaning in certain instances in bankruptcy proceedings (Toof v. Martin, 80 U. S. 40, 20 L. Ed. 481), but in this connection it must be used in the general sense of the insufficiency of the entire property and assets to pay the debts of the corporation. There was no testimony tending to show that appellant ever contemplated being unable to pay its debts in the ordinary course of business. Internal dissension seemed to be affecting the financial condition of the corporation more than a lack of means, and to remove that dissension and strife the purchase of the stock was made. The record does not show that the debts existing when the purchase was made had not been extinguished.

The case of Reagan Bale Co. v. Heuermann, 149 S. W. 228, decided by this court, and in which a writ of error has been refused by the Supreme Court, is cited as sustaining the position taken by appellant. If the case were similar to this in other respects, the fact that the corporation in that case was insolvent would be sufficient to differentiate it from this case. There can be no conflict in holding that a corporation, without authority to do so, could not issue preferred stock so as to make the rights of the owners superior to the rights of creditors, and in holding that a solvent corporation will be held bound by the purchase of its stock when the contract has been fully executed by the seller. Cook on Corporations is cited to sustain, and does fully sustain, the first proposition, and that author as fully sustains the proposition that subject to certain conditions, hereinbefore mentioned, complaint against the purchase of its own stock by a corporation cannot be sustained. Sections 311, 312, and authorities cited in 6th Ed. As said in the case of Lindsay v. Arlington, 186 Mass. 371, 71 N. E. 797, cited by Cook: "The power of a corporation to purchase its own capital stock is settled, as also is its power to agree with a stockholder that his shares shall be transferred to the corporation under certain circumstances."

In Reese on Ultra Vires, § 120, it is stated that some states in the Union hold that a corporation may, in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, if it acts in good faith, buy its own stock. A number of authorities are cited, among the number Clapp v. Peterson, 104 Ill. 26, and the following was quoted from that decision as the true rule: "Corporations may purchase their own stock in exchange for money or other property, and hold, reissue, or retire the same, provided such act is had in entire good faith, in an exchange of equal value, and is free from all fraud, actual or constructive; this implying that the corporation is neither insolvent nor in process of dissolution, and that the rights of creditors are not thereby injuriously affected." The facts of this case bring it strictly within the terms and spirit of the rule as stated by the Illinois case.

In the case of Barron v. McKinnon (C. C. A.) 196 Fed. 933, cited by appellant, it was held that where national banks have loaned money on their shares of stock, or purchased such shares in violation of section 5201, Rev. Stats. U. S. (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3494), that the bank's title to such stock is good, and the cases of First National Bank of Xenia v. Stewart, 107 U. S. 676, 2 Sup. Ct. 778, 27 L. Ed. 502, and Lantry v. Wallace, 182 U. S. 536, 21 Sup. Ct. 878, 45 L. Ed. 1218, are cited. In the first case cited it was held: "While this section in terms prohibits a banking association from making a loan upon the security of shares of its own stock, it imposes no penalty, either upon the bank or borrower, if a loan upon such security be made. If therefore the prohibition can be urged against the validity of the transaction by any one except the government, it can only be done before the contract is executed, and while the security is still in the hands of the bank." In the other case, Lantry v. Wallace, after reviewing certain cases, the Supreme Court of the United States held: "In view of these decisions it cannot be held that the purchase by the bank of its own shares of stock was void. It was, of course, a matter of which the government by its officers could take cognizance, and it may be that it was a matter of which stockholders having an interest in the proper administration of the affairs of the bank could complain in a proceeding instituted by them to restrain the bank from violating the statute." Those authorities fail to sustain the contentions of appellant in this case.

The case of Gaston & Ayres v. Campbell (Tex. Sup.) 140 S. W. 770, does not sustain the contention of appellant in regard to estoppel, although there are expressions by this court on the question of estoppel in the same case which might be construed to sustain it. The Supreme Court, however, did not agree with the conclusions of this court, but it was held that, "while such a corporation retains the benefits of such a contract, it silently affirms, and must not be permitted to deny, its validity."

We conclude in the language of a recent decision by the Supreme Court of Michigan: "This contract, under the circumstances alleged in complainant's bill, is not ultra vires by reason of defendant purchasing shares of its own stock. A corporation acting in good faith, without objection from stockholders and without prejudice to creditors, may purchase shares of its stock, regardless of the purpose for which it was organized, unless forbidden by statute." Cole v. Realty Co., 169 Mich. 347, 135 N. W. 329. And if that proposition were not sustained by the great weight of authority, appellee having fully performed his part of the contract, no creditor complaining of the purchase of the stock, the corporation having been solvent at the time of the contract, appellant is estopped from denying its liability. If appellant paid more than the market value for the stock, its improvidence would not invalidate the contract, for it obtained appellee's property, and if it did not realize on it appellee should not be held liable for its failure or neglect to realize from the property. The creditors have not complained, and the stockholders actively acquiesced in the purchase.

The corporation in this case was not chartered under the provisions of the act of 1907 (Gen. Laws 1907, p. 309), but under a prior law, and while section 3 of the act may apply to corporations existing at that time, as well as those created thereafter, the facts of this case do not bring it within the purview of that section, because there was no attempt to decrease the capital stock of the corporation, and if there had been it could have no application because no creditor was prejudiced by the purchase of the stock, and the statute does not contain any penalty for its violation. The stock was not retired, but bought for the express purpose of placing it on the market again; the object of the purchase being to rid the corporation of individuals, personæ non grata with the president.

We recognize the fact, forcibly shown by the excellent brief filed by appellant, that there is strong, well-considered authority for the propositions advanced by appellant, but undoubtedly the weight of authority is to the contrary, and we believe that the numerous decisions, by which our opinion in this case is sustained, are more logical and should be followed.

The case of Maryland Trust Co. v. National Mechanics' Bank, 102 Md. 608, 63 Atl. 70, is a strong and well-considered one, and in a case where the shareholders, if not the creditors, are concerned, it would carry weight. In that case, however, not only the corporation but the stockholders were resisting a contract made by the board of directors by which the stock of the Maryland Trust Company was exchanged for the stock of another corporation. In order to carry out that contract, it had been deemed necessary for the trust company to buy its own stock, and that purchase was attacked by the stockholders and the corporation. That fact differentiates that case from this. Much of the Maryland opinion is devoted to a discussion of the rights of the stockholders, which could have no pertinency nor force in a case where every stockholder had agreed to the purchase. No one is complaining in this case except a corporation which is seeking to evade the performance of a contract which has been fully executed by the other contracting party.

The judgment is affirmed.

On Motion for Rehearing.

FLY, C. J. [5] That part of the act of 1907 relating to private corporations, known as article 1152, Revised Civil Statutes of 1911, which authorizes a decrease of the capital stock of any corporation, does not apply to a case like the present. The purchase of the stock by the corporation was not intended to decrease the capital stock, and the shares were not retired, but held with the intent to again sell them. If the corporation had, by the purchase, intended to decrease its capital, it would not have succeeded because there was no compliance with the article, and it might have been compelled to again sell the stock. That statute certainly does not prohibit the purchase of its stock by a corporation, and if it did it does not authorize the corporation to seek to evade its obligations in a case where the party contracting with it has fully performed all he agreed to do, by a plea that it violated the law in making the contract. In Herman on Estoppel, § 1179, it is said: "When a contract has in good faith been fully performed, and nothing remains to be done by the party seeking relief, and all the shareholders have acquiesced in its performance, the plea of ultra vires or mere want of power is not available by the corporation in an action brought against it for not performing its portion of the contract." That language was approved in Railway v. Gentry, 69 Tex. 625, 8 S. W. 98, and in the case of Bond v. Terrell Mfg. Co., 82 Tex. 309, 18 S. W. 691, the Gentry Case is approved. So in 5 Thompson on Corporations, § 6016, it is said: "The great mass of judicial authority seems to be to the effect that where a private corporation has entered into a contract in excess of its granted powers, and has received the fruits or benefits of the contract, and an action is brought against it to enforce the obligation on its part, it is estopped from setting up the defense that it had no power to make it." The text is supported by ample authority, as shown by the cases cited in the footnote. To the same effect are Logan v. Association, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 490, 28 S. W. 141, and Nat. Bank v. Oil

Co., 24 Tex. Civ. App. 645, 60 S. W. 828; Chapman v. Iron Clad Co., 62 N. J. Law, 497, 41 Atl. 690.

In the National Bank Act it is provided that no bank "shall make any loan or discount on the security of the shares of its own capital stock nor be the purchaser or holder of any such shares," except under circumstances named, for its own protection, and in the case of Lantry v. Wallace, 182 U. S. 536, 21 Sup. Ct. 878, 45 L. Ed. 1218, where shares were purchased in open defiance of the law, the highest judicial tribunal in this country held: "In view of these decisions it cannot be held that the purchase by the bank of its own shares of stock was void. It was, of course, a matter of which the government by its officers could take cognizance; and it may be that it was a matter of which stockholders, having an interest in the proper administration of the bank, could complain in a proceeding instituted by them to restrain the bank from violating the statute."

In the case of Crandall v. Lincoln, 52 Conn. 73, 52 Am. Rep. 560, where it was held that the officers of a corporation must restore funds for shares of stock sold by them to a corporation, it was said: "We do not intend to say that under no circumstances can a corporation legally become the owner of its own stock. * * * Nor do we intend to say that a direct purchase would be declared illegal at the instance of a party to the transaction."

Again, in an English case—and English cases usually hold that a corporation cannot purchase its shares of stock—it was held that, where differences had arisen between the company and one of its directors, the company had the authority to purchase the shares. In another English case, Re Balgooley Distillery Co., it was held, it is said with reluctance, that the company did not act ultra vires in selling a quantity of whiskey to one of its shareholders and taking in part payment therefor shares of its stock. Both of the decisions were placed on the ground of the necessity of the corporation. The cases are quoted from in notes under Hall v. Henderson, 61 L. R. A. 621. Those cases have peculiar application to the facts of this case where the shares of stock were bought in order to prevent "great and irreparable loss, if not insolvency" of the corporation. The shares were not "retired or merged," but it was provided in the resolution authorizing their purchase that they should be "resold and reissued under the direction of the board of directors."

In the case of Blalock v. Mfg. Co., 110 N. C. 99, 14 S. E. 501, it was held: "The shares of the capital stock of the defendant corporation were the lawful subject of purchase and sale, might be bought and sold in the market, and, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, it might buy such shares for its own benefit from owners of them, upon such terms as might be agreed upon subject to the rights of its creditors in proper cases to resort to its capital stock, paid and unpaid, as a trust fund out of which they may be entitled to have their debts paid. It is bound by its agreements with persons from whom it may purchase such shares of stock, and they may enforce the same by proper legal remedies, just as they might do in case of like agreements in respect to any other species of property. Hence if it made its promissory note to one of its stockholders for the price, or any part of it, that it agreed to pay him for his shares of stock, he would have his remedy, so far as it is concerned, just as any other creditor would, certainly subject to the possible rights of other creditors against him as a stockholder in some cases wherein he might be liable. If he were not liable to other creditors in some way as a stockholder, he would be on the same footing as such creditors. There is no just reason why he should not be. The defendant corporation is therefore bound to pay the stockholders, respectively, whose shares of stock it bought, the several sums of money it agreed to pay for the same." We think the quotation states the law applicable to the facts of this case, and it is upheld and supported by the weight of American authority. Fremont Carriage Co. v. Thomsen, 65 Neb. 370, 91 N. W. 376; Dock v. Schlichter, 167 Pa. 370, 31 Atl. 656; Farmers' Bank v. Champlain Trans. Co., 18 Vt. 131; Lowe v. Pioneer Threshing Co. (C. C.) 70 Fed. 646; Crandall v. Lincoln, 52 Conn. 73, 52 Am. Rep. 560; New England Trust Co. v. Abbott, 162 Mass. 148, 38 N. E. 432, 27 L. R. A. 271; Marvin v. Anderson, 111 Wis. 387, 87 N. W. 226; Calteaux v. Mueller, 102 Wis. 525, 78 N. W. 1032.

Again, we hold that article 1152 could not affect the contract in this case because appellee was informed by the resolution of the board of directors that there was no intention to decrease the capital stock, but that the shares should be sold, and provision was made for the use of the funds arising therefrom. Up to the time of the consummation of the contract of purchase there was no decrease in the capital stock of the corporation, and appellee had no notice whatever that it was contemplated to decrease the capital stock, if such was in contemplation. But there is nothing that tends to show that any decrease was in contemplation; the sole object apparent being the preservation of the existence of the corporation. Not only American, but English, decisions recognize that such a condition of affairs creates a necessity that would justify a purchase of the shares of stock. While in the light of subsequent events it appears that another person than the one chosen should have been removed from the corporation for its good, still the plan was adopted, and appellee in good faith, with no notice of any design, if such existed, to decrease the capital stock of the corporation, fulfilled his part of the contract, and then had his claim for payment of his promissory note denied him only because of the ill will of the president of the corporation. After bad management, strife, and dissension had lowered the value of his shares, he is met with the demand to pay back what he had already obtained on his shares, and informed that when that is done his worthless shares of stock will be returned. That kind of a proposition has no ring of upright dealing and equity about it.

[8] If there had been no resolution to the effect that the shares of stock should not be merged by the purchase, it is well-settled law that they would not. "When a corporation buys shares of its own capital stock, the capital stock is not reduced by that amount, nor is the stock merged." Cook on Corp. § 314; Vail v. Hamilton, 85 N. Y. 453; Jefferson v. Burford (Ky.) 17 S. W. 855; Commonwealth v. Railroad, 142 Mass. 146, 7 N. E. 716; Ralston v. Bank, 112 Cal. 208, 44 Pac. 476. It follows that the purchase of the shares of stock by appellant did not reduce or decrease its capital stock and the transaction could not be brought within the purview of article 1152.

Speaking on the effect the purchase of its own stock has on the corporation, Clark & Marshall in Private Corporations, § 411, state: "It has been held that a corporation cannot purchase its own shares for the purpose of holding them, on the ground that the purchase by a corporation of its own shares in effect reduces its capital stock to that extent until the shares are reissued. Strictly speaking, however, this is not in any sense a reduction of the capital stock." The same authors state: "When a corporation purchases shares or its own stock, as it may lawfully do under some circumstances, and as it may also do unlawfully, the shares are not thereby merged or extinguished unless such is the intention. If it does not intend to retire the shares, they merely remain in suspension as it were and may be at any time reissued." See, also, section 199.

Machen, in his work on Corporations, while attempting to uphold a contrary doctrine, says: "It must be conceded that a somewhat larger number of the American courts have taken the view that a corporation may, without express statutory authority, purchase its own shares, provided the purchase is entered into bona fide and does not endanger the claims of creditors." Section 628, and long list of authorities in note. The author, however, indorses the English view of the question because it "is supported by the weight of Mr. Morawetz's opinion." This court, however, feels disposed to follow the opinions of a majority of American courts, rather than those of English courts, even though the latter have received the sanction of the writer of a text-book. Yet this author admits that when shares of a corporation are purchased they are only temporarily merged or extinguished. Machen, Corp. § 633.

Even Morawetz, who arrays his opinion against that of a majority of American courts, including that of the Supreme Court of the United States, says: "If shares in a corporation are purchased by the company, they may, unless the contrary be provided, be issued at a subsequent time. Under these circumstances, it is said, the shares do not become merged, but remain temporarily in abeyance and may be sold again by the corporation." In spite of that he contends that "it would be an absurdity to say that a corporation can really hold shares in itself."

In the case of Knickerbocker Co. v. State Board, 74 N. J. Law, 583, 65 Atl. 913, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 885, it was held that shares of stock once issued remain outstanding until retired in the legal manner, and therefore, when a corporation bought its stock, it was not retired or merged.

In the case of Pabst v. Goodrich, 133 Wis. 43, 113 N. W. 398, 14 Ann. Cas. 824, it was held a solvent corporation has the right to purchase and hold its stock, and that such purchase does not amount to a cancellation of such stock. It says further: "A corporation clearly has the right to purchase its stock, keep it alive, and treat it as assets."

[7] Where the owner of stock transfers it directly to the corporation itself, without the intervention of a trustee, the transferee is not released from his liability on the stock, but remains as fully chargeable as though no transfer had been attempted. Cook on Corp. § 251; Machen, Corp. § 631; In re Reciprocity Bank, 22 N. Y. 9; Chrisman v. Independence Mfg. Co., 168 Mo. 634, 68 S. W. 1026; Walters v. Porter, 3 Ga. App. 73, 59 S. E. 452. We cannot see where any question of public policy could arise; no one can be injured by the transfer of the shares of stock.

The motion for rehearing is overruled.

THOMPSON BROS. LUMBER CO. v. TOLER.

1. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 175*)—LOCATION UNDER CERTIFICATE—OPERATION AND EFFECT.

In 1838 a conditional certificate for 640 acres of land was issued to K., and located by him in R. county. An unconditional certificate was afterwards issued to him and located in P. county subsequent to the passage of the act of August 30, 1856 (Laws 1856, c. 145, § 2; Rev. St. 1895, art. 4134). The field notes of the surveys for both locations were duly returned to and filed in the Land Office. Subsequently a duplicate certificate was issued, reciting the loss of the unconditional certificate, and under this certificate the land in controversy was located. There was no evidence of any abandonment of the location in R. county. Held, that the first location exhausted the right of the holder to appropriate public land, and the subsequent locations were void.

2. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 175*)—LOCATION UNDER CERTIFICATE—OPERATION AND EFFECT.

The issuance of such unconditional and duplicate certificates was not a judicial determination of the abandonment of the original location and of the holder's right to make a new location; the right to the unconditional and duplicate certificates not being dependent on the abandonment of the original location.

3. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 175*)—LOCATION UNDER CERTIFICATE—OPERATION AND EFFECT.

Even if the location under the original certificate was abandoned, the location under the duplicate certificate was void, since, that made under the unconditional certificate in P. county being valid, the act of 1856 (Laws 1856, c. 145, § 2; Rev. St. 1895, art. 4134) expressly prohibited the lifting or floating of the certificate and its subsequent location upon other land.

4. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 175*)—LOCATION UNDER CERTIFICATE—OPERATION AND EFFECT.

A location under a land certificate by the administrator of the original holder who had transferred it was not void, but inured to the benefit of the transferee.

Appeal from District Court, Tyler County; W. B. Powell, Judge.

Trespass to try title by the Thompson Bros. Lumber Company against W. C. Toler. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. A. Mooney and J. J. Goodwin, both of Woodville, for appellant. Joe W. Thomas, of Woodville, for appellee.

PLEASANTS, C. J. This is an action of trespass to try title brought by appellants against appellee to recover a tract of 141.5 acres of land in Tyler county, located by virtue of a duplicate certificate issued to George Kisner on February 5, 1861. The defendants answered by general demurrer, general denial, plea of not guilty, and plea of limitation of three years.

The record shows that on August 3, 1838, a conditional certificate for 640 acres of land was issued by the republic of Texas to George Kisner. This certificate was No. 821, and designated class 2. It was returned to the Land Office on August 27, 1851. George Kisner by written transfer of date March 20, 1837, conveyed this certificate and all his rights thereunder to John Bone. This transfer is on file in the General Land Office. On July 31, 1839, the certificate was located on 640 acres of land in Robertson county, and the field notes of the survey, duly certified by the surveyor on August 24, 1839, and by the county surveyor of Robertson county on April 2, 1840, were thereafter returned to the Land Office. An unconditional certificate for 640 acres was issued to George Kisner on December 2, 1850. The administrator of the estate of George Kisner, deceased, located this unconditional certificate on 640 acres of land in Palo Pinto county on May 17, 1857. The field notes of this survey were certified by the surveyor on June 5, 1851, and were returned to and filed in the Land Office on September 12, 1857. The following duplicate certificate issued by Francis M. White, Commissioner, with the indorsements thereon is on file in the General Land Office:

"The Conditional No. 821 Harris Co. Duplicate Certificate. No. 14/97. Class 2nd. Quantity 640 acres. General Land Office. Austin, February 5th, 1861. This is to certify that satisfactory evidence having been produced of the loss of unconditional headright certificate No. 973, class second, issued by the Board of Land Commissioners of Harris County to George Kisner for 640 acres of land, dated the 2nd day of December, 1850. This duplicate therefore will entitle the said George Kisner to all the benefits granted in said Unconditional Headright Certificate. In testimony whereof I hereunto set my hand and affix the impress of the seal of said office the date first above written. Francis M. White, Commissioner. [Seal.]"

(1) "Filed 117 Liberty 2nd Class. 320 acres located in Hardin county. Dup. Uncondi. Cert. 640. Wm. Word, Surveyor of Hardin county. George Kisner. Filed Sept. 5/62."

In March, 1862, the unlocated balance of this duplicate certificate was located on the 141.5 acres of land in controversy. The field notes of this survey were certified by the surveyor on March 4, 1862, and were filed in the Land Office on September 5, 1862. Appellants claim title under John Bone by virtue of this location. It is not shown that a patent was issued upon any of these locations. On May 22, 1907, the land in controversy was sold by the state and patented to Joe W. Thomas. Appellee holds the Thomas title. Upon this state of the evidence the trial court instructed the jury to find a verdict for the defendant, and upon the return of such verdict judgment was rendered in accordance therewith.

Upon this evidence we think the trial court was correct in holding that the location upon the land in controversy under the duplicate certificate did not show title in appellants for the reason that the prior locations under this certificate had exhausted the right of the holder of said duplicate certificate to appropriate public land thereunder.

[1] Prior to the act of August 30, 1856 (Laws 1856, c. 145, § 2; art. 4134 of the Revised Statutes 1895), the right of the holder of a certificate to "lift" or "float" it after it had once been located, and relocate it on other land, seems to have been recognized by our Supreme Court, but that act expressly prohibits the floating of a certificate after location except in cases in which the location was in conflict with a prior survey. After the passage of this act, the owner of a valid land certificate which had been located on unappropriated public domain, the land properly surveyed, and the field notes and certificate returned to and filed in the General Land Office had no right to appropriate other land under that certificate. In such case the owner of the certificate could not abandon the land first located, and acquire other land under the same certificate. Adams v. Railway Co., 70 Tex. 252, 7 S. W. 729. There is nothing in the evidence in this case to show the abandonment of the original location in Robertson county. The original certificate under which this location was made and the field notes of the survey were returned to the Land Office as required by law and said certificate, so far as the record shows, has remained in the Land Office continuously since it was returned there in 1851, and it cannot be presumed, in the absence of any evidence of that fact, that the certificate was withdrawn from the Land Office and lifted or floated prior to the passage of the act before mentioned.

[3] If the evidence was sufficient to show that the original certificate was lifted and the location made thereunder in Robertson county abandoned, the location in Palo Pinto county made after the passage of the act of 1856 appears to have been made in accordance with law and proper returns made to the Land Office. Such being the case, that location exhausted the right of the holder of the certificate to appropriate other public land thereunder, and the subsequent location upon the land in controversy under the duplicate certificate was void.

[4] The fact that the location in Palo Pinto county was made by the administrator of the estate of Klsner when the certificate had been sold by Klsner and the estate had no title thereto did not render the location void, but such location would inure to the benefit of the owner of the certificate, and there is no evidence tending to show that the owner of the certificate did not acquire title to said land under that location.

What we have said disposes of all of the questions presented by appellants' brief. We have not discussed the various assignments of error in detail, but each of them has been duly considered, and none in our opinion should be sustained.

We think the judgment of the court below should be affirmed, and it has been so ordered.

Affirmed.

SMITH v. PIERSON.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Ft. Worth. Nov. 2, 1912. Rehearing Denied Nov. 30, 1912.)

Appeal from District Court, Johnson County; O. L. Lockett, Judge.

Action by T. E. Smith against Jacob Pierson. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Phillips & Bledsoe, of Cleburne, for appellant. W. H. Featherstone, of Ft. Worth, and Walker & Baker, of Cleburne, for appellee.

SPEER, J. T. E. Smith instituted this suit against Jacob Pierson to recover damages for malicious prosecution. Upon the trial the court instructed a verdict for the defendant, and the plaintiff has appealed.

[1, 2] The following statement of the facts will be sufficient for the disposition we have made of the case: Appellant was constable of precinct No. 5, Johnson county, and on February 9, 1911, he filed before the justice of the peace of precinct No. 2, in Hill county, a complaint, charging one Irvin Bridges with an offense. The justice of the peace issued a warrant of arrest, directed to the sheriff or any constable of Johnson county, commanding the arrest of Bridges, which warrant was returnable, on its face, to the justice's court on February 17, 1911. The accused appears not to have been arrested prior to the return day of the warrant, and on that day the justice of the peace entered an order dismissing the prosecution. On the 4th day of March thereafter Smith attempted to execute the warrant, and took the accused, Bridges, into custody. Bridges made complaint and caused the arrest of Constable Smith upon the charge of false imprisonment, and this suit was instituted against Pierson upon the allegation that he had maliciously instigated and caused such arrest. The above facts appear to be undisputed, and, in our judgment, are conclusive in favor of the instruction given. It is immaterial whether appellee was responsible for appellant's arrest or not, and, if so responsible, whether or not he was actuated with malice, if he had probable cause for the institution of such prosecution. There can be no doubt in our minds that probable cause did exist, where the arrest was made after the return day of the warrant, and after the cause in which the warrant issued had been regularly dismissed. The instruction to find for the defendant was therefore proper.

The judgment is affirmed.

TEXAS CENT. R. CO. et al. v. SCOTT & ROBERTSON.

CARRIERS (§ 228*)—CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK—ACTION FOR DAMAGES—PRESUMPTION.

The presumption of negligence against the last carrier, who receives live stock in good condition and subsequently delivers it in a damaged condition, cannot arise where there is affirmative proof that the initial carrier was guilty of negligence sufficient to cause the injury.

Appeal from Eastland County Court.

Action by Scott & Robertson against the Texas Central Railroad Company and the Ft. Worth & Rio Grande Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Judgment affirmed as to the Texas Central Railroad Company, and reversed and rendered as to the Ft. Worth & Rio Grande Railway Company.

See, also, 127 S. W. 849.

Earl Conner and Scott & Breilsford, all of Eastland, and C. H. Yoakum, of Ft. Worth, for appellants. Ed J. Hamner, of Sweetwater, for appellee.

SPEER, J. The judgment of the county court is affirmed as to the appellant Texas Central Railroad Company, since its principal proposition, to the effect that the evidence fails to show negligence upon its line, is not supported by the record. In truth, the only evidence of negligence contained in the entire record, as we read it, is that of this appellant's delay in transporting the cattle from Hico to Dublin.

As to appellant the Ft. Worth & Rio Grande Railway Company, the judgment is reversed, upon the assignment that the court erred in not giving a summary instruction to the jury to return a verdict in its favor. We have carefully read the entire record, and find no evidence whatever of any negligence on the part of this appellant, and in such a state of case it was entitled to demand, as it did, an instruction in its favor. The principle of law that where goods are received for transportation in good condition, and subsequently delivered in a damaged condition, a presumption of negligence arises as against the last carrier, cannot possibly help appellee's case for two reasons: First, a presumption can only be indulged in the absence of testimony accounting for the injury; and, second, when such presumption is indulged, it is against the last carrier. In this case there is no dearth of testimony accounting for the damage, because the proof shows affirmatively that the initial carrier was guilty of negligence sufficient to cause the injury, and it furthermore shows, what we would otherwise judicially know, that Ft. Worth was the terminus of the shipment so far as this appellant is concerned, and that the cattle were delivered in a damaged condition in East St. Louis, Ill. There being proof, then, as to the damages, there cannot arise a presumption of other negligence growing out of the delivery of the cattle in a damaged condition, or, in other words, at a time too late for the proper market.

1. JUDGMENT (§ 106*)—ANSWER—DEFAULT.

The filing of a plea alleging only that the premises sued for were part of the homestead of defendant and his wife, and praying that she be made a party, was not the filing of such answer as would prevent the entry of a judgment by default under Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 1936.

Appeal from District Court, Walker County; S. W. Dean, Judge.

Trespass to try title by the City of Huntsville against W. O. B. Gillaspie. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. O. B. Gillaspie, of Huntsville, in pro. per. Dean, Humphrey & Powell, of Huntsville, for appellee.

McMEANS, J. This is an action of trespass to try title, brought by the city of Huntsville against W. O. B. Gillaspie, to recover the title and possession of certain premises alleged to be a portion of a public street in said city. The defendant was duly served with citation, but, on the appearance day of the next succeeding term of the court, failed to file any answer to the merits, but did file a pleading alleging that the premises in controversy constituted a part of the homestead of himself and his wife, Orine Wynne Gillaspie, and praying that she be made a party defendant. On the call of the appearance docket judgment by default was rendered in favor of plaintiff and against defendant for the land in controversy. On the day following the defendant filed a motion to vacate the default judgment, and at the same time filed his answer setting up many matters of defense to plaintiff's suit. To the motion of appellant to vacate the appellee filed a contest. Upon the issues thus joined the court heard evidence, and upon its conclusion overruled appellant's motion to set aside the judgment by default, on the ground that appellant had not shown a good excuse for his failure to file an answer to the merits in time, and on the further ground that the evidence introduced by appellant did not show that he had a meritorious defense to the suit. From the judgment overruling the motion to set aside the judgment by default appellant has duly prosecuted this appeal.

Upon request of the appellant the trial judge filed his findings of fact, which are as follows:

"(1) Upon the call of the appearance docket on Tuesday, September 26, 1911, no answer or other plea having been filed by the defendant, as required by law, judgment by default was rendered by the court in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant for the premises described in plaintiff's original petition.

"(2) On September 27, 1911, the defendant filed his motion in writing to set aside the judgment by default rendered herein on September 26, 1911, and also filed his original answer on the said 27th day of September, 1911.

"(3) On September 29th plaintiff filed its contest in opposition to said motion to set aside said default judgment, and on said last-named day the court heard evidence upon said motion and contest, and postponed the argument of counsel and further consideration thereon until October 10, 1911, when the matter at issue again came on for further consideration.

"(4) I find from the evidence offered upon said hearing that no legal excuse was shown by the defendant for having failed to appear and plead herein on appearance day, and before the call of the appearance docket and before the rendition of said judgment by default.

"(5) I further find that the defendant has no meritorious defense to the plaintiff's cause of action herein.

"(6) I further find that the defendant has no legal defense to the plaintiff's suit, but that the defendant claims title to the lands in controversy herein solely under the statutes of limitations, and that the defendant is unable to sustain said plea.

"(7) I further find that the defendant has no deed to the land in controversy and no title thereto, unless it be a limitation title, and I find that the defendant has not had, by himself and those under whom he claims, sufficient adverse possession of the premises in controversy to perfect his title thereto under the statutes of limitations.

"(8) I further find that the land in controversy is a part of Burton street, one of the streets of the city of Huntsville, which said street was duly dedicated by the original grantee, P. Gray, and that dedication was accepted by the plaintiff and had been used as a street for many years before the defendant went into possession of the part thereof in controversy herein."

These findings appear to be amply sustained by the facts appearing in the record.

Appellant by his first assignment of error complains that the court erred in rendering judgment against him by default because the defendant then had a plea before the court requesting that Mrs. Gillaspie be made a party defendant, and that the judgment by default should not have been rendered without first considering and acting upon this plea. Appellant contends under this assignment that "a plea to make additional parties is an appearance in the suit, and a judgment by default will not lie until such plea has been disposed of."

[1] The contention of appellant that his plea to make additional parties had been filed prior to the rendition of the judgment by default is in conflict with the first fact finding of the court above set out, but, in the view we take, this conflict is wholly immaterial, and we will not pause to settle it. We think there can be no question that the filing of the plea was not the filing of an answer such as would prevent the entry of a judgment by default. Revised Statutes, art. 1836.

[2] But, however this may be, it is indubitably shown by the record that the plea, even if it was filed before the judgment by default was rendered, was not called to the attention of the court when the case was reached on the call of the appearance docket, and for that reason it was not error to render the judgment by default. It has been so held where an answer to the merits has been filed, but not called to the attention of the court. London Assurance Corp. v. Lee, 66 Tex. 247, 18 S. W. 508; Hopkins v. Donaho, 4 Tex. 336; Peirson v. Burney, 15 Tex. 272; Lytle v. Custead, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 490, 23 S. W. 451.

[3] Even had the appellant filed the plea in question before the judgment by default was rendered, and even though he had called the attention of the court to it, we think the court could have legally rendered the default judgment, because the plea was not an answer to plaintiff's suit, and the appellant's wife, who the plea suggested should be made a party defendant, was not a necessary party to the suit. Jergens v. Schiele, 61 Tex. 255; City of San Antonio v. Berry, 92 Tex. 327, 48 S. W. 496. The assignment is overruled.

[4] As before shown, the appellant on the day following the rendition of the judgment by default filed a motion to set the judgment aside, and at the same time filed an answer to the merits. We think the court in determining whether appellant had a meritorious defense should have looked to the allegations of the answer, and that it was not proper, upon issue joined by appellee's contest, to hear proof to determine whether the allegations of the answer were true, and in that way judge of the merits of the defense set up in the answer, and appellant's assignments raising the point are sustained.

[5] An application to set aside a default judgment must show a valid excuse for failure to plead in time (Foster v. Martin, 20 Tex. 118; Dowell v. Winters, 20 Tex. 793; Clute v. Ewing, 21 Tex. 679; Coffee v. Ball, 49 Tex. 16; Ames Iron Works v. Chinn, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 382, 49 S. W. 665; Nevins v. McKee, 61 Tex. 413; Freeman v. Neyland, 23 Tex. 530; Harn v. Phelps, 65 Tex. 596); and relief against such a judgment will be denied unless the defendant can show not only a valid defense, but some ground of accident, mistake, trust, or fraud which prevented his making such defense. Coffee v. Ball, 49 Tex. 16. It appears that on appearance day the appellant filed a suggestion that his wife was a necessary party to the suit, and then left the courtroom without filing an answer to the merits, expecting that the court would take cognizance of the pleading filed, and would have him called when the case should be reached on the call of the appearance docket, and that no judgment by default would be rendered or other action taken in the case until his plea to make additional parties had been acted on. He says in his brief that these expectations were based upon the immemorial custom of the court, but no such custom was proved. We do not think that the excuse offered was a valid excuse for his failure to answer in time.

[6] The application to reinstate the case was addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and there is nothing in the record indicating that that discretion was abused by the court's refusal to set aside the judgment by default.

[7] Appellant claims that many errors were committed in the trial of the issues to determine whether he had a valid defense to plaintiff's suit, but as these errors, if they were such, could not, in the absence of the failure of appellant to show a valid excuse for not filing his answer in time, result in a reversal they are harmless.

The record discloses no reversible error, and judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

CHICAGO, R. I. & G. RY. CO. v. CARROLL

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Amarillo.
Nov. 9, 1912. Rehearing Denied

1. CARRIERS (§ 373*)—EJECTION OF PASSENGER—CONNECTING CARRIERS.

A railroad company selling a ticket to a passenger for passage over its own line and that of a connecting carrier is not liable for the ejection of the passenger by the connecting carrier on the ground that the ticket was not good on the particular train taken by the passenger, where the agent selling the ticket had no knowledge of a rule of the connecting carrier limiting the train in question to passengers holding a particular form of ticket.

2. CARRIERS (§ 381*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—ACTIONS FOR BREACH.

In an action against two railroad companies for damages for ejecting plaintiff's wife from a certain train, evidence held to show that the employees of the first railroad company, who sold plaintiff a ticket, had no knowledge of the second railroad company's rule that it was not good on that train, and hence to authorize peremptory instruction for that company.

3. CARRIERS (§ 383*)—INSTRUCTIONS—PROVINCE OF COURT.

In an action against a railroad company for damages for ejecting plaintiff's wife from a certain train, where the ticket upon which she attempted to ride, as well as the rules of the railroad company which sold the ticket, were in evidence, it was for the court to declare the legal effect of such written testimony, and whether she was entitled to ride on that given train.

4. CARRIERS (§ 270*)—ACTS OF AGENT—BINDING EFFECT ON PRINCIPAL.

As a principal is bound by the act and contract of his agent made within the scope of his authority, one railroad company which allowed another company to sell tickets over its line is bound to honor a ticket sold by the first company over its line, where the purchaser had no notice of the limitation on the first company's authority.

5. CARRIERS (§ 382*)—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—PERSONAL INJURIES.

In an action by a husband for damages for the wrongful ejecting of his wife from defendant's train, where it appeared that she was alone, save for three small children, and was forced to alight from the train at an early hour in a desolate spot, and was caused inconvenience, humiliation, and annoyance, a verdict of $1,500 was not so large as to indicate passion and prejudice.

Appeal from District Court, Donley County; Jas. N. Browning, Judge.

Action by T. W. Carroll against the Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railway Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Gustavus, Bowman & Jackson, of Amarillo, N. H. Lassiter and Robt. Harrison, both of Ft. Worth, for appellant. A. T. Cole and H. B. White, both of Clarendon, and D. W. Odell, of Ft. Worth, for appellee.

PRESLER, J. This suit was brought by T. W. Carroll against the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company and the Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railway Company to recover damages, alleging in substance that appellee on January 23, 1910, called on the agent of the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company at Clarendon, and requested a first-class ticket for his wife from Clarendon to San Francisco, by way of the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company to Dalhart, and thence by way of the Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railway Company to the city of El Paso; that he stated to the agent that he wanted his wife to travel from Dalhart on the Rock Island train known as the "Golden State Limited," and wished the said transportation for use on that train, and that said agent led appellee to believe and informed him that the ticket was good for passage on that train; that appellee then arranged for Pullman car reservation from Dalhart to San Francisco on this Golden State Limited train, due to leave Dalhart at 3:20 a. m., January 24th, and on January 23d he and his wife and three small children boarded the Ft. Worth & Denver train at Clarendon, and proceeded to Dalhart, where he purchased the Pullman accommodations already reserved to San Francisco, and that about 3:20 a. m. he placed his wife and children on the Pullman car of the Golden State Limited, and left them; that a few minutes later the conductor of the train notified his wife that her ticket was not good for passage on that train, and that she would have to leave it at the town of Tucumcari, and required her to do so at about 5:30 in the morning, where she was detained until the arrival of the next train, which caused her great inconvenience and worry and additional expense in the sum of $20, over her protest that she had a first-class ticket, and was entitled to ride in that train to her journey's end, and notwithstanding she offered to pay him in cash the full amount of the fare to the city of El Paso, and that she was wrongfully compelled by said conductor to leave said car and train at the town of Tucumcari with her children; that said conductor was the agent and servant of said defendant, the Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railway Company, and by said company placed in full charge of said train; that appellee's said wife was not escorted by any gentleman; that she was not experienced in traveling alone, and that by nature she is and was nervous and was unacquainted in the town of Tucumcari; that she was greatly frightened for herself and in behalf of her children by being told that she would have to get off of said train, and after refusal of the conductor to accept cash fare, at being put off the train in a strange place and in the nighttime, it being 5:30 o'clock of the morning; that she is a woman of refinement, and that she suffered great humiliation and shame and mental anguish by being thus wrongfully ejected from said train, and was greatly alarmed, humiliated, and distressed, all of which acts by said conductor were alleged to have occurred while appellee's said wife was on said train on the said Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railway Company, and that said statements to her and the said refusal of the tender made by her occurred while said train was being operated on said line by the agents, servants, and employés of appellant, and that the same train in every particular, together with same employés and operatives, continued to operate said train and remain in full charge, control, and direction thereof until plaintiff was finally ejected therefrom by being told and directed to depart from and leave the same at Tucumcari; that she was a frail, delicate woman, accompanied by three babies, and wholly unable to resist or refrain from doing as she was directed to do, and believed that the commands of said conductor and employés would be enforced by force, if necessary, to secure their execution, and that all of said acts complained of were caused to be done and put in motion by this appellant, the said Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railway Company, its conductors, agents, servants, and employés, and that the same took place on the train on which the appellee's said wife was a passenger, as she had a right to be by virtue of and as the result of the contract alleged to have been made for her transportation on said train; that there was no other available passenger train passing over said railroad in the direction of her journey for about 12 hours; that it became necessary for appellee's wife to seek a hotel; that the morning was cold and dark, and the town of Tucumcari was unlighted, and that appellee's said wife suffered great physical inconvenience, worry, and distress of mind before she reached a hotel and procured rooms; that she was then compelled to board a local train and travel in a day coach without the facilities of travel afforded by Pullman cars, as far as El Paso, and that she was delayed in her journey 48 hours; that she traveled on said Rock Island trains from Tucumcari to El Paso on her said ticket purchased by appellee at Clarendon; that said agent at Clarendon of the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company represented himself to be the agent of the appellant, Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Company, for the purpose of selling said ticket over its line, and did sell the same to appellee, and that said agent was the agent of appellant for the purpose of selling tickets, and had the right and authority so to do, and that said Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company is the authorized agent of appellant for the sale of tickets over its lines and responsible for any breach of contract by said appellant and its connecting lines; that in the sale of said ticket the said appellant and the said Rock Island Company were the agents of the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company, and each was the agent of the other, and prayed for damages in the sum of $2,520 because of the premises.

The Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company answered that plaintiff applied to its agent for tourist or excursion rates to San Francisco, and was advised by its agent that a ticket known as a "summer excursion" ticket could be had, which ticket entitled the owner to first-class passage en route, and he sold such a ticket to the appellee; that this ticket was the usual and ordinary ticket, entitling the holder to first-class transportation, and was the only class or character of ticket that its codefendant had authorized the Ft. Worth & Denver City Company to sell over its line of road, except a through passage ticket which did not entitle the holder to return transportation; that if the appellant the Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railway Company, or its connecting carriers, had made or formulated any special rule or regulation regarding transportation on certain trains or which excluded the holder of the ticket sold appellee from riding on the train known as the "Golden State Limited," no information of such rule or regulation had been given to the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company, and that it was in no wise responsible for the damages claimed.

The Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railway Company, appellants herein, answered by exception that the injury complained of appeared to have taken place within the territory of New Mexico, and upon a line of railway owned and operated by the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company, and not in any wise by the appellant, and denied any consolidation or connection with the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company, except that they were connecting carriers, and specially answered that the ticket sold had printed on it in bold type, the following: "Special excursion to Pacific Coast and reduced rate ticket, good subject to conditions printed below, for one first-class passage to destination," and that it contained, among other provisions, the following: "This ticket is subject to the rules and regulations of each line over which it reads and may be exchanged in whole or in part for a ticket or check in conformity therewith," and another as follows: "In consideration of the reduced rate at which this ticket is sold, I, the original purchaser, hereby agree to accept and be governed by all of the conditions of this contract;" that the Golden State Limited was a limited train, operated out of Chicago to the Pacific Coast, via a number of lines of railway which are connecting carriers, it being handled by this appellant over its line of railway from the state line between Texas and Oklahoma, at Texhoma, to the state line between Texas and New Mexico, at Bravo, and that it carried only special equipment, and was operated exclusively for the commodious and rapid transportation of through passengers; that the different lines operating it had prescribed and had in force at the time of the occurrence alleged in appellee's petition reasonable regulations covering the operation of this train and the character of the tickets that would be honored on it, and that among those regulations was this rule: "The following class of transportation will not be honored on this train: Passes of all kinds (except division superintendents on their respective divisions), tickets of any class endorsed, punched or printed 'Special rate,' 'Special,' 'Employee' (except as allowed in Rule 7), 'Charity,' 'Advertising,' 'D. V. S.' or 'Clergy' (except as authorized in Rule 7), 'Homeseekers' Tickets,' 'Emigrant Ticket,' 'Drovers' Tickets,' 'Stock Contracts,' 'Editorial Mileage,' and all tickets endorsed 'Not good on Golden State Limited,' or 'Not good on limited trains,' second-class tickets (except in Tourist Sleeper as permitted by Rule 7)." Appellant further pleaded that the ticket held by appellee's wife was one for special excursion, and a reduced rate ticket, and could not on account of the above regulation and rule be honored on this train. It was averred that the defendant operated over its line of railway sufficient passenger trains other than the Golden State Limited for the accommodation of passengers, there being in service at that time two local trains per day each way, and that the rules and regulations applying to the Golden State Limited train were just and reasonable.

The allegations in appellee's petition to the effect that the line of railway extending from the Texas state line to Tucumcari was a mere continuation of, and was virtually the same line of railway as that owned and operated by the appellant in Texas, were specially denied, and it was specially averred that the defendant was the owner of a line of railway running from Texhoma to Bravo, within the state of Texas, and that the line from Bravo to Tucumcari in New Mexico was owned and operated by the Chicago, Rock Island & El Paso Railway Company which was incorporated under the laws of the territory of New Mexico, and this appellant was only a connecting carrier with that company, and was not a partner with it or with any other railway company as to the transportation of the appellee's wife; and it was specially denied that the conductor in charge of the train after it left this appellant's line of road was an employé of this appellant, but it was averred, on the contrary, that he was at that time an employé of the next connecting line, and acting for it, and not for this defendant. It was further pleaded that if it should be found that the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company was the agent of the Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railway Company in selling the ticket, and that there was fault or negligence in selling such a ticket in the way it was sold, and without giving the plaintiff proper advice as to whether it would be good on the Golden State Limited, this was the fault or negligence of the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company, and this appellant was entitled to a judgment over against it for whatever, if any, amount was recovered by the appellee against this appellant.

On trial before a jury a verdict was had in favor of appellee against the Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railway Company for the sum of $1,500 and also in favor of the Ft. Worth & Denver Company, the latter under peremptory instruction from the court, on which verdict judgment was accordingly entered, and appellant, the Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railway Company, has duly appealed to this court, and asks to have said judgment reversed because of errors assigned.

Appellant's first four assignments complain of the admission of certain evidence as prejudicial to appellant and improperly admitted. Upon due consideration of the same we are of the opinion that no reversible error is presented under said assignments, and the same are disallowed.

[1, 2] Under its fifth assignment, appellant complains of the action of the court in giving peremptory instruction to the jury to return a verdict for the defendant, the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company, contending that it was error on the part of the court to so instruct a verdict because this appellant contended and proved that the ticket was not good for passage on the Golden State Limited, and that, if a verdict could be found against appellant at all, it could be only on the theory that the Ft. Worth & Denver City Company was its agent, and was negligent in issuing the ticket in question and representing it to be good for passage on the Golden State Limited, and that, in such event, appellant would have a right of recovery over against the Ft. Worth & Denver City Company. We are of the opinion that the instruction was properly given, it appearing from the undisputed evidence that appellant's said agent, the Ft. Worth & Denver Company, at the time of the sale of said ticket and the contract made with appellee, had no notice of any rule by appellant or any of its connecting carriers, restricting said ticket to any particular train, and it would in our opinion be unreasonable to hold the said agent, the Ft. Worth & Denver City Company, charged with notice of said private rules and regulations promulgated by and between appellant and its connecting carriers in the operation of their special trains, when no knowledge of the same had been conveyed to such agent. On the issue of the Ft. Worth & Denver Company's agency and its want of notice of the rules and restrictions applying to this particular train, W. H. Card, chief rate clerk of the passenger department for the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company, testified as follows: "I reside in Ft. Worth, Texas, and am chief rate clerk of the passenger department for the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company. I have been engaged in that department since 1888, a good part of the time as rate clerk. The ticket submitted to me is known as an 'all year tourist ticket.' It is a first-class ticket. There was a tariff arrangement existing between the Denver and the Rock Island as well as all other roads for sale of tickets which is embraced in the joint tariff of all Texas lines. This tariff is printed and distributed to the agents, and has been in force for six years. I have here a printed copy of the tariff. It is filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, is furnished to all agents, and constitutes an agreement between them for the sale of coupon tickets over connecting lines. We had no notice of any rule by the Rock Island Road restricting this ticket to any particular train. We have never been advised of any restriction. The passenger department of the Denver has received no notice of any restriction. If any notice had been given, it would have been to the passenger department. This is the department I represent. If this department had had any notice, I would certainly have known of it."

C. H. Wisdom, station agent for the said Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company at Clarendon, testified as follows: "I live at Clarendon, and am station agent for the Ft. Worth & Denver, and was last year. I remember the circumstance of selling Dr. Carroll a ticket for his wife to California. That was in January, 1910. The conversation with him in reference to the purchase of the ticket was that Dr. Carroll asked for a rate to California and return, and also for the time of the train, and when it left Clarendon and Dalhart, and when they arrived at Los Angeles and San Francisco. I told him the rate would be $87.25 for the round trip. I don't know that the name of the ticket was discussed, and I don't think he asked about the class of the ticket. The only rate we had was $87.25 which I got from the tariff. It was for the all-year tourist, and we had authority from the tariff to sell that ticket over the Rock Island. He said he wanted the ticket, and something was said about his wife going on a particular train. He said that he wanted her to take the Golden State Limited out of Dalhart, and I sold him the ticket, and he had no advice that it was not good on that train, and there was nothing in the tariff to show that it was not good. The Rock Island was a party to the tariff, and it shows routing over that line. No, sir; there was no class of tickets that I could sell at that time other than this ticket, except a straight rate ticket for the round trip. There was no summer rate ticket on sale at that time. I never had any notice of any rule or regulation restricting transportation over the Golden State Limited up to that time."

The witness W. H. Card also testified that: "The summer tourist rate goes into effect June 1st, and lasts until September 30th. There is a difference between summer tourist rate and the all-year rate. The all-year rate is a higher rate. The tariff shows that the amount charged for the ticket in this case was greater than for a summer tourist ticket. The contracts for an all-year tourist ticket and a summer tourist ticket read practically alike. The rate has nothing to do with the grade of the contract, both are first-class tickets—the all-year being more expensive on account of the limit." He further testified: "Well, there is some difference between the contracts. Possibly more clauses in the all-year contract than in the summer contract, but no difference as to how they shall be honored. Yes; I have here one of the forms for the all-year tourist tickets which we desire our agents to sell. The form used by the agent in this case was not that form, an A. Y. C. form. He used a summer tourist ticket and marked it 'all year tourist,' but the form practically had no bearing on the ticket. The all-year tourist form states that it is a first-class ticket without referring to any conditions whatever. I do not know that the all-year tourist form has any indorsement on it that it is a special or reduced rate. This is a Pacific Coast, nine months tourist ticket. It contains no statement that it is a special or reduced rate ticket more than the word 'tourist,' which would indicate that it was sold at a reduced rate; the word 'tourist' being the only thing indicating this."

It fully appears from the evidence that appellee applied to appellant's agent at Clarendon for a ticket affording his wife transportation from Clarendon to California over appellant's line of railway, and on a train known as the "Golden State Limited"; that said agent of appellant sold him the highest priced round-trip ticket over said route that he had, with the assurance that it would secure him transportation on the train desired; and that said agent did this without notice as to any rule or restriction in force prohibiting appellee's use and passage on said Golden State Limited, or any restriction as to what trains he should use at all, and it appears to us that appellant was in default and neglected its duty to its said agent, the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company, in not informing it of the promulgation and enforcement of said rule, which appears to have been promulgated on January 2d, and the sale of the ticket in question made on January 23, 1910. Therefore, if it be conceded that the trouble resulting in appellee's wife being required to leave the train and subjected to the injuries complained of was caused by a mistake of said agent in selling appellee the wrong ticket, as stated above, it fully appears that said mistake was caused by appellant's negligence in not giving to its said agent, the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company, due notice and necessary information to govern it in the sale of tickets over appellant's route and trains. We therefore conclude, as above indicated, that the assignment in question is without merit, and that the trial court properly gave the peremptory instruction complained of.

[3, 4] Appellant, under its sixth assignment of error, contends that it was error for the court to instruct the jury that the ticket entitled the plaintiff's wife to travel on the Golden State Limited train, because this depended on whether or not the railway companies had in force a reasonable rule prohibiting passengers holding such a ticket from riding on that train, and that this was a question of fact, to be determined by the jury. The second paragraph of the court's charge thus objected to reads as follows: "The law makes it the duty and province of the court to construe, and inform the jury in its charge, the legal effect of the contract, rules, and any other written evidence bearing thereon, introduced as evidence in the case. I therefore charge you that the railroad ticket offered in evidence before you was such an one as entitled the plaintiff's wife to travel as a passenger over the Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railway Company's line and its connecting lines on the train known as the 'Golden State Limited' to the end of her journey as indicated by the ticket. Now, if you believe from a preponderance of the testimony that, while a passenger on said Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railway Company's line of road at the time alleged by plaintiff, the conductor in charge thereof informed plaintiff's wife that she could not ride thereon, and would be required to leave the same at Tucumcari, N. M., and by his words and acts knowingly and intentionally caused her to believe that she would be compelled to leave said train, and by such means did cause her to leave and abandon such train, and was damaged thereby, as alleged by plaintiff, you will find for the plaintiff against said Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railway Company, and assess the damages as hereinafter directed." We are of the opinion that there is no error in the charge complained of, that the law made it the duty of the court to construe and inform the jury in its charge as to the legal effect of the contract, rules, and other written evidence bearing thereon, introduced in evidence, and that the ticket offered, together with the evidence as to the facts attending its sale, warranted the instruction given by the court to the effect that the ticket entitled appellee's wife to travel as a passenger over the Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railway Company and its connecting lines on the train known as the Golden State Limited, to the end of her journey, as indicated by the ticket. It is a fundamental principle of the law of principal and agent that the principal is bound by the act and contract of the agent made within the scope of his apparent authority. In this case it appears from the uncontroverted testimony that the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company was the agent of appellant for the sale of tickets for transportation over appellant's lines of railway, and as such agent sold appellee the ticket to pass appellee's wife over appellant's said lines of railway on what was known as the Golden State Limited train. It was the duty of the court to charge the jury as shown in the paragraph complained of. In the case of Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Ry. Co. v. Moore, 98 Tex. 302, 83 S. W. 362, 4 Ann. Cas. 770, the Supreme Court of this state held that: "When at the time plaintiff bought his ticket there was an express agreement between him and defendant's agent that he might travel to Venus on the train which he took, action will lie for his being put off before arriving at Venus on the ground that the train did not stop at that station." In that suit plaintiff alleged that at the time he bought the ticket from defendant's agent at Berwyn, Okl., for Venus, Tex., that the agent contracted with him to carry him on defendant's first train to Cleburne, Tex., and from Cleburne to Venus, on the first train of defendant after plaintiff reached Cleburne, and the evidence showed that plaintiff reached Cleburne on defendant's train and took passage on the first train that left Cleburne for Venus. Defendant's conductor put plaintiff off at Alvarado, a station between Cleburne and Venus. Defendant pleaded that the train was a through train, and did not stop at Venus, and that two accommodation trains ran from Cleburne to Dallas via Venus on defendant's line each day. In the case before us it may be conceded that had appellee known that appellant's agent, the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company, had no authority to make the contract made with him for the transportation of his wife, over appellant's line of railway on the Golden State Limited train, that appellant and its connecting lines of railway would not have been bound by said contract, but it fully appears from the evidence that, when appellant's agent at Clarendon sold appellee the ticket, he had no knowledge that said agent was without authority to make such a contract. The assignments are therefore overruled. H. & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Hill, 63 Tex. 384, 51 Am. Rep. 642; G. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Moore, 98 Tex. 302, 83 S. W. 362; 4 Ann. Cas. 770. Appellant, under a number of assignments, complains of the action of the court in refusing to give certain special charges requested by appellant. We are of the opinion that as said special charges either submitted instructions which were inconsistent with and contradictory of the instructions contained in paragraph 1 and 2 of the court's general charge, hereinbefore considered, or submitted incorrect propositions of law as applied to the facts in this case, that said special charges were correctly refused.

[5] The only question presented under appellant's remaining assignments that we deem necessary to be here discussed is the contention made under its nineteenth assignment, that the verdict rendered was excessive. In view of the evidence of appellee's wife as to the delays, annoyance, and distress to which she was subjected by appellant, we do not think the amount of the verdict excessive. As stated by the Court of Civil Appeals in the case of Houston & T. C. Railway Co. v. Berling, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 544, 37 S. W. 1086: "That the verdict may be large may be conceded, but we are unable to say under decisions heretofore rendered and approved by this and the Supreme Court that the verdict is excessive. * * * Large discretion is confided the jury in fixing the amount of damages, and unless the amount be so great, considered in reference to the evidence, as to make it probable at least that the verdict was the result of passion, it should not be disturbed." It appears to us that compensation for the character of injuries complained of in this case, such as alarm, uneasiness of mind, and humiliation, growing out of the treatment to which appellee's wife was subjected and arising from the situation and conditions in which she was placed, fall more properly within the province of the jury than of this court, and, as stated in the opinion quoted from, unless we were afforded some evidence tending to show that the finding of the jury as to the amount awarded was the result of passion or prejudice, we do not feel warranted in disturbing said verdict, which in this case was rendered for $1,500.

Finding no reversible error assigned under either of appellant's assignments, we conclude that the same should be overruled and the judgment appealed from in all respects affirmed, and it is accordingly so ordered.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Dallas.
Nov. 23, 1912. Rehearing Denied

1. JUDGMENT (§ 419*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT— VALIDITY.

A default judgment based on the allegation that defendant was a corporation when in fact it was a copartnership, none of its members being parties, and service having been had on a certain person as agent of the alleged corporation, did not bind the partnership and enforcement of the judgment was properly enjoined on the theory that it was a nullity.

2. SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM (§ 13*)—SUIT TO ENJOIN ENFORCEMENT—CROSS-ACTION.

In an action by a partnership to enjoin collection of a default judgment taken against it as a corporation, defendant could file a cross-action for any debt owing by the partnership.

Appeal from Van Zandt County Court; C. L. Stanford, Judge.

Action by the Spaulding Manufacturing Company against B. H. Kuykendall and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Partly reversed and rendered, and partly reversed and remanded.

L. Davidson, of Canton, for appellant. T. B. Yantis, of Canton, for appellees.

RAINEY, C. J. [1] In 1911 a judgment was rendered by the county court of Van Zandt county in cause No. 1638 in favor of B. H. Kuykendall against the Spaulding Manufacturing Company. The petition alleged said company to be a foreign corporation and sought a recovery for a personal debt. The citation in said suit commanded the summons of said company, or its agent, J. E. Bayer, at Texarkana, Tex. No appearance was made, and judgment by default was rendered against said company for $243 and costs, and reciting regular service in conformity with law. An execution was issued by virtue of said judgment and levied upon property of appellant, the Spaulding Manufacturing Company, a copartnership, the members of which reside in the state of Iowa. On January 30, 1912, appellant instituted in the county court of said county this injunction proceeding to restrain the enforcement of said judgment in cause No. 1638, alleging, in effect, that it is not a corporation and never has been, the want of proper service on which to base a judgment by default, etc. Defendant answered by pleas as to the validity of the judgment in cause No. 1638, and further set up and sought a recovery for an indebtedness due him by appellant. The court dissolved the temporary injunction theretofore granted, and rendered judgment against appellant and the sureties on the injunction bond for the amount of appellee's claim.

The appellant was never a corporation, and was, at the time the judgment in suit No. 1638 was rendered, a copartnership living and doing business as such in the state of Iowa. In said suit No. 1638, the members constituting said copartnership were not made parties, nor was there service of citation upon either of its members, and there was no waiver nor appearance by either of them in said suit. Service of citation was made on J. E. Bayer as agent.

The judgment in cause No. 1638 being based on the allegation that appellant was a corporation, when in fact it was a copartnership, none of its members being parties, service on J. E. Bayer, an agent, was not sufficient to bind appellant, and said judgment was a nullity and of no binding force on appellant whatever. The county court of Van Zandt county acquired no jurisdiction of appellant, and the judgment in cause No. 1638 was null and void. The court erred in dissolving the temporary injunction, but said injunction should have been perpetuated. Scott v. Streepy, 73 Tex. 547, 11 S. W. 532; Graham v. Land Co., 50 S. W. 579; Railway Co. v. Rawlins, 80 Tex. 579, 16 S. W. 430; Railway Co. v. Skeeter Bros.

44 Tex. Civ. App. 105, 98 S. W. 1064. Other authorities could be cited to sustain our position, but we think it is too well settled for it to be necessary. It was improper for the court to render judgment against the sureties on appellant's injunction bond, as the injunction should have been perpetuated and therefore there was, under the facts, no liability on the bond.

[2] The appellee had the right to file a cross-action for his debt, if any existed, against appellant. The appellee did file such cross-action, but it seems the court did not base his judgment on said cross-action, but upon the judgment in cause No. 1638, which was sought to be enjoined, which was error.

The judgment will be reversed and here rendered for appellant and sureties perpetuating said injunction, and reversed and remanded for a new trial on appellee's cross-action for debt.

Reversed and rendered in part, and reversed and remanded in part.

Appeal from District Court, Rains County; R. L. Porter, Judge.

Action by B. M. McMahan against G. A. Morgan. Judgment dissolving a temporary injunction, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. S. Sherrill, of Greenville, for appellant. Carter & Hunt, of Emory, for appellee.

RAINEY, C. J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the district court dissolving a temporary injunction which was granted to restrain the collection of certain state and county taxes assessed against appellant, and the sale of certain personal property of appellant valued at $4,500, levied on to pay said taxes.

[1] There was no proof that said taxes were not due and owing by the appellant. It was incumbent upon plaintiff to establish this fact in order to recover.

[2] The fact that the property levied on was excessive will not avail appellant.

[3] It is a familiar legal maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity. As appellant had not paid the taxes nor offered to pay them, he was in no position to seek equity from a court of justice.

The judgment is affirmed.

NATIONAL BANK OF DENISON v. COLEMAN et al.

1. HIGHWAYS (§ 113*)—CONSTRUCTION—CONTRACTORS—ASSIGNMENT—INSTRUMENTS.

A contractor for the construction of roads for a county, who executed an instrument directing the payment to a bank of moneys due, or to become due, under the contract, and directing the issuance of warrants direct to the bank until the assignment is canceled by notice from the bank, and declaring that the estimates and moneys due thereunder are assigned as collateral to an existing debt, or any debts that may be subsequently incurred, thereby assigned to the bank all the funds due him to the extent of the bank's claim, subject to any legal claim of the county.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. §§ 348-350, 355; Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

2. HIGHWAYS (§ 113*)—CONTRACTORS—ASSIGNMENT OF FUNDS DUE OR TO BECOME DUE—EFFECT.

A contract for the construction of roads for a county bound the contractor to pay materialmen and laborers and provided that, on his failure to do so, the county could retain from subsequent estimates and pay the materialmen and laborers such sums of money as might from time to time be due, and apply the percentage retained by the county out of the estimates to their payment. The contractor assigned to a bank the money due or to become due under the contract and directed the issuance of warrants direct to the bank. The commissioners' court permitted the assignment to be filed by the clerk and indorsed by the county auditor without objection or intimating that the court would exercise its option to pay the claims of materialmen and laborers. Held, that the county was estopped from exercising the option, and the bank was entitled to the funds due the contractor.

3. HIGHWAYS (§ 113*)—CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS—RIGHTS OF MATERIALMEN AND LABORERS.

Laborers and materialmen of a contractor under contract to construct a road could not compel performance of the stipulation that the contractor should pay the materialmen and laborers, and on his failure to do so the county could retain from subsequent estimates and pay the materialmen and laborers money due them from time to time, and could apply to the payment of such claims the percentages retained out of monthly estimates due the contractor; the county being under no obligation to them.

Appeal from District Court, Grayson County; B. L. Jones, Judge.

Suit by F. G. Coleman against the Commissioners' Court and County Auditor of Grayson County, in which the National Bank of Denison intervened, and the parties in interest were made parties to the suit. From an adverse judgment, the National Bank of Denison appeals. Reversed and rendered.

J. H. Wood, of Sherman, and Jas. P. Haven, of Denison, for appellant. Head, Smith, Hare & Head, McReynolds & Hay, and Abney & Hassell, all of Sherman, and J. T. Suggs, J. H. Randell, and Decker & Finley, all of Denison, for appellees.

RAINEY, C. J. In August, 1910, Grayson county entered into a contract with Dennis McNerney for the construction of certain roads for the building of which "Good Road District No. 1," in which Denison is situated, had voted bonds. Among the provisions of said contract, and there are many, the following only is pertinent to this controversy, viz.: "The contractor shall promptly pay all materialmen, laborers and other employes, and in the event of his failure at any time so to do, the county may retain from all subsequent estimates and pay over to said materialmen, laborers, and all other persons engaged upon the work, such sums of money as may from time to time be due to them, and receipts for moneys so paid shall be accepted by the contractor, as cash payment to himself by the county. * * * The percentages retained by the county out of monthly estimates due the contractor from the county may be used and applied by the county to the payment of subcontractors, materialmen, laborers, and all other persons employed upon the work or who may be entitled to liens against the property of the county as security for payment of their claims."

McNerney began the construction of said roads in accordance with his contract. On October 10, 1910, in order to finance same, he executed his note to the National Bank of Denison for $2,500, payable on demand, for money borrowed, and on same day, to secure the payment of his said note and other moneys that might be advanced by said bank, he executed to said bank a written assignment of all money that might be due him by said county on said contract. Said assignment is as follows:

"Denison, Texas, October 10th, 1910. Julian C. Feild, Esqr., Engineer, Road District No. 1, Denison, Tex.—Dear Sir: You are hereby authorized and directed to pay over to the National Bank of Denison, Texas, any and all moneys now due or to hereafter become due me as contractor for the construction of the roads in Road District No. 1, said estimates and moneys due thereunder being this day assigned to the said bank as collateral security to our existing indebtedness, or any indebtedness that may hereafter be incurred by me to the said bank, and you are further authorized and instructed to issue warrants direct to the said National Bank of Denison, Denison, Texas, in payment of any and all of such estimates until this assignment is cancelled by written notice from said bank. Witness my hand this day and date above written. Executed in triplicate. Dennis McNerney.

"Witness: A. J. Wells. P. J. McNerney."

Said assignment was delivered to Julian C. Feild, who was at said time the civil engineer in the employ of the county for the supervision of the work. On the 11th of October, said Julian C. Feild presented said assignment to the commissioners' court of Grayson county, who were then assembled in session, all members of the same being present. The county judge and all members of the court read the assignment, asked Mr. Feild if the appellant was going to finance Mr. McNerney in the building of the roads, and, being answered in the affirmative, said assignment was handed to the county clerk who put his file mark thereon, and it was then presented to H. R. Wallace, the county auditor, and he indorsed thereon the following memorandum: "Order for Dennis McNerney money to be paid to the National Bank of Denison, Texas." Said assignment was then placed by the county auditor with the other papers relating to said road contract. At the time of the filing of the assignment, the commissioners' court, with the approval of the county auditor, had already issued a warrant to said Dennis McNerney for work done on said roads on an estimate of said engineer for September, 1910, in the sum of $705.92. This warrant was by said county auditor delivered to Mr. Feild after the filing of said assignment, and by Mr. Feild delivered to appellant, and the said amount was by appellant credited on the note then due it by Dennis McNerney on October 12, 1910. On October 25, 1910, Dennis McNerney executed to appellant another note in the sum of $2,500 of like terms and conditions as the one executed on October 10, 1910. The amounts received on said notes were by the said Dennis McNerney put on deposit to his credit in the appellant bank, and the same, together with $237 additional as an overdraft, were checked out by the said Dennis McNerney for labor and material on the roads prior to the time he abandoned the contract and left the state. On November 8, 1910, McNerney abandoned the contract and left the state largely indebted. On the 14th of November, 1910, R. S. Legate, cashier of the appellant bank, appeared before the commissioners' court in open session, made oral demand of the commissioners' court for the payment of the funds due by Grayson county to Dennis McNerney to appellant by virtue of its assignment of the fund, and also on said date filed a written request with H. R. Wallace, auditor of the county, demanding payment of its indebtedness of the funds due Dennis McNerney by Grayson county by virtue of said assignment. About the 16th of November, 1910, McNerney came into Grayson county and met the members of the commissioners' court, and thereafter, on November 19, 1910, it entered the following order: "McNerney Labor Scrip. It is hereby ordered by the court that warrants be drawn out of Road District No. 1 fund to McNerney laborers, as furnished in name and amount by their engineer Wells." The clerk of the commissioners' court began the issuance of warrants by virtue of said order, and on November 21, 1910, F. G. Coleman, claiming the right to be paid out of said fund as a materialman, sued out and had served an injunction restraining the commissioners' court and the county auditor from paying out said funds until his claim could be adjudicated. On November 22, 1910, the commissioners' court entered an order countermanding the order entered on November 19, 1910, for the payment of the warrants to the laborers. The county filed its answer in the Coleman suit, claiming only to be a stakeholder of the fund, and asked the court to direct to whom it should be paid.

Appellant intervened in the suit, claiming its prior right to be paid out of the fund, and making all laborers and materialmen and other persons within its knowledge parties to the suit. All parties interested, as far as known, were before the court. The only issues submitted to the jury were those arising between the respective claims of the appellant bank and the laborers and materialmen. The court peremptorily instructed the jury to find for the laborers as against the appellant bank and the materialmen, and submitted the issue between the appellant bank and materialmen, in substance, that, if the commissioners' court accepted the assignment executed by McNerney to the bank, the appellant's debt should have priority over the materialmen, but otherwise that the materialmen should be paid in preference to appellant. The jury found in behalf of the materialmen. The county having answered that it was only a stakeholder of the fund and making no claim of right to pay the fund in settlement of the claims of laborers and materialmen, the controlling question for our decision is, Was the appellant's right to have its indebtedness paid out of the fund inferior to that of the laborers and materialmen?

[1] The instrument executed by McNerney to appellant bank constituted an assignment of all the funds due him by the county for constructing the road to the extent of the bank's claim, subject, of course, to any legal claim the county might have. Harris Co. v. Campbell, 68 Tex. 22, 3 S. W. 243, 2 Am. St. Rep. 467; Clark v. Gillespie, 70 Tex. 513, 8 S. W. 121; McBride v. Am. R. & L. Co., 127 S. W. 233; Beilharz v. Illingsworth, 132 S. W. 106; Lumber Co. v. Smith, recent opinion by this court, yet unpublished.

[2] By the terms of the contract made between the county and McNerney, the county had the right to pay off and discharge the claims of laborers and materialmen had it seen proper to exercise its option so to do. But it failed to exercise this option until after it was notified of the assignment of the fund to the bank. The commissioners' court in open session, all members being present when said assignment was presented, permitted it to be filed by the clerk and indorsed by the county auditor, as heretofore stated. There was no objection made at that time to the assignment, nor any intimation from any member of the court that it would exercise its option under the contract to pay the claims of the laborers and materialmen. Under these circumstances, we think the county is estopped from claiming said option, even if it were attempting in this suit to exercise it.

[3] It is not claiming such a right; but the claim, as we understand it, is made by the laborers and materialmen that they have the right, under said provision of the contract, to enforce said contract in their behalf. They were not parties to the contract between McNerney and the county. Under it they had no right of action to compel its performance to protect their interest for labor performed and material furnished. The county, by the terms of the contract, was under no obligation to them.

[4] The construction of the roads was public work, and they had no lien for their labor and material furnished (Atascosa Co. v. Angus, 83 Tex. 202, 18 S. W. 563, 29 Am. St. Rep. 637; City of Dallas v. Loonie, 83 Tex. 291, 18 S. W. 726), and no way is prescribed by law to fix any liability on the county for the payment of their claims, nor was any attempted.

Many assignments of error and cross-assignments are presented, but, under our view of the case, they do not affect the right of appellant to recover, as shown by the evidence, and the judgment as to it will be reversed and here rendered for it, and after the payment of its claim, if there remains any of the funds, it will be apportioned to the other claimants according to priority of their claims as fixed by the judgment of the lower court.

POLK v. STATE MUT. FIRE INS. CO.

1. INSURANCE (§ 219*)—CANCELLATION OR RESCISSION OF POLICY—NONPAYMENT OF PREMIUM.

Where a policy of fire insurance was never accepted by the insured or by any one for him, and no premium was paid or agreed to be paid thereon prior to the loss, an assignee, with knowledge that the delivery of the policy was unauthorized and that on failure to pay premiums it was automatically canceled, was not entitled to recover.

Appeal from District Court, Dallas County; Kenneth Foree, Judge.

Action by W. A. Polk against the State Mutual Fire Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George Sargeant and Cecil L. Simpson, of Dallas, for appellant. W. S. Terrell, of Dallas, and T. F. Mangum and R. F. Townsend, both of San Antonio, for appellee.

RASBURY, J. The appellant sued appellee in the district court of Dallas county upon a policy of fire insurance for $2,000 issued by appellee October 24, 1911, and written upon a stock of staple and fancy groceries contained in the storehouse of H. F. Davis situated at No. 1612 North Second avenue in the city of Dallas, Tex. Appellant alleged that the stock of merchandise covered by said policy was totally destroyed by fire October 30, 1911, and at the time of the fire was of the value of $2,000; that subsequent to the fire the policy and all rights thereunder were assigned to appellant, who thereafter performed all the conditions of the policy preliminary to his right to demand payment of the loss thereunder; and that payment after demand was refused. Omitting formal parts, appellee, by its answer, charged, among other defenses, that it was not liable upon the policy because same was never accepted by the appellant as written, nor the premium therefor paid or agreed to be paid by appellant, nor was any other consideration paid to or received by the appellee for the same, notwithstanding the by-laws provided that all premiums should be paid upon issuance of policy, and further that said policy as issued was refused by said Davis and those acting for him, none of whom consented to pay the premium or other consideration for the same prior to the loss. As suggested, there were other matters of defense urged by the appellee, but from our view of the case a recitation of same are unnecessary. A jury was waived and the case submitted to the court. Judgment was rendered for the appellee, and the case is here on conclusions of fact and law by the trial court accompanied by statement of facts.

From the evidence adduced the trial judge concluded as facts and law as follows, to wit: "That H. F. Davis, the owner of the stock of goods in question, requested W. A. Polk, plaintiff, to obtain the insurance, and that Polk requested J. G. Bennett to obtain insurance upon the stock of goods in question, and that in pursuance of such request said Bennett did obtain from R. T. Malone, the local agent of defendant company at Dallas, Tex., the policy sued on in this case. That the policy was issued by Malone on the 24th day of October, 1911, and came into the hands of J. G. Bennett either by mail or personal delivery; the evidence not disclosing by which of these two agencies the policy was delivered. That at the time said policy was delivered to or came into possession of said Bennett, there was no agreement as to what time premium for the same should be paid, and that no mention was made of the time when the premium would become due. That no notice of acceptance of the policy in question was ever communicated to defendant or its agent prior to the loss by fire. That prior to the loss by fire Bennett communicated to defendant through its agent that W. A. Polk considered the rate excessive, and requested the defendant's agent to see if he could get the rate reduced, but that no further communication was had between defendant or its agent, and Polk and Bennett, prior to the loss by fire. That the premium for said policy was not paid or tendered to defendant or its agents until about three weeks after the fire. That on the 3d of November, 1911, plaintiff paid to J. G. Bennett Co. $50, the premium called for in said policy. That about three weeks before the issuance of the policy in question M. G. Ranney, general agent for defendant, told J. G. Bennett that the defendant company did not want any of its policies delivered unless some part of the premium was paid at the time of delivery. That on the 12th day of October, 1911, W. H. Patrick, president of defendant company, by letter instructed R. T. Malone, local agent at Dallas, that all policies should be paid for on delivery of same, and that this instruction remains in full force to this time. That J. G. Bennett was the agent for the insured in effecting the policy, and in everything that had to be done in consequence of it, and that the knowledge of J. G. Bennett, imparted to him by M. G. Ranney, that the policies of the defendant company should not be delivered without a part of the premium paid at the time, was the knowledge of the insured, and that insured knew that, if no money was paid at the time of the delivery of the policy, the delivery of the policy was unauthorized and beyond the scope of the authority of the person delivering same. That the premium of the policy became due in a reasonable time, and the same was not paid within a reasonable time, and by the terms of the by-laws of said company said policy was automatically canceled. That the policy was never accepted by the insured or any one for him prior to the loss, and that the insured, nor any one for him, made any contract, binding them, or either of them, to pay the premium to defendant, prior to the loss."

[1] Thus it will be seen that the trial judge unequivocally finds as matter of fact that the policy of insurance issued by appellee was never accepted by Davis, the insured, or by any one for him, prior to the fire; nor did Davis, or any one for him, ever agree to pay the premium due on the policy before the fire. It will be further seen from the court's finding that he also finds as matter of fact that appellant and those acting for him never paid the premium on said insurance policy, and that appellant knew that the delivery of the policy was unauthorized and beyond the scope of the authority of the person delivering same, and that, having failed to pay the same, said policy by its terms was automatically canceled. It will not be disputed, of course, that upon the basis of the related facts the judgment as entered by the trial court is correct.

[2] Appellant, however, challenges both the conclusions of fact and law of the court on these matters, and, while we fail to find in the record that the claimed error was set out in a motion for a new trial in order that the trial court might have opportunity to correct same, we have nevertheless read the evidence contained in the statement of facts bearing upon the facts resolved by the trial court favorably to the appellee, and we think the most that can be said from the appellant's standpoint is that the evidence is conflicting, and in such cases the appellate court has no discretion, since the findings of the court upon the facts are entitled to as much consideration as the verdict of the jury, and it has been repeatedly held in such cases that the findings of the trial court will not be reviewed where there is evidence to support them, even though the appellate court may have reached a different conclusion from the the evidence. The rule is well put in Wells v. Yarbrough, 84 Tex. 664, 19 S. W. 867, where it is said: "We treat such findings like we do the verdict of a jury, and the question with us is not whether they are supported by a preponderance of the evidence, but it is whether or not there is any evidence to support them."

So it will be seen on the threshold of this appeal we are compelled to affirm same upon the facts as found by the trial court, and for that reason we do not pass upon the other questions assigned in the brief, since whether they constitute error or not is immaterial under the finding of the trial court that the policy of insurance had never been delivered by appellee or accepted by appellant.

The judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

HENGY v. HENGY.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. San Antonio. Dec. 11, 1912.)

1. PARTNERSHIP (§ 68*)—REAL PROPERTY—MISAPPROPRIATION OF FIRM FUNDS.

Where a partner incurs a debt to secure money to buy land, and subsequently pays such debt out of partnership funds, the partnership does not thereby acquire any claim on the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 101-111; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

2. TRUSTS (§ 41*)—ESTABLISHMENT—EVIDENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

A party seeking to establish a trust in his favor in land the legal title to which is in another has the burden of proving the facts necessary to constitute a trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 60; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

3. PARTNERSHIP (§ 329*)—ACCOUNTING—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

Plaintiff suing for a partnership settlement alleged that certain land was purchased by the partnership, it having been agreed that he should pay one half of the purchase money out of his individual funds, and that defendant should pay the other half, that he did pay one half out of his individual funds, and that defendant paid the other half at first through a loan and later out of partnership proceeds without plaintiff's knowledge. He alleged in one place that he was the owner of three-fourths of the lot, and at another that it became partnership assets. Defendant denied that the land was so purchased and claimed it as his individual property. Plaintiff testified that each paid one-half of the purchase price, and that the partnership afterwards paid each of them back. The court charged to find for defendant unless the jury believed plaintiff paid one-half of the purchase money individually, in which case they should find that he was the owner of an undivided one-half interest, to which plaintiff excepted on the ground that the real issue was whether the property was bought for the partnership. Held, that plaintiff having made the specific issue and testified that he paid half the purchase money individually, and the allegations of the petition being contradictory, the court properly submitted the question whether he did so pay one-half individually as being the most specific claim asserted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 782-786; Dec. Dig. § 329.*]

4. PARTNERSHIP (§ 67*)—FIRM PROPERTY—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Where a partner withdraws money from the business with the knowledge and consent of his copartner, property purchased therewith is not partnership property, such partner being merely charged with the money so withdrawn on the settlement of the partnership accounts;

but, where the money is withdrawn in bad faith and without the knowledge and consent of the other partner, the property purchased therewith is firm property, especially where such partner credits the firm with rents, and charges it with taxes and insurance on such property.

5. TRIAL (§ 256*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ERROR NOT CURED.

An erroneous charge to find for defendant, unless certain facts existed, was affirmatively erroneous, since a special charge to find for plaintiff upon other facts would have been contradictory thereof.

6. TRIAL (§ 244*)—INSTRUCTIONS—UNDUE PROMINENCE OF SUBJECT.

On a partnership accounting, an instruction that if plaintiff knew of proceedings to condemn land claimed by him to have been partnership property, and had an opportunity to set up and claim his rights therein and did not, these facts might be considered in determining whether the land was partnership property, was improper; there being no claim that these facts estopped plaintiff, since the court should not single out a portion of the evidence and tell the jury to consider it.

7. FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER (§ 6*)—TRIAL OF TITLE AND RIGHT OF POSSESSION—RENTS.

On a partnership accounting, an instruction that no rents of lands claimed to be partnership property could be awarded because certain judgments in forcible entry and detainer cases had established defendant's right thereto was erroneous, since under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2529, providing that the only issue in such cases shall be as to the right to actual possession, and article 2542, providing that such proceedings shall not bar an action for trespass, damages, waste, rent, or mesne profits, a judgment in forcible entry and detainer merely disposes of the right of possession and determines nothing concerning the rents.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Forcible Entry and Detainer, Cent. Dig. §§ 29-33; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

8. PARTNERSHIP (§ 336*)—ACCOUNTING—TRIAL—EVIDENCE.

On a partnership accounting, where plaintiff claimed that land, the legal title to which was in defendant, was partnership property, while defendant claimed that he purchased it out of his personal funds, and that part of such funds had previously been deposited by him in a bank, the exclusion of his bank account, offered for the purpose of showing that he made no such deposit, was erroneous.

9. PARTNERSHIP (§ 336*)—ACCOUNTING—TRIAL—EVIDENCE.

On a partnership accounting between a father and son, a letter written to the son by the father while in another state, giving a list of his properties in that state, with their values, was irrelevant, not being relevant, as claimed, to show what money he took with him to that state or what had been sent him.

10. PARTNERSHIP (§ 336*)—ACCOUNTING—TRIAL—EVIDENCE.

The admission of such letter was prejudicial error, being calculated to impress the jury with the idea that the father, having considerable property in the other state, could well afford to be generous to the son.

11. TRIAL (§ 256*)—INSTRUCTIONS—NECESSITY OF REQUEST FOR MORE SPECIFIC INSTRUCTIONS.

On a partnership accounting, plaintiff claimed that he bought defendant's interest June 30, 1902, and formed a new partnership with him February 14, 1903, and that the business between those dates and money withdrawn by him belonged to him. The court charged that the partnership existing June 30, 1902, was presumed to exist and continue unless the jury believed from the evidence that it was dissolved. Held, that the instruction was correct as far as it went, and the court's failure to submit the questions whether plaintiff bought out defendant and afterwards formed a new partnership, and to instruct the jury if they so found to credit each partner with the amount paid in on the formation of the new partnership, to credit plaintiff with the profits during the time intervening between the dissolution and the formation of the new partnership, and to credit defendant with wages during that period, was not reversible error, in the absence of a request for the submission of special charges.

12. TRIAL (§ 348*)—SPECIAL INTERROGATORIES—POWER AND DUTY OF COURT.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1323, providing that verdicts are either general or special, and article 1333, providing that the jury shall render a general or special verdict as directed by the court at the request of a party and the verdict shall comprehend the whole issue or all of the issues submitted, the court should not so submit the case as that the verdict may be part general and part special, and hence, where it had decided not to submit the case on special issues, the refusal to submit two special issues requested by plaintiff was not error.

13. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1064*)—HARMLESS ERROR—GENERAL AND SPECIAL INSTRUCTIONS.

The trial court in its charge recited that it submitted the case upon special charges presented to it, but did not recite which side presented them, and then instructed the jury in a general charge embracing the issue presumably covered by the special charge. Held, that plaintiff could not have been injured by the recital that the case was submitted on special charges, although such special charges were presented by defendant.

14. TRIAL (§ 256*)—INSTRUCTIONS—OMISSIONS.

The failure of the trial court in its charge to apply all of the law applicable to the case should have been cured by offering special charges.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 628-641; Dec. Dig. § 256.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

15. TRIAL (§ 349*)—SPECIAL INTERROGATORIES—SUBMISSION—DISCRETION.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1333, as amended by Acts 26th Leg. c. 111, providing that the jury shall render a general or special verdict as directed by the court, which shall comprehend the whole issue or all the issues submitted to them, and that a case shall not be submitted on special issues unless one or all parties request such submission, the submission of the case on special issues is in the discretion of the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 823-827; Dec. Dig. § 349.*]

16. PARTNERSHIP (§ 342*)—ACCOUNTING—REFERENCE—REPORT.

On a partnership accounting, where there was a dispute as to the date when the partnership commenced, an auditor, having no power to pass upon this question, properly reported the amount due each of the partners on each of the different theories concerning such date.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 810, 812; Dec. Dig. § 342.*]

Appeal from District Court, Dallas County; E. B. Muse, Judge.

Action by F. J. Hengy against Louis Hengy. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Charles F. Clint, Chilton & Chilton, and Plowman & Plowman, all of Dallas, for appellant. Jeff Word, of Dallas, for appellee.

MOURSUND, J. On June 9, 1906, F. J. Hengy sued his son, Louis Hengy, for the settlement of a partnership in the junk business, which he alleged had been formed between them on February 14, 1903. Among other matters, he alleged that a lot, known as the Bessard lot, was purchased by the partnership of F. J. Hengy & Son for $2,000, it having been agreed that plaintiff, out of his individual funds, should pay one half of the purchase money, and that the defendant should pay the other half; that plaintiff paid his half ($1,000) out of his individual funds, and defendant paid for the remaining half, first through a loan, and finally out of partnership proceeds, of which latter fact plaintiff remained in ignorance until long after the payment by defendant of his half of said purchase money; that defendant fraudulently, without plaintiff's knowledge, took the deed in his own name; that the lot was used as partnership property, and it was agreed that same should be bought for the partnership. It was further alleged that plaintiff left for Idaho shortly after the formation of the partnership and remained there, with short intervals, until shortly before the bringing of this suit; that about March 22, 1905, while plaintiff was absent in Idaho, defendant also purchased with the proceeds and money of the partnership business a lot known as the Becker lot, for $2,350.25 cash, but, without plaintiff's knowledge and with intent to defraud him, took the title in his own name, of which fact plaintiff remained in ignorance until just before the institution of this suit; that defendant acknowledged said lot to be partnership property. It was further alleged that defendant appropriated to his own use $2,500 paid for portions of said lots in a condemnation proceeding, also other moneys and effects amounting to $9,045, and collected $1,587.97 on account of the partnership, which he did not account for, also $1,350 rent for part of the Bessard lot and $1,441 rent for part of the Becker lot. He further alleged that there was on hand a stock of junk worth $750 and a deposit in the National Bank of Commerce of $5,275.94. Plaintiff set out the sums claimed by him, prayed for settlement of the partnership's affairs, that he recover judgment for the sums sued for, and that his partnership interest in the two lots be awarded him.

Defendant denied the partnership as set up in plaintiff's petition, alleging that he was by his father associated with him in the junk business in July, 1895, without any agreement as to terms of the partnership, and about May 1, 1899, they agreed on the terms of the partnership which terms were set out, but are not necessary to be mentioned here; that on August 27, 1900, plaintiff's wife sued for divorce and partition of community property, making defendant a party to the suit; that about March, 1902, plaintiff caused an accounting to be had in said suit between himself and defendant in regard to the firm property, in which it was determined that the assets consisted of $2,471.62, of which plaintiff was entitled to $836.16, and defendant to $1,635.46; that said judgment determined the existence of a partnership between them. He further alleged the various amounts paid in, profits made, amounts paid out, etc., and claimed the two lots as his exclusive property, alleging they were paid for with his own money.

Plaintiff filed supplemental petition, in which, after denying the partnership as alleged by defendant, and other allegations, he pleaded that the judgment in the divorce suit was an accommodation judgment; that, at the solicitation of defendant and in pursuance of his advice to the effect that it was necessary in order to keep the business from being destroyed by reason of Mrs. Hengy's suit, he agreed that defendant should claim to be a partner; that in order to clear up said judgment in the divorce suit he paid defendant $500 about October, 1902, in full and final settlement of the supposed partnership, interest, and judgment.

The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment awarding defendant the two lots and $836.39 of the money in the National Bank of Commerce, and plaintiff $3,699.55 of said money.

The first assignment of error is as follows: "The court erred, at the instance of appellee, in charging the jury, in relation to the Bessard lot, as follows: 'You will find by your verdict that this lot is the property of the defendant, unless you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff paid with his individual money one half of the purchase money, in which event you will find by your verdict that plaintiff owns an undivided one half interest of said lot, and the defendant the other half—in that, as disclosed by the evidence, plaintiff did not contend that he paid out of his individual funds one-half of the purchase money of said lot, but that said lot was bought with the partnership funds of F. J. Hengy & Son, for partnership purposes, and was necessary to be used by said partnership in the conduct of its business, and was so used, and in that although appellant did contend that he paid out, out of his individual funds, one-half of the purchase money of said lot, and the jury may have believed to the contrary, yet, if appellant's one-half of the purchase money of said lot or appellee's one-half thereof, or the whole thereof, was paid out of the partnership funds, and said lot bought and used for partnership purposes, as the great preponderance of the testimony in this case shows, still, under said charge, the jury would nevertheless be bound to find that said lot belonged to the appellee, as will more fully appear from the court's charge and the pleading and evidence in this case." The proposition made under the assignment is as follows: "The court erred in instructing the jury that they will find that the Bessard lot (lot 5) is the property of defendant, unless they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff paid with his individual money one-half the purchase money."

In the treatment of this assignment we are not favored with any clear statement of what appellant thinks should have been charged by the court. The issues made by the pleadings, if supported by evidence, should be submitted. In this case plaintiff's allegations are rather contradictory in so far as they relate to the Bessard lot. He alleges that said lot was purchased by F. J. Hengy & Son, "it having been agreed that plaintiff, out of his individual funds, should pay one half the purchase money for said lot, and that defendant, by loan or otherwise, should pay for the other half of said lot, and plaintiff paid his one half thereof, or $1,000, out of his individual funds, and the defendant paid for the remaining half thereof, $1,000, first through a loan, and finally out of the proceeds of said partnership and money belonging to said partnership." He further alleged that he remained in ignorance of the latter fact until long after defendant paid his half of the purchase money, and also of the fact that defendant took the deed in his own name instead of that of F. J. Hengy & Son, or to plaintiff and defendant, as it was agreed it should be, and that said act was fraudulent. He further alleged that it was agreed that said lot should become partnership property and be used as such, and that it was in fact treated as partnership property by defendant until just before the filing of the suit. At one place he alleged he was the owner of 'three-fourths of the lot, and at another that it became partnership assets. Defendant denied that the lot was purchased with the money of F. J. Hengy or the firm of F. J. Hengy & Son, or for the partnership, and claimed same as his individual property. Plaintiff testified positively that each paid his half of the purchase price of the lot, and that the partnership afterwards paid each of them back. The deed to the lot was delivered and recorded on January 17, 1903. Plaintiff alleged and testified that no partnership existed at that time, but that same was formed on February 14, 1903.

[1] The fact that defendant used firm funds to pay a debt incurred by him to secure money to pay for half the lot would not give the partnership any claim upon the lot, and under plaintiff's pleading the court was correct in assuming that under any theory which might be advanced defendant was at least entitled to a half interest in the lot.

[2] Now, as to the other half, each of the parties claimed he paid for it out of his individual means. The legal title being in defendant, the court was correct in placing the burden of proof on plaintiff to ingraft a trust upon such title. Baylor v. Hopf, 81 Tex. 641, 17 S. W. 230.

The charge precluded plaintiff from recovering unless the jury found he had paid half of the purchase money individually. Appellant argues that the allegation that plaintiff paid half of the purchase money out of his individual property was an unnecessary allegation, and that the real issue was whether the property was bought for the partnership, and whether the deed was to be taken in the partnership name and the property used for partnership purposes, and that whatever money defendant invested he would be entitled to recover from the firm upon an accounting.

[3] Plaintiff having made the specific issue and testified that he paid half the purchase money individually, we fail to see how the court could ignore such issue without subjecting the charge to just criticism. Had he instructed the jury to find for defendant unless they found that an agreement had been made to buy the property for the partnership, etc., he would have had to instruct the jury that half was paid out of defendant's individual property, and to require a finding whether plaintiff paid for the other half out of his individual property or whether such half was paid for by defendant out of his individual property. Unless the jury determined this question, they would not know how to arrive at a settlement between the partners. However, for the court to even submit the question of the other half being paid for with individual funds of defendant would have constituted an intimation that the court considered it doubtful whether the evidence sustained plaintiff's positive allegation that he paid such half out of his individual funds. Under the contradictory allegations of the petition, we conclude the court had the right to submit the allegation that plaintiff paid half out of his individual means as being the most specific claim asserted, and that plaintiff cannot be heard to complain of this portion of the charge.

[4] The second assignment reads as follows: "The court erred, at the instance of appellee, in charging the jury in relation to the ownership of the Becker lot, as follows: 'You will therefore find by your verdict that this lot is the individual property of the defendant, Louis Hengy, unless you believe from the evidence that at the time of the purchase of said lot by defendant he bought it for the partnership of F. J. Hengy & Son.' And also as follows: 'You are charged that, as between partners, when one partner draws money out of the firm for his individual use, then the property purchased with said partnership money is not the property of the firm, but that it is the property of the individual partner so purchasing it, and he should be charged with said money so drawn out in a settlement of the partnership business or accounts'—in that, as a matter of law, if said lot was bought with partnership funds for F. J. Hengy & Son, said partnership would have a resulting trust interest therein, and the dominant or superior title thereto and said lot would therefore belong to said partnership. And the great preponderance of evidence in this case shows that said lot was bought and paid for out of the partnership funds of said firm, without the knowledge or consent of appellant; that is to say, appellee, in the absence of appellant from the state, from time to time drew out of the partnership funds $2,817, and placed the same to his personal credit in the National Bank of Commerce, and with $2,530 of said money paid for said lot. Said latter charge is erroneous in that the appellant during practically the three years of the existence of said partnership, and at the time of the purchase of said lot, was absent from the state of Texas, and appellee had exclusive management and control of the business, and said purchase of said lot having been made with the partnership funds, and the rents and expenses thereof having been paid in and charged to the fund belonging to it, and in that said charges precluded the jury from rendering any other verdict than that the Bessard and Becker lots belonged to defendant, and in that, assuming that said lot belonged to appellee and was purchased by borrowed money from the firm, said charge is defective in omitting to charge appellee with interest on said money from the date he borrowed same, as will more fully appear from the court's charge and the pleading and evidence in this case."

Appellant contends that the charge is affirmatively erroneous in precluding plaintiff from any share in the Becker lot unless the same was bought for the partnership. This contention is correct. The charge announces the correct rule if a partner purchases property for himself with partnership funds with the knowledge and consent of his partner, but a different rule applies where he acts in bad faith and uses the firm money without the knowledge and consent of his partner.

The following rule is quoted in Cyc. vol. 30, p. 429, note 28, as announced in Hunt v. Benson, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 459: "Where a partner withdraws the funds of the firm, and applies them to the purchase of realty, taking title in his own name, and for his own benefit, without the consent of his copartners, such realty will be deemed in equity partnership property for the payment of the debts of the partnership." We have been unable to procure this case, but the above doctrine meets our approval. "The partners owe to each other the most scrupulous good faith." Bates on Partnership, vol. 1, § 303. We are of the opinion that when a partner has purchased real estate with partnership assets, but in his own name, without the knowledge or consent of his copartner, and reports it to his copartner as firm property directly, or indirectly, by crediting the firm with rents and charging it with taxes and insurance, he cannot afterwards be heard to deny that the property purchased is in fact partnership property; nor would it be necessary that the property so purchased be used for partnership purposes.

[5] As the charge required a finding for defendant unless they found certain facts to exist, a special charge providing for a finding for plaintiff upon other facts would have been contradictory of the charge complained of. The charge therefore was affirmatively erroneous. Gibson & Cunningham v. Purifoy, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 379, 120 S. W. 1047; Eppstein v. Thomas, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 619, 44 S. W. 893; Chamblee v. Tarbox, 27 Tex. 147, 84 Am. Dec. 614; Boettler v. Tumlinson, 77 S. W. 826; Johnston v. Johnston, 67 S. W. 123; Thompson v. Railway, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 284, 106 S. W. 913; Building Co. v. Jones, 94 Tex. 500, 62 S. W. 741; Scott v. Railway Co., 93 Tex. 621, 57 S. W. 801; Sauer v. Veltmann, 149 S. W. 706. The assignment is therefore sustained.

which the jury may consider in determining whether said lots are partnership property or not—in that said charge was applicable to no issue of fact, and in that said charge is upon the weight of the evidence, and in that said charge gave undue prominence to the fact therein referred to, even if true, by singling out from amongst all other facts in this case that one fact and charging the jury and placed undue stress thereupon, and in that it appears from the evidence the suit referred to in said charge was by the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company dismissed and another suit brought by said company not only against appellee and his wife, but also against appellant, alleging all of them to be the owners of said lots, and in that said charge, as a matter of law, is erroneous as appellant was not called upon, although he may have had an opportunity so to do to set up and claim his rights and interest in said lots in said condemnation proceedings as the tribunal in which the same pended had no jurisdiction to determine the respective rights of appellant and appellee to the title to said lots, or either of them, and in that the mere silence or inactivity of a person, unless called upon to speak or act with reference to his property rights, are not per se any evidence whatever as to whether said property belonged to him or not, or to said partnership or not, as charged by the court, and in that said charge strongly tended to induce and persuade the jury in passing upon other issues in this case, especially as to the title to said lots, and the $2,500 damages awarded against the railroad company, and to ignore all of the evidence as to the partnership ownership thereof, and to award the same to appellee, and to otherwise discredit all of the evidence and all other contentions of appellant in this case, as will more fully appear from the court's charge and the pleading and evidence."

No contention is made that the facts mentioned in the charge, if found to exist, would estop plaintiff from setting up his claim to the lots, nor does the court so charge, but instructs the jury to consider such evidence. It is improper for the court to single out a portion of the evidence and instruct the jury to consider same, because it gives undue prominence thereto, and is calculated to lead the jury to believe that the court considers it of special weight. Dupree & McCutchan v. Railway Co., 96 S. W. 647; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Campbell, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 204, 91 S. W. 316; Western Union Co. v. Burgess, 56 S. W. 237; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 80 Tex. 101, 15 S. W. 705; Railway v. Kutac, 76 Tex. 478, 13 S. W. 327; Louisiana & Texas Lumber Co. v. Stewart, 148 S. W. 1193. The assignment is sustained.

'You are instructed that, if the judgments of the justice court and the (county) court of Dallas county, in evidence before you, have established the right of the defendant, Louis Hengy, to the possession of the lots known as the Bessard lot and the Becker lot, no verdict for any rents against him can be rendered by you'—in that judgments in a justice court involving the mere question of possession of lots, the question of title, and rent incident thereto, could not and were not involved, nor were said judgments ~~in~~ evidence as to who owned the same, and did not and could not operate to prevent the party having title to said lots from suing for the recovery of said lots, and in connection therewith, as a matter of course, the rents due thereon; it appearing from the undisputed evidence that the appellee had collected and appropriated to his own use and benefit, in the way of rents from said lots, over $2,000, which, under the above charge, the jury was absolutely precluded from considering and awarding to said partnership in the event it found from the evidence that said lots or either of them belonged to said partnership, and in that said cases in the justice court did not involve the rights of F. J. Hengy & Son, but were between Louis Hengy on the one side and F. J. Hengy on the other, as individuals, and could not in any wise preclude said partnership of any of its rights either to said lots or the rent thereof, as will more fully appear from the court's charge and the pleading and evidence in this case."

It appears that appellee sued appellant for $76.90 rent for Becker lot for several months, and recovered judgment for the amount. Said judgment was conclusive between the parties as to the rents for the period covered by the suit. The other cases were all forcible entry and detainer cases, in which character of cases a judgment does not settle anything concerning rents. It merely disposes of the right of possession, and the peaceable possession is sufficient basis for recovery; but it does not preclude the other party from going into the district court and litigating the title and in connection therewith suing for rents or mesne profits. Articles 2529 and 2542, Anno Civ. Statutes (Sayles); House v. Reavis, 89 Tex. 634, 35 S. W. 1063. The only exception permitting a suit for rents in connection with one for forcible entry and detainer was made by the Thirty-Second Legislature in favor of landlords as against their tenants, where the rents claimed are in such amount as the justice court would have jurisdiction of. See chapter 21, Acts 32d Leg. The assignment is sustained.

[8] The fifth assignment is as follows: "The court erred in refusing to admit in evidence the personal bank account of the appellee for the years 1899 and 1900, down to June 30, 1902, in that appellee had testified that he paid out of his personal funds $1,000 as purchase money on the Bessard lot, and that part of said $1,000 was money he brought from Denison in 1899, and then deposited in the American National Bank of Dallas, to his personal credit; but his bank account, offered in evidence as aforesaid, showed that he made no such deposit during the year 1899, and made none until May, 1900, and then only in the sum of $15. The court's only reason for rejecting said evidence was that the judgment of June 30, 1902, precluded any investigation into the appellee's or appellant's or partnership account anterior thereto, whereas in law said judgment related alone to a settlement and the status of said partnership down to June 30, 1902, and had absolutely nothing to do with and in no wise interfered with an inquiry into where and when and how the appellee got the $1,000 which he claimed to have paid out of his personal money on the purchase price of said Bessard lot. Appellant denies that appellee paid any part of the purchase money on said lot out of his personal funds and contended that all of the purchase money came out of the partnership funds."

This assignment is sustained. This testimony was clearly admissible for the purpose for which offered.

[9, 10] The sixth assignment complains of the admission, over appellant's objection, of a letter from him to appellee, dated March 24, 1905, in which he gave a list of his properties in Idaho, with their values, showing that he had $26,675 worth of property in Idaho.

We fail to see the relevancy of this evidence. It certainly is not relevant for the purpose of showing (as contended by appellee) what money F. J. Hengy took with him to Idaho, or what had been sent him. It could only show that appellant had considerable property at the time the letter was written, and was prejudicial, in that it was calculated to impress the jury with the idea that appellant could well afford to be generous to his son and let him have what he claimed. M., K. & T. Ry. v. Hannig, 91 Tex. 347, 43 S. W. 508; Railway v. Levy, 59 Tex. 542, 46 Am. Rep. 269; 13 Cyc. 211. We sustain the assignment.

[11] The seventh assignment is as follows: "The court erred in refusing to submit appellant's special issues 1 and 2, relating to how many partnerships existed between appellant and appellee and the date of the beginning and end of the same, and in refusing and failing to submit in its general charge the law applicable to the formation and dissolution of the partnership, in that the evidence discloses, and appellant contended, that the first partnership was dissolved by operation of law and by agreement on June 30, 1902, and the second partnership was formed on February 14, 1903, and that between June 30, 1902, and February 14, 1903, the business of said concern belonged to appellant, and that the $3,000 or $4,000 drawn by appellant out of said business during said time belonged personally to him, and not, as claimed by appellee, to both of them jointly."

The only allusion in the charge to the matter of dissolution of the partnership formed June 30, 1902, is the following: "The jury is instructed that the partnership adjudged to exist between plaintiff and defendant by the judgments of June 30, 1902, and July 31, 1902, is presumed to exist and continue until the dissolution which took place in February, 1906, unless the jury believe from the evidence that the same was dissolved by the parties, after the rendition of said judgments, and before the dissolution in February, 1906."

[12] The court having decided not to submit the case on special issues, no error was committed in refusing to submit the two special issues requested by appellant. Appellant should have requested the submission of special charges. The trial court should not undertake to present a case to the jury so that their verdict might be part general and part special. Articles 1328 and 1333 (Sayles' Statutes); Southerland v. Railway Co., 40 S. W. 193. However, it is earnestly contended that the failure to instruct the jury on the issue made by the pleadings with regard to whether the old partnership was dissolved and a new one formed on February 14, 1903, was an error so intense that the court should reverse without a special instruction being asked; appellant's theory being that the charge does not fairly cover the substantial issues in the case. The auditor's report embraces two findings, varying greatly in amount; one based on the theory that the accounting began June 30, 1902, and the other on the theory that it began February 14, 1903. It was therefore important for the jury to determine when the partnership began, and the instruction given by the court was inadequate in not submitting the specific issue made by the pleading and evidence, namely, whether plaintiff paid defendant $500 for his interest in the partnership; if so, then to find when the new partnership was formed, and to credit each partner with the amount paid in by him in property or money when the new partnership was begun, and also to credit plaintiff with the profits of the business during the time intervening between such dissolution and the formation of the new partnership, and credit defendant with the amount of his wages. However, we think the charge was correct as far as it went, and think that plaintiff, if desirous of having a more specific submission of the issue, should have requested the submission of special charges.

The assignment is overruled.

The eighth assignment reads as follows: "The court erred, after having refused, at the instance of appellant, to submit this case on special issues, in submitting it on special charges, at the instance of the appellee, in that the trial of the cause consumed about 14 days, and in that the special charges upon the law as submitted failed to apply all of the law applicable to the case, as, for instance, the statutes of limitation, what constituted a partnership purchase of land, in whole or in part, what constituted a loan from a partnership, and when the money borrowed by a partner bore interest and from what time, what operated as a dissolution of the partnership, what constituted a partnership, what constituted capital stock of the partnership and to whom it belonged, what constituted fraudulent appropriation by one partner of funds of a partnership, and other law applicable to other issues rising under the pleading and evidence in this case, as more fully appears from the charge of the court submitted to the jury, and from the evidence adduced on the trial of this case."

[13, 14] The charge recites that the court submits the case upon some special charges presented to him, but does not recite which side presented same, and proceeds to instruct the jury in a general charge embracing the issues covered, presumably, by the special charge. This recital could not possibly injure appellant. The omissions complained of by appellant should have been cured by offering special charges. The assignment is overruled.

[16] The tenth assignment complains of the overruling of exceptions to the auditor's report and the overruling of the motion to strike same out. The assignment is not submitted as a proposition, and for that matter involves quite a number of propositions, so we will consider the only proposition submitted under the same, viz., that the auditor's report, merely submitting three different theories under which the partners would be entitled to different amounts, is not a report within the contemplation of law. The pleadings raised the issues of different dates upon which the partnership began. The amounts with which the partners should be credited and charged depended upon when the partnership began. As the auditor had no right to pass upon the question of when the partnership began, it was proper for him to make findings based upon each date. The assignment is overruled.

In view of another trial, assignments 11 and 12 will not be considered, as they relate to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict.

On account of the errors mentioned, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

3. EVIDENCE (§ 127*)—DECLARATION BY INJURED PERSON—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a personal injury action, it was not error to admit testimony of complaints of existing pain made by plaintiff to witnesses, though he was then insane, especially where there was evidence tending to show that his insanity was limited to one delusion.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 742*)—REVIEW—OBJECTIONS NOT ASSIGNED.

A proposition under an assignment of error presenting an objection to testimony not raised by the assignment cannot be considered.

5. TRIAL (§ 89*)—EVIDENCE—STRIKING OUT.

In a personal injury action, it was not error to strike testimony that plaintiff stated to witness that a certain scar was produced by a stab received in a difficulty several years before, on plaintiff's counsel's objection that such statement was made while plaintiff was insane, where there was no claim that the particular wound was produced in the accident sued on.

6. EVIDENCE (§ 317*)—HEARSAY TESTIMONY.

In an action for injury to an employé in the derailment of a logging train, testimony that plaintiff's coemployé told witness after the wreck that they had orders not to ride on the train was properly excluded as being hearsay.

9. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 295*)—LOGGING RAILROADS—INJURY TO EMPLOYE—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for injury to an employé while riding on a logging train, caused by the derailment thereof, it was proper to instruct that, if plaintiff "took up a position more dangerous than some other parts of the train where he was permitted to ride, he should be held to have assumed the risk of the more dangerous position, yet he did not assume thereby any risk of danger resulting from and proximately caused by the negligence of defendants," etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1168-1179; Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

10. CARRIERS (§ 321*)—INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for injury to a lumber company's employé while riding on a logging train, which was derailed, it was not error to instruct that, if the defendant railway company contracted with defendant lumber company to transport plaintiff with others on the train for a consideration paid by the lumber company, plaintiff was a passenger and entitled to exercise of that degree of care required in the carriage of passengers in the kind of vehicle used, etc.

11. DAMAGES (§ 216*)—PERSONAL INJURY—INSTRUCTIONS—DOUBLE DAMAGES.

Appeal from District Court, Polk County; L. B. Hightower, Judge.

Action by T. E. Robbins against W. H. Knox and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

F. Campbell, J. Holshousen, and J. L. Manry, all of Livingston, Mantooth & Collins, of Lufkin, and A. L. Jackson, of Houston, for appellants. Dean, Humphrey & Powell, of Huntsville, and J. C. Feagin, of Livingston, for appellee.

REESE, J. This suit was originally instituted by T. E. Robbins against the Livingston & Southeastern Railway Company and the partnership firm of W. H. Knox and Hiram Knox, doing a sawmilling business under the firm name of the Knox Lumber Company. The plaintiff Robbins having been adjudged a lunatic, Frank McCall was allowed to come in and prosecute the suit as next friend of said Robbins. A trial with a jury resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $7,500 against both defendants, from which they prosecute this appeal. In substance the allegations of the petition are as follows:

On and prior to July 21, 1909, the defendant Lumber Company owned and operated a sawmill and planing mill located at the station of Knox, or Soda, in Polk county, Tex., about seven miles from the town of Livingston, a station on the railroad of the defendant Livingston & Southeastern Railway Company, and the Lumber Company owned large bodies of timber in Polk county, some of which was located at a great distance from its mill, and away from the track of the defendant Railway Company. The defendant Railway Company was a private railroad corporation, and it owned and operated a line of railroad extending from the town of Livingston to the station of Knox, or Soda, at which the mill was situated. The defendants W. H. Knox and Hiram Knox, being the constituent members of the partnership under the name of the Knox Lumber Company, also owned the majority of the stock in the defendant Railway Company. That the defendant Lumber Company, for the purposes of facilitating it in the transportation of its timber from its distant tracts, had built a tram railroad, constructed according to the standard of the ordinary railroad, and which extended from the junction with the defendant Railway Company's tracks a considerable distance to the timber lands of the Lumber Company. That on and prior to July 21, 1909, the defendants, for their mutual benefit and advantage, had some sort of a contract, the terms of which were unknown to plaintiff, under which the defendant Lumber Company cut its timbers and transported same over its tram railroad to the junction of the defendant Railway Company's track, and that thence the defendants transported said timbers to the Lumber Company's sawmill at the town of Knox by means of logging cars. That it was understood between plaintiff and the defendant Lumber Company at the time of his employment that one or both of the defendant companies would transport him upon cars over the railroad of defendant Railway Company, and over the tram railway between the place of his residence at or near said mill and the place of his work. That while thus in the employment of the defendant Lumber Company, and under contract with it to saw logs in the woods for said company, the plaintiff and other employes, in accordance with the said agreement, and with the consent and acquiescence of defendant, boarded a logging train at the station of Knox, which was made up of "an engine, tender, and three logging cars, described as aforesaid, and which left said mill for the purpose of carrying the plaintiff and the other employes of the defendant Lumber Company to the woods, where they were to resume their service for defendant Lumber Company," etc., and that plaintiff thereby became a passenger on said cars, and that "if the plaintiff is mistaken in his averment that when riding on said logging train in going to and returning from his work he was a passenger thereon, and if he is mistaken in his averment that the defendants, and each of them, owed to him the highest degree of care to safely transport him to and from his work while on said cars, the defendants, and each of them, nevertheless, owed plaintiff the duty to transport him in safety while on said car, both going to and returning from his place of work," etc. That the said train consisted of an engine and tender in front of which were three logging cars which were pushed out in front of the engine. That the relations between the defendants were of such a character that plaintiff did not know and could not ascertain whether the trainmen in charge of said logging car and of the train of which they were a part were in the employ of the defendant Railway Company or of the defendant Lumber Company, nor could he ascertain whether the train and cars belonged to the one or the other of the defendants, but he alleged that such trainmen were in the employ of both and each of said defendants, and that the cars and train were being operated for the mutual benefit of both of the defendants. That plaintiff, in taking passage on said train, took his seat on one of the couplings of the frame of the logging car that was attached to the tender, and that while the train was going at a rapid rate of speed at a point on the track of the defendant Railway Company some of the cars encountered an obstruction on the track and became derailed, and the plaintiff, in order to avoid apparent danger, jumped from the car that he was sitting on, and was seriously and permanently injured, alleging that such injury resulted from negligence on the part of the defendants in the following particulars, substantially: (1) That defendants had caused or permitted some obstruction to be placed and left on the railroad track; (2) that defendants had failed to properly inspect the track to discover and remove the obstruction; (3) that the track and roadbed at the point of the occurrence were in an unsafe condition; (4) that the defendants had failed to have the engine and train properly equipped with air brakes, so as to stop the train quickly upon discovery of the obstruction; (5) that the rate of speed at which the train was running was excessive; (6) that the defendants failed to keep a proper lookout for obstructions.

Among other injuries alleged to have been suffered by the said Robbins, it is alleged that as a result of said injuries he has become insane.

Defendants answered by (1) general denial; (2) special denials of various allegations in the petition; (3) a special plea that plaintiff was not authorized to ride on the logging car occupied by him, but that plaintiff and others were strictly precluded by rule of the defendant Lumber Company from riding in such position, and were not permitted to ride except on the caboose or tender provided for that purpose; (4) special plea that in riding upon the logging car plaintiff was a trespasser, assuming the risk of the danger, and that defendants owed him no affirmative duty, except to avoid intentional injury, and that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in occupying such position; (5) that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, in that he unnecessarily and carelessly jumped from his position on the car, whereas, if he had remained thereon, he would have received no injury; (6) special plea that the plaintiff had full knowledge that riding on the logging car involved more danger than riding on the tender, and had been so admonished, notwithstanding which he voluntarily occupied the more dangerous position, and thereby assumed the risk, and thereby also was guilty of negligence precluding recovery; (7) special denial that plaintiff's alleged insanity resulted from the injuries complained of, and averring that such insanity was due to venereal diseases, and was hereditary.

The facts are substantially as follows: At the time of the accident, which occurred July 21, 1909, the appellee Robbins was in the employment of the Knox Lumber Company, engaged in getting out timber for its sawmill, which was located at the station of Knox (or Soda) on the line of the Livingston & Southeastern Railway about seven miles from the town of Livingston, one of the termini of said railroad. The Railway Company owned and operated a line of railway running from Livingston to Knox. W. H. Knox and Hiram Knox, operating as a partnership under the firm name of the Knox Lumber Company, owned and operated the sawmill at the town of Knox. The Lumber Company, for the purpose of reaching its timber in the woods, had constructed a tram road from a junction with the said railroad out into the woods. W. H. Knox and his son, Hiram Knox, owned about nine-tenths of the stock of the Railway Company and W. H. Knox was its president. There was a contract between the Lumber Company and the Railway Company by the terms of which the Railway Company were to transport the logs from the woods to the Lumber Company's mill at $1 per thousand feet, and for this compensation the Railway Company was also to carry the employees of the Lumber Company who worked in the woods to and from their place of work. For this purpose the Railway Company had for use a caboose attached to the engine or logging cars, but some month or more before the accident in question this caboose had been out of use, having become unfit for use on account of a wreck, and during this time the men had to ride either on the logging cars or the engine or tender. The evidence was conflicting as to the number of men who had to be carried from their work at the time of the accident in question. Some of the witnesses place the number as high as 40 or 50; and it was in evidence that this number could not be accommodated on the engine and tender, which also had to carry wood for the engine, and had no accommodations for seats for the men. At the time of the accident the engine was pushing ahead of it three empty logging cars (skeleton cars without floor, but having only bolsters for holding the logs). Appellee Robbins was riding on one of the logging cars. The train was running anywhere from 18 to 25 miles an hour when the trucks of the forward car struck the end of a loose railroad rail, lying on or by the side of the track, derailing the car and wrecking the train. Robbins jumped when the accident occurred, and was caught under one of the cars, and sustained substantially the injuries alleged in the petition. About a year after the accident, he became insane, and was at the time of the trial confined in the State Asylum at Austin as a lunatic. The evidence authorizes the conclusion that the insanity was proximately caused by the injuries received by him as aforesaid. There was evidence which tended to show that the insanity was of date anterior to the accident, and was brought on by other causes or was hereditary, but the jury evidently found otherwise, and their finding is sufficiently supported by the evidence.

A much contested issue was as to whether the men engaged in the operation of the train at the time were in the employ of the Railway Company or the Lumber Company. These men were the engineer, fireman, and brakeman. Without stating such evidence here, we find that the finding of the jury, such finding being necessary to support the verdict against the Lumber Company under the charge of the court, that these men were acting at the time in the employment and were the servants either of the Lumber Company alone, or in the employment of both the Lumber Company and the Railway Company in operating the engine and cars, is sufficiently supported by the evidence and we accordingly so find.

[1, 2] Another much contested issue was whether appellee was acting in violation of a rule or order of the Railway Company in riding on the logging car, instead of on the engine or tender. We find that, if there was such rule generally, it was, especially after the company ceased to use the caboose, habitually disregarded, and that it was impracticable to obey it, as the accommodations on the engine and tender were insufficient for the transportation of all the employees who were required to be so carried, and that this was or must have been known to the officers of the Railway Company. We find that appellee was rightfully upon the logging car and was riding thereon upon the contract between the Lumber Company and the Railway Company heretofore referred to, and under an implied contract between the Lumber Company and appellee that he should be thus carried. The accident referred to was proximately caused by the negligence of the Railway Company in allowing the obstruction to be and remain upon the track, combined with the negligence of the servants of the Lumber Company, or of the Lumber Company and the Railway Company jointly, in failing to keep a proper lookout to discover such obstruction in time to prevent the accident, and in running the train at too great speed under the circumstances. We find that appellee was not guilty of contributory negligence in any of the particulars charged in the answer, nor did he assume the risk of the accident. The injuries received by appellee proximately caused by the accident fully justify the amount awarded him by the verdict and judgment.

[3] The first four assignments of error present substantially the same question. The court admitted, over the objection of appellants, the testimony of certain witnesses that upon certain occasions appellee Robbins complained of pain in his back and head. As we understand the testimony, it was that the complaints were of present pain and suffering, and not, as the objection states, a statement of past suffering. These complaints were made some time after the injury. The real idea intended to be conveyed by the testimony is that what was said by appellee was an expression of present pain and suffering then existing at the time the complaint was made. Such testimony was admissible. Railway Co. v. Barron, 78 Tex. 421, 14 S. W. 698; Wheeler v. Railway Co., 91 Tex. 358, 43 S. W. 876. The further objection was made that appellee was at the time insane. We do not think that this rendered these voluntary exclamations or expressions of present suffering inadmissible, especially in view of the testimony of the witnesses who testified as to appellee's insanity while in the asylum that he talked very intelligently, except upon one subject, that he imagined he had been resurrected at the time of the accident, as stated by one medical witness who examined appellee at the instance of appellants, otherwise he talked entirely rationally. We think expressions of present pain by such a person would fall under the general rule stated by the authorities cited.

[4] What we have said is sufficient to dispose also of the fifth assignment of error, presenting objections to certain testimony. The additional objection to such testimony set out in the second proposition under this assignment, that the expressions of pain were made after this suit was brought, was not made to the testimony as set out in the assignment, and cannot be considered. The proposition is supported by a dictum in Railway Co. v. Kuehn, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 210, 21 S. W. 58, the soundness of which we doubt as applicable to this testimony. Jackson v. M., K. & T. Ry. Co., 23 Tex. Civ. App. 319, 55 S. W. 876. But it is not necessary to decide the question, as it is not presented by the assignment.

[5] Dr. Harlan Trask examined appellee while in the asylum at Austin at the request of appellants. Testifying about the result of this examination, he said that he found a scar on his back on or near his shoulder blade which was made by a cut with a sharp instrument. The witness further testified that appellee stated to him that this scar was produced by a stab inflicted upon him "in a racket" three or four years before. Upon objection by appellee's counsel that this latter statement was made while he was insane, it was stricken out, to which appellants objected, and the ruling is made the basis of the sixth assignment of error. As showing the materiality of this testimony, it is contended that appellee by his pleadings and by the evidence of his wife, Mintie Robbins, claimed that this scar was the result of an injury received by him in the wreck referred to. This is entirely erroneous. Mintie Robbins, on the contrary, testified particularly with reference to this scar that it was the result of a stab wound inflicted by one Elisha Lewis, her cousin, several years before this accident and injury. None of the testimony for appellee indicates that this wound was produced by, or at the time of, the accident referred to, and the testimony of Dr. Trask which was stricken out by the court was utterly immaterial. The record, in fact, leaves us at a loss to understand why appellee's counsel objected to it. The statement is made in appellants' brief that appellee stated to Dr. Trask that this scar "and enlargement in the region of the spine" had resulted from a stabbing in a personal difficulty. The words quoted are an enlargement upon the testimony of the witness not justified by the record. The assignment is overruled.

[6] There was no error in sustaining the objection of appellee to the testimony sought to be elicited from the witness Moye, as set out in the seventh assignment of error. that the employees of appellant told him after the wreck that they had orders not to ride on the logging cars. The objection that the testimony was hearsay was properly sustained. The contention stated in the proposition and brief that the testimony was admissible on cross-examination by way of impeachment or to test and analyze the testimony of the witness is not embraced in the assignment, but could not be sustained if it had been.

[7] There was no error in striking out the answer of the witness Saxon, speaking with reference to the insanity of appellee before the accident and injury in question, that "everybody talked about it more or less." The witness was testifying to his own opinion acquired while appellee worked at a saw-mill at Bedford, and referred by "everybody" to the persons working at said mill. The testimony was objected to as hearsay. It seems to be settled by the authorities that general reputation is inadmissible to establish insanity. 2 Wigmore, § 1621; Ellis v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 86, 24 S. W. 894; 7 Encyc. Ev. 477. None of these persons comprising "everybody" at this mill, unless experts in such matters as insanity, would have been allowed to give his opinion as to appellee's insanity, except in connection with a statement of the facts and circumstances upon which such opinion was based. Brown v. Mitchell, 88 Tex. 363, 31 S. W. 621, 36 L. R. A. 64. This testimony, if admissible, brings before the jury the opinion of all these persons that appellee was at the time referred to insane without inquiry as to their means of knowledge or evidence as to the facts and circumstances upon which such opinion is based. We do not think this would be proper.

By the ninth assignment of error appellants complain of the refusal of the court to give to the jury a special charge requested by them that there was no evidence to authorize a verdict against the Knox Lumber Company, or W. H. and Hiram Knox, and that they should only consider the evidence as to the Livingston Southeastern Railway Company. Under this assignment, the following proposition is stated: "There being no evidence that the railroad at the point of derailment belonged to or was controlled by the Lumber Company, or that those operating the locomotive and cars were the servants of the Lumber Company, performing its immediate service, or that the plaintiff was injured as a result of failure on the part of the Lumber Company to perform any substantive duty to him incident to the relation of master and servant, no liability was shown on the part of the Lumber Company or W. H. Knox or Hiram Knox, as members of that partnership, and these defendants were entitled to the peremptory instruction." The accident occurred on the line of railway of the defendant Railway Company. The engine and cars also belonged to the Railway Company. The contract between the Railway Company and the Lumber Company required the Railway Company to carry the men to and from their homes to their places of work in the woods over the Railway Company's line to the junction with the tram of the Lumber Company, and thence over the tram to the front. It thus entered into and became a part of appellee's contract of employment that he was thus to be carried to and from his work daily as was being done at the time he was hurt. The train was a logging train purely, and was engaged solely in the business. The train crew consisted of Alexander, the engineer, Pete Bailey, the brakeman, and Tom Stutts, the fireman. Alexander testified: "I was running the engine for the Knox Lumber Company. Yes, sir; I suppose they own the business at Knox or Soda. I ran the mill engine there about two weeks, something like that, and ran the locomotive. It was a logging train. I went under Mr. Winger's order when I was in the woods (Winger was the woods foreman of the Lumber Company), and, when I was at the mill, I went under orders of Mr. Knox. Mr. Winger was on the car at the time of the wreck. Yes, sir; I was in the employment of the Knox Lumber Company. I am working for the Knox Lumber Company now." Pete Bailey testified. "I am working for the Knox Lumber Company as conductor on his train since February 7th last. Before that I was braking on the logging train. I was braking on the logging train in 1909, when Tim Robbins got hurt. Before that, I worked on the loading crew there sometimes, but most of the time on the train. Alexander and Stutts were the engineer and fireman, and I was brakeman." Tom Stutts testified: "I lived at Knox or Soda on July 21, 1909, and was firing a locomotive steam engine for the Knox Lumber Company at that place at that time." This was the day of the wreck.

The evidence does indeed disclose that the Railway Company and the Lumber Company were so closely and intimately connected in ownership and management as to be, so far as the operation of their business was concerned, practically one concern. Still they were distinct individuals, and neither could legally be made liable for the negligent act solely attributable to the other. We may admit that the Lumber Company would not be liable in this case if the train was being operated over the line of the Railway Company, by its own agents and servants, carrying appellee to or from his work, under the terms of its contract with the Lumber Company. But, whatever the terms of that contract may be, there was evidence, which we have quoted, sufficient, if true, to show that the engine and cars were being operated by the servants of the Lumber Company and under the direction of its woods foreman, one Winger. Every member of the crew, engineer, fireman, and brakeman, so testified. If these men did not mean to so state, if in fact the relationship of the two companies was so close that they might have been mistaken about this, or did not know, some attempt should have been made to have them explain. But the testimony is in the record as quoted, without qualification, and we cannot assume that the witnesses did not mean what they have so clearly stated. If it be true that the train crew were operating the engine and cars as employees of the Lumber Company, which might very well have been the case, considering the character of the service in which they were engaged, then the evidence is sufficient to authorize the finding that the accident was the proximate result of the combined negligence of the Railway Company in allowing the obstruction to be and remain on the track, and of those engaged in operating the engine and cars in running at a dangerous rate of speed, and in failing to keep a proper lookout to discover the obstruction on the tracks in time to avoid the accident. The train was being operated with the cars in front, and one witness testified that the speed was 30 miles an hour. We think the evidence as to the liability of the Lumber Company was sufficient to raise an issue for the jury, and the court did not err in refusing the requested charge.

Appellant in the tenth assignment complains of the fifth paragraph of the court's charge. This paragraph contains substantially the entire charge of the court upon the question of the liability of both defendants, and covers two entire pages of appellants' brief. Six separate propositions are stated under the assignment. The assignment itself states the following grounds of objections to the charge: "Said charge is erroneous, in that it assumes that defendants consented to and acquiesced in the act of the plaintiff in riding upon the logging cars, because 'there was not a particle of testimony going to show that the defendants ever acquiesced in or consented to the employes riding upon the logging cars; on the contrary, the proof on that point was entirely one sided, and showed that the defendants oft-times made the employes get off the logging cars; in fact, they did make them get off every time the employes were discovered on the logging cars, and told them it was dangerous to ride on the cars; and the uncontradicted proof shows that the employes operating the train were told by the defendants not to allow any of the employes to ride on the logging cars.' And because said charge was upon the weight of the evidence, and assumed conditions and facts not testified to. And because said charge is argumentative in behalf of the plaintiff, and does not charge the law on issues raised by the pleadings and evidence. And because said paragraph requires the jury to find for the plaintiff, unless they further found that the plaintiff himself was guilty of contributory negligence in being upon the train at the place where he had taken his position thereon, or in attempting to jump therefrom, if he did so. Under paragraph 2 of the court's charge, the jury is instructed that, in order for the plaintiff to have been guilty of contributory negligence, he would have had to contribute towards producing the wreck, and without which the wreck would not have happened."

[8] In so far as the propositions seek to enlarge upon these objections and to state other objections not embraced in the assignment of error, they will not be considered. Addressing ourselves then to the several objections to the charge set out above, the charge is not subject to the criticism that it assumes that the defendants consented to or acquiesced in the act of the plaintiff in riding upon the logging cars. The language of the charge referred to clearly submits this as an issue to be found by the jury. So the specific objection made must fail. If, however, appellants intended to base their objections upon the ground that there was no evidence to raise this issue, the undisputed evidence negating such consent or acquiescence, as stated in the proposition, we cannot agree to this conclusion. The evidence is very conflicting upon this issue, and the preponderance of it perhaps shows that the act of riding on the logging cars was against the orders of the Railway Company, nevertheless, looking to the entire evidence, we cannot say that there was no evidence to support appellee's contention on this point, and to require the submission of the issue. It is of some significance on this issue that there was evidence that there were between 40 and 50 men to be carried, that outside these logging cars no place was provided for them to ride except the engine and tender, which also had to carry wood for firing the engine, and that these places were not sufficient for that purpose. There was also testimony that the men habitually rode on the logging cars, especially since the cabooses had been out of use.

The second objection is that the charge was upon the weight of the evidence and assumed conditions and facts not testified to. We have examined the charge carefully, and (if we are required to consider an objection so general) can find nothing to justify this criticism.

The third objection, that the charge is argumentative, etc., is too general, but appears to us to be groundless.

The fourth objection is groundless. There is nothing in the charge that could afford ground for the criticism, that it requires the jury to find for the plaintiff, unless they find that he was guilty of contributory negligence. The liability of defendants on any ground is clearly submitted as an issue to be determined by the jury. We have examined the paragraph of the charge carefully in view of the objections urged, and can find nothing to support any of them. The assignment and the several propositions thereunder are overruled.

[9] There was no error in instructing the jury, as set out in the twelfth assignment of error, that, if appellee "took up a position more dangerous than some other parts of the train when he was permitted to ride, he should be held to have assumed the risk of the more dangerous position, yet he did not assume thereby any risk of danger resulting from and proximately caused by the negligence of defendants, their agents and servants." This was a correct statement of the law.

[10] The court did not err in that portion of the charge in which the jury was instructed with regard to the degree of care required of the Railway Company. If the Railway Company had contracted with the Lumber Company to transport appellee with others on this train for a consideration paid by the Lumber Company, appellee was a passenger, and entitled to the exercise of that degree of care required in the carriage of passengers in the kind of vehicle used always taking into consideration the character of the conveyance and the obviously greater danger in riding on a logging car than in an ordinary passenger car. This was in substance the principle stated in the charge. Railway Co. v. Wilson, 79 Tex.

[11] The charge on the measure of damages, set out in the thirteenth and fourteenth assignments of error, was that the jury "might take into consideration the loss of time, if any, which plaintiff has already suffered, as well as the loss of time, if any, which you may find he will suffer in the future," etc., also that if the jury finds that plaintiff is insane, and that such insanity was proximately caused by his injuries, and the jury should find in his favor, then in estimating his damages the jury should take into consideration the fact of the insanity, so far as it affects his earning power. This was a proper charge under the pleadings and evidence. It is not subject to the objection that it authorized the recovery of double damages. Damages for loss of earning capacity, or of time, produced by insanity would be recoverable in the same way and to the same extent as for such effects produced by a broken leg, or any other injury. It would be an extraordinary conclusion that because appellee was incapacitated from labor while insane he could not recover for such loss of earning power, if the insanity was proximately caused by the injuries for the proximate consequences of which defendants were otherwise liable.

[12] Objection is made by appellee to the consideration of the fifteenth assignment of error on the ground that only a part of the assignment is copied in the brief. This we find to be true, and the objection is well taken. Other exceptions are taken to the assignment on the ground that it presents several distinct grounds of error, that it is too general on the question of the excessiveness of the verdict, and that the statement following the assignment is insufficient. We are inclined to think that all of these exceptions are well taken. As stated, it is difficult to understand what is undertaken to be presented by the assignment. The proposition under the assignments is as follows: "The court having authorized the jury to award damages on account of plaintiff's alleged insanity, without evidence to justify a finding that such insanity was a proximate result of the alleged derailment and injury, and having authorized double damages therefor, and the verdict in the sum of $7,500, being general in form, will be presumed to embrace allowance of the items so improperly authorized by the charge on the ground of insanity."

[13] What we have said is sufficient to dispose of the questions presented. The evidence was sufficient to support the finding that the insanity was the proximate result of the injuries received in the wreck. Several witnesses testified that there was never any indication of insanity prior thereto, and there was testimony both that the insanity might have resulted entirely from these injuries, and also that, if appellee was predisposed to insanity, these injuries might have brought on the insane condition. The charge of the court, as we have seen, did not authorize the recovery of double damages.

There is no merit in the sixteenth assignment of error. The court submitted to the jury the issue of contributory negligence on the part of appellee either "in being upon said train at the place where he had taken his position thereon, or in attempting to jump therefrom," and the charge precluded recovery if the jury found that he was guilty of contributory negligence in either particular. We doubt if any enlargement or elaboration of these points would have been of material assistance to the jury.

[14] The seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth assignments of error cannot be considered. The only statement under either is, "See statement under fifteenth assignment of error." Referring to the statement under the fifteenth assignment of error, we find that it refers to a question in no way relating to the questions presented by either of these assignments. These assignments relate to the issues of contributory negligence and to the refusal of special charges on that issue. The statement under the fifteenth assignment refers solely to the issue of insanity as proximately caused by the injuries and the evidence relied upon to support appellants' contention on this issue.

[15] Appellants requested the court to charge the jury, in substance, that if the train was provided with a tender upon which appellee could have ridden with reasonable safety, and it was sufficiently commodious to accommodate him and the other hands, and that appellee voluntarily placed himself upon one of the logging cars, and that this position was more dangerous and he would not have been injured if he had been on the tender, he could not recover. This was, in effect, an instruction that the act of appellee in thus taking position on the logging cars in the circumstances stated was contributory negligence precluding recovery as matter of law. There was no error in refusing the charge. It was an issue for the jury whether in the circumstances stated in the requested charge appellee acted as a person of ordinary prudence would have acted, taking into consideration all of the circumstances disclosed by the record. Bonner v. Glenn, 79 Tex. 531, 15 S. W. 572; Railway Co. v. Welch, 24 S. W. 854.

We have examined each of the assignments (except the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth, which for the reasons stated cannot be considered) and the several propositions thereunder, and our conclusion is that none of them presents sufficient grounds for reversing the judgment, and it is therefore affirmed.

Affirmed.

WALKER et al. v. METROPOLITAN ST. RY. CO.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Dallas. Dec. 14, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 253*)—RECORD—QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW.

Where the record fails to show any exception to plaintiff's petition, the question of the propriety of sustaining an exception thereto cannot be considered on appeal.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 548*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—NECESSITY.

Where there is no bill of exceptions showing that testimony mentioned in an assignment of error was excluded, the court's action cannot be reviewed.

3. CARRIERS (§ 295*)—PASSENGERS—NEGLIGENCE—VIOLATION OF MUNICIPAL ORDINANCE.

Municipal ordinances fixing the rate of speed at which street cars may be operated are for the benefit of persons lawfully crossing the track and not for passengers, and a violation of such ordinances does not raise an imputation of negligence per se in favor of an injured passenger.

4. TRIAL (§ 251*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO PLEADINGS.

A requested instruction, which authorizes a recovery for negligence not counted on in the petition, is properly refused.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 750*)—ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR—NECESSITY AND SCOPE.

Where it is contended that plaintiff's request for an improper instruction was sufficient to direct the court's attention to the failure of the general charge to submit the issue desired, and that it should have prepared and given a correct charge on the subject, that complaint must be raised and presented by separate assignment of error, and, if only incidentally presented in the assignment complaining of the refusal of the request, it cannot be considered.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 719*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—NECESSITY.

Under rule 24 for the Courts of Civil Appeals (142 S. W. 2d), providing that the assignment of error must distinctly specify the grounds, and be distinctly set forth in the motion for new trial, objections to an instruction on the degree of care due from defendant carrier to plaintiff cannot be reviewed, where not raised in the motion for new trial; such error not being fundamental.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1064*)—REVERSIBLE ERROR.

In an action against a street railway for injuries suffered by plaintiff, a passenger, an instruction that it was the duty of defendant and its servants, engaged in the operation of a car on which plaintiff was passenger, to exercise that high degree of care that would have been usually exercised by very cautious, competent, and prudent persons under similar circumstances, while erroneous in the use of the word "usually," does not constitute reversible error.

8. TRIAL (§ 194*)—INSTRUCTIONS—WEIGHT OF TESTIMONY.

Where the answer pleaded three issues of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff passenger, and these issues were substantiated by testimony, separate charges thereon were not on the weight of the evidence because giving undue prominence to the issue of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 413, 439-441, 446-454, 456-466; Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

Appeal from District Court, Dallas County; Kenneth Foree, Judge.

Action by Minnie Walker and others against the Metropolitan Street Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Dwight Lewelling and Wilson, Williamson & Simmons, all of Dallas, for appellants. Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood, of Houston, and Spence, Knight, Baker & Harris, of Dallas, for appellee.

TALBOT, J. This suit was brought to recover damages alleged to have been sustained on account of personal injuries charged to have been inflicted upon appellant, Mrs. Minnie Walker, through the negligence of appellee in causing her to be thrown from one of its cars. The petition alleges, in substance, that plaintiff, Mrs. Minnie Walker, was a passenger on one of defendant's "North Belt" cars in the city of Dallas, and desired to alight at Haskell avenue; that she signaled the conductor in charge of the car to stop the car at Haskell avenue, but the signal was disregarded; that the next street after passing Haskell avenue was Peak street, into which the street railway tracks entered and turned north, making a sharp curve; that in approaching this curve the car upon which plaintiff was riding was being negligently operated and run at a dangerous rate of speed, to wit, at about 30 miles per hour, and struck the curve at Peak street with great force, by reason of which negligence plaintiff was thrown from the car to the ground and seriously injured. The petition further alleges, as a ground of negligence on the part of defendant, that the rate of speed at which the car was being operated was in violation of a city ordinance of the city of Dallas, making it unlawful to "drive or move a street car" at a greater rate of speed than 12 miles per hour in that part of the territory of the city where the accident to plaintiff occurred. The defendant answered by general and special demurrers, a general denial, and specially that Mrs. Walker, on the occasion of the accident complained of, was guilty of contributory negligence in the following particulars, namely: "(a) She left her place of safety upon the defendant's car while the same was in motion, and proceeded to the running board thereof; (b) she alighted from one of defendant's cars while the same was in motion, and before it had stopped for passengers to alight therefrom; (c) that in alighting from said car she failed to follow the motion thereof, alighting therefrom in a negligent and careless manner." Defendant further says that, if the accident happened in the manner complained of, plaintiff's wife, Minnie Walker, occupied a seat in the car, and while she was so occupying same she was in a place of safety; that she voluntarily left her seat and place of safety in the car while the car was in motion and while it was approaching a curve in the defendant's track at the intersection of Main and Peak streets; that she then stood upon the floor of the car and stepped down upon the running board thereof; that any jerk or movement of the car around the curve was only such as was necessarily and ordinarily incident to the operation of the car; and that plaintiff's wife assumed the risk of any injury she may have sustained as the result of such operation, having full knowledge of the fact that said car was approaching the curve. A jury trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiffs appeal.

The evidence shows that Mrs. Walker was a passenger on defendant's car, as alleged by her, and there is testimony to the effect that the car at the time of the accident was probably moving at a greater rate of speed than 12 miles per hour, and that Mrs. Walker by reason of the movement of the car, as it was making the curve at Peak street, fell or was thrown from it and seriously injured, but that the defendant was not guilty of actionable negligence, and that Mrs. Walker attempted to alight from a moving car, and simply in doing so, or in the manner she attempted to alight, was guilty of negligence, proximately causing her injuries, seems to be very clearly established by a preponderance of the evidence. That the evidence was, at all events, amply sufficient to authorize and sustain the verdict rendered in defendant's favor, is not denied; nor do we think it could be reasonably denied.

[1, 2] The first assignment of error is that "the court erred in sustaining the defendant's exception to that part of the plaintiff's petition wherein plaintiffs show that the defendant company, through its agents, failed and refused to stop said car, although properly signaled to do so, at Haskell avenue, said signal having been given in time for said car to stop," and charging that the defendant's conduct in that behalf was negligent and was one of the causes that precipitated the plaintiff's injury. The court also erred in sustaining the objection of the defendant to the admission of plaintiff's testimony to the effect that she "did signal for said car to stop at said Haskell avenue, and made efforts to have same stopped, but that it did not stop pursuant to her proper request." The record sent to this court does not show that any such exception as that mentioned in the assignment was presented to and acted upon by the trial court; nor does the record show by bill of exception or otherwise that the trial court sustained objections of the defendant to the admission of testimony offered by the plaintiffs to the effect that Mrs. Walker signaled for the car in which she was riding to stop at Haskell avenue. In the absence of a record entry showing that the exception referred to was sustained, the ruling of the court cannot be reviewed. Likewise, without a bill of exception showing that the testimony mentioned in the assignment of error was excluded, the court's action in reference thereto cannot be considered and reviewed by this court.

[3] The third and fourth assignments of error are grouped. The third is as follows: "The court erred in not submitting to the jury in its main charge the issue as to the speed of the car and the law regulating the speed of running street cars within the corporate limits of the city of Dallas, and only submitting to them the common-law duties imposed upon the defendant, the ordinances and state law regulating the speed of cars and fixing the speed limits ought to have been submitted to the jury in the main charge, and the court erred in failing so to do." The fourth is: "The court erred in refusing the special charge requested on behalf of the plaintiff charging the jury as touching the effect of the law as written in articles 487 and 486, the same being valid ordinances of the city of Dallas. If the said special charge was erroneous in itself, it was sufficient to direct the court's attention to the law upon the issues of fact that the plaintiffs desired submitted to the jury, and the court erred in failing to give a correct charge in that particular."

It would seem that under the decisions in this state the ordinance in question has no application to the facts of this case. In Railway Co. v. Highnote, 99 Tex. 23, 86 S. W. 923, the object and scope of a city ordinance forbidding the running of railway trains or cars within the limits of the city at a speed in excess of six miles per hour was under discussion, and the Supreme Court said: "The purpose of the ordinance was to protect persons who might be lawfully upon or crossing the track, but it has no reference to passengers upon moving trains who might wish to get off while in motion. Therefore there was no duty on the part of the defendant railway company to the plaintiff to run its train at a speed less than six miles per hour, and negligence in the violation of that ordinance cannot be imputed in favor of the plaintiff to give him a right of action for the injury received in leaving the train in that instance." Following that decision, this court held, in the case of Railway Co. v. Schuttee, 91 S. W. 806, that such an ordinance had no application to one attempting to board a moving train at a station.

[4] Again, the special charge refused was incorrect in an important particular. It not only instructed the jury that if the defendant's car, upon the occasion of the accident, was operated at a greater rate of speed than 12 miles per hour, etc., they should find for the plaintiff, but the jury were further told that the defendant would be responsible in law for any act of negligence in the operation of its car on said occasion, regardless of the rate of speed at which said car was going, etc. The charge therefore did not limit the liability of the defendant to acts of negligence charged in the plaintiff's petition, but permitted the jury to hold the defendant responsible and liable in damages for the injuries received by Mrs. Walker, if they believed such injuries were the result of any character of carelessness or negligence on the part of operatives of the car, whether such negligence was alleged as a basis of recovery or not.

[5] But appellant insists, as shown by the fourth assignment of error, copied above, that, if the special charge was erroneous, it was sufficient to direct the court's attention to the failure of the general charge to submit the issue desired, and the court should have prepared and given a correct charge on the subject. The answer to this contention is that, if the appellants desired this complaint considered on appeal, they should have raised and presented it by an assignment of error, asserting that the court should, in view of the requested charge, have given another and proper charge. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Maverick, 78 S. W. 560; El Paso Elec. Ry. Co. v. Harry, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 90, 83 S. W. 735; Metcalfe v. Lowenstein, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 619, 81 S. W. 362; Bank v. Moor, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 476, 79 S. W. 53.

[6] In the first paragraph of the court's charge the jury was instructed as follows: "It was the duty of the defendant, its servants and employes engaged in the operation of the car upon which the plaintiff was a passenger, upon the occasion referred to in the plaintiff's petition, to exercise that high degree of care for her safety that would have been usually exercised by very cautious, competent, and prudent persons under the same or similar circumstances, and the failure, if any, to exercise such care, is negligence on the part of defendant." The use of the word "usually" in this charge is objected to, and the objection urged in appellant's fifth assignment of error. The appellee objects to a consideration of the assignment, because no complaint was made by appellants, in their amended motion for a new trial filed in the district court, of the correctness of the charge in defining the degree of care owed by defendant to Mrs. Walker. This objection is well taken and will be sustained. Rule 24 (142 S. W. xli), as recently amended by the Supreme Court, relating to assignments of error for the government of the Courts of Civil Appeals of this state, is as follows: "The assignment of error must distinctly specify the grounds of error relied on and distinctly set forth in the motion for a new trial in the cause, and a ground of error not distinctly set forth in a motion for a new trial in the cause and not distinctly specified in reference to that which is shown in the record, or not specified at all, shall be considered as waived, unless it be so fundamental that the court would act upon it without an assignment of error as mentioned in rule 23." Under this rule, as we construe it, a ground of error not "distinctly set forth in the motion for a new trial" filed in the lower court should not be considered on appeal, unless such error is fundamental. Such is not the character of the supposed error complained of. Appellants' amended motion for a new trial was filed in the court below about two months after amended rule 24, above quoted, became effective, and in it appellants seem to have understood and appreciated its demands. They complain in said motion at considerable length and with much particularity of numerous alleged errors committed by the trial court, but nowhere complained that the court's charge upon the degree of care which the appellee owed Mrs. Walker was incorrect.

[7] If, however, the matter was properly presented to this court for review, we are not prepared to say there was error in the charge. Railway Co. v. Miller, 79 Tex. 78, 15 S. W. 264, 11 L. R. A. 396, 23 Am. St. Rep. 308; Railway Co. v. Harrison, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 368, 73 S. W. 38; Dallas Consolidated Traction Co. v. Randolph, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 213, 27 S. W. 925; Railway Co. v. Davidson, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 542, 21 S. W. 68; Railway Co. v. Morrow, 93 S. W. 162. It probably would have been more in conformity to the charge usually given upon the subject had the word "usually" been omitted; but its use does not, in any event, constitute reversible or material error.

[8] The remaining assignments of error complained, respectively, of the giving of appellee's special charges Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Charge No. 1 instructed the jury, in effect, "that if they believed that the plaintiff, Mrs.

Walker, left her seat in the car, and that the same was a place of safety, and that she voluntarily proceeded to the edge of the car or to the running board thereof, and while there she was thrown from the car, and that an ordinarily prudent person would not have done so, and that such acts contributed to her injury, then she was guilty of negligence and could not recover." By charge No. 2, they were told, in substance, that if they believed Mrs. Walker alighted from defendant's car while the same was in motion, and that an ordinarily prudent person would not have so acted under the same circumstances, that such act proximately contributed to her injuries, and that in the event they so believed to find for defendant. Charge No. 3 is to the effect that if the jury believed that Mrs. Walker alighted from defendant's car while the same was in motion, and should further find that in alighting from said car she failed to follow the motion thereof, but alighted therefrom without facing the direction in which the car was moving and without following the motion thereof, and should further find that an ordinarily prudent person would not so have acted under the same circumstances, and that such conduct upon her part contributed to the accident complained of herein, then Mrs. Walker was guilty of contributory negligence which would preclude a recovery.

The only proposition advanced under these assignments is to the effect that the giving of the three special charges had the purpose and effect of giving undue prominence to the issue of contributory negligence, and therefore on the weight of the evidence. Confining ourselves to the objection urged by the proposition propounded, we hold there was no error in giving the charges. Three separate and distinct issues of contributory negligence on the part of Mrs. Walker were tendered by defendant's answer, and the evidence offered in support thereof was amply sufficient to establish each and all of them. These were the issues submitted in the charges complained of, and it occurs to us that the court would have erred had it refused to give either of said charges. The separate issues of contributory negligence having been raised by the pleadings and the evidence, it became the duty of the court, especially in view of the request therefor, to charge the jury the law arising upon the facts with reference to each of such issues. The charges were not, therefore, objectionable for the reason urged.

A careful review of the record has convinced us that the proper verdict has been rendered in this case, that appellants' assignments of error disclose no reversible error, and that the judgment of the district court should be affirmed. It is therefore, accordingly, so ordered.

WILKIN et al. v. SIMMONS et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Amarillo.
Nov. 16, 1912. Rehearing Denied
Dec. 14, 1912.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 883*)—
SALE OF LAND—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

A sale of land upon an administrator's application for its sale on the ground of the necessity for the support of minor heirs, and that it is for the best interest of the estate, is merely erroneous, and not absolutely void so as to allow collateral attack on the ground that it was for an unauthorized purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1554; Dec. Dig. § 883.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 849*)—
SALE—JURISDICTION OF PROBATE COURT.

If the probate court acquires jurisdiction of the property of an estate and of the persons interested therein, it has complete jurisdiction so that its order of sale can only be tested in direct proceedings and not on collateral attack.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1446, 1449-1455; Dec. Dig. § 849.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 495*)—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Every presumption is in favor of the jurisdiction of a court of general jurisdiction in a collateral attack on its judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 933, 934; Dec. Dig. § 495.*]

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 326*)—
SALE OF LAND — PURPOSE — SUPPORT OF MINOR CHILDREN.

If the probate court had fixed the allowance for the support of a widow and minor children of decedent, and there was a necessity for providing funds for a year's support of the children, it was authorized to order a sale of land of the estate, on the administrator's application, for the support of such heirs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1343; Dec. Dig. § 326.*]

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 326*)—
ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE—JURISDICTION.

The existence of orders by the probate court fixing the allowance for the year's support of minor children and the amount of the allowance in lieu of exempt property would not be necessary to give the court jurisdiction to order the sale of land of the estate for the support of such children as heirs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1343; Dec. Dig. § 326.*]

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 349*)—
SALE—VALIDITY.

The question whether a sale of the land was necessary for the support of minor heirs, on an administrator's application for a sale for that purpose, was for the determination of the probate court, and its judgment thereon cannot be collaterally attacked.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1446, 1449-1455; Dec. Dig. § 349.*]

7. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 349*)—
SALE OF LAND—DESCRIPTION.

The land sold on an administrator's application for its sale for the support of minor heirs was described in the patent to decedent L. as, the "L. pre-emption survey of 160 acres in H. county, known as survey No. 2, block M. & L." etc., giving field notes. L. and others laid out the town of P. and dedicated the streets,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes etc., "of said town of P. in said county of H., as shown by the accompanying map of said town"; the north part of the town being the south half of the L. pre-emption. The administrator's application for an order of sale described the property as "a certain tract of realty belonging to the estate of L., and said real estate is here described as all those lots yet unsold belonging, situated in the county of H., and better known as the north half of the town of P., patented to L. by virtue of the pre-emption laws." Held, that the land sold was sufficiently described so as to make the order of sale valid on collateral attack.

8. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 388*)—ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE — NECESSITY OF DEED.

An order of sale of the land of an estate, report thereof, and confirmation, are sufficient to give the purchaser title without the execution of a deed, so that it is immaterial that a deed was made before the order of confirmation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1573-1582; Dec. Dig. § 388.*]

9. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 31*)—OUSTER—APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN.

The appointment of a guardian of minor heirs did not ipso facto oust the administrator of decedent's estate, in view of Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 3235, providing that upon a death intestate decedent's property shall vest in his heirs at law, but all of his estate shall pass to the administrator for distribution pursuant to law; the appointment of the guardian, who was an aunt of the heirs, being advisable so that they could reside with her at the homestead.

Appeal from District Court, Hale County; F. P. Greever, Special Judge.

Suit by R. H. Wilkin against A. W. Simmons and another, impleaded, in which one McCormick intervened. From a judgment against plaintiff and intervener, they both appeal. Affirmed.

J. L. Penry, of Amarillo, L. C. Penry, and Randolph & Randolph, all of Plainview, for appellants. Madden, Trulove & Kimbrough, of Amarillo, for appellees.

PRESLER, J. This is a suit by appellant R. H. Wilkin in the form of trespass to try title to lots Nos. 27 and 28 in block No. 31, in the town of Plainview, Hale county, Tex., in which the appellant McCormick intervened, seeking to recover a half interest in the same property. The appellee (L. B. Simmons) answered by general demurrer, plea of not guilty, general denial, and a special answer, setting up the statute of limitation; also by special answer impleading his warrantor, J. C. Pipkin. The original defendants other than the appellee having been dismissed, the case proceeded to trial before the court without a jury and resulted in a judgment in favor of appellee (L. B. Simmons) and against the plaintiff and the intervener, and also in favor of the warrantor, J. C. Pipkin. From this judgment both appellants duly appeal to this court and here seek to have said cause reversed and rendered in their favor upon errors assigned.

In our opinion, it is apparent from the record that the entire case as presented by the appeal turns upon the question of the validity of the sale by C. H. Gilbert, administrator of the estate of E. L. Lowe, to J. C. Pipkin, which included the two lots sued for and three other lots in the same block in the town of Plainview; the deed reciting a consideration of $177.50. The validity of this sale, as shown under appellant's tenth assignment of error, is attacked upon the ground that the orders of the probate court of Hale county, Tex., supporting this sale, are invalid and subject to collateral attack because it is claimed that the probate court was without jurisdiction to enter the orders and that such lack of jurisdiction appears upon the face of the record, in that the application and the order of sale are not authorized by law. It appears from the evidence that E. L. Lowe died in Hale county, Tex., in 1889, and that C. H. Gilbert was duly appointed and qualified as administrator of said Lowe's estate; that said Lowe left a will not naming an executor, bequeathing $1,280 to said Gilbert in trust, to be used by him and interest to be paid to the two children which the deceased left surviving him, and leaving the remainder of his property to be distributed according to law; that deceased at the time of his death was a widower and left as his only heirs at law two little girls, one named Janie, about five years of age, and one named Mattie, who was also a minor; that Mattie first married a man by the name of Davis, from whom she was afterwards divorced, and then married a man by the name of Paulson, with whom she still lives; that Janie married a man by the name of Quillen; that the lots in controversy were not a part of the homestead of deceased; that deceased's family at the time of his death consisted of himself, the two little girls, and M. A. Lowe, an aunt of their deceased mother, a sister of C. H. Gilbert, the widow of deceased's brother; that Gilbert also lived at deceased's home when in town; that some time after the appointment and qualification of said C. H. Gilbert as administrator of the estate of deceased, the said M. A. Lowe was appointed guardian of the two children; that the said guardian and Gilbert, the uncle and aunt of the two children, continued to keep house as Lowe had done and took care of the children, using the proceeds of the sale of the property belonging to the estate for that purpose; that Gilbert got the orders of the court shown in the record and with the knowledge and consent of his sister, guardian of the children, sold the lands and used the proceeds for paying the expenses incurred by her in taking care of the two children; that he did this because the children had no other means of support; that as administrator of the estate he had a settlement with Mrs. Lowe, the guardian, and accounted to her for all the proceeds that he got from the sale of the land; that the children got the benefit of these proceeds through their guardian for food, clothing, and education; that the money received from Pipkin for the two lots in controversy was used for the support of said children. Gilbert testified that he did not use the money for any other purpose than for the children.

From the inventory and list of claims filed by the administrator, it further appears that the estate consisted largely of real estate, and that there were debts owing by the estate in addition to the legacy of $1,280 bequeathed to the said Gilbert. There was also an insurance policy of $2,000; but whether this was a part of the estate or not, or who were the beneficiaries, does not conclusively appear further than it appears to have been collected by the administrator of the estate and turned over to the guardian of the minors upon her receipt therefor. It does not appear how this money was used by said guardian. The foregoing appearing to be the condition of the estate at the May term, 1890, the administrator made the following application to the county court: "Estate of E. L. Lowe, deceased, In the County Court of Hale County, Texas, May Term, 1890, Sitting in Probate. To the Honorable J. C. Burch, Judge of Said Court, Presiding: Your petitioner, C. H. Gilbert, administrator of the estate of E. L. Lowe, deceased, respectfully represents to said court that there is a certain tract of real estate belonging to the said estate of E. L. Lowe and said real estate is here described as all those lots yet unsold belonging, being situated in the county of Hale and state of Texas, and better known as the north half of the town of Plainview, patented to E. L. Lowe, by virtue of the pre-emption laws of the state of Texas. Your petitioner further represents that it is necessary for the support and maintenance of the heirs and for the best interest of said estate that said property hereinbefore described be sold at private sale for cash or on such terms as you may think best for said estate. [Signed] C. H. Gilbert"—and sworn to.

The order granting the application and directing the property to be sold is as follows: "The estate of E. L. Lowe, May 6, 1890. Now comes on to be heard the application of C. H. Gilbert, administrator of the estate of E. L. Lowe, deceased, asking that an order of court be granted to sell at private sale certain lots in the town of Plainview, Tex., and it appearing to the court that it is necessary for the support and maintenance of the heirs that said property be sold, it is therefore ordered and adjudged by the court that C. H. Gilbert, administrator of the estate of E. L. Lowe, deceased, be granted full power to sell so much of the real estate belonging to said estate, situated in the town of Plainview, as is necessary for the support and maintenance of said heirs, and that said sales be made in private and for cash or on a credit as may be in the mind of said administrator for the best interest of said estate." The notation on the judge's docket is as follows: "May 6, 1890. Application to sell real estate approved." So much of the administrator's report of sale as relates to the lots in question is as follows: "To the Honorable County Court of Hale County, Sitting in Probate at the Regular Term of Said Court of Hale County, Sitting at its Regular November Term, A. D. 1890, J. C. Burch, County Judge, Presiding: I beg to represent that pursuant to an order of your court, passed at the May term, 1890, I, C. H. Gilbert, administrator of the estate of E. L. Lowe, deceased, have since that time made the following sales of real estate belonging to said estate: * * * To J. C. Pipkin, lots 27, 28, 29, 30 and 31, block 31, consideration $177.50, cash, July 12, 1890. I, C. H. Gilbert, administrator, * * * of the estate of E. L. Lowe, deceased, do solemnly swear that the above and foregoing is a true and correct list of all of the sales made by me under the order of court passed at the regular May term of your court, providing for the sale of certain real estate belonging to the estate of E. L. Lowe, and respectfully ask that said sales be confirmed. C. H. Gilbert, Administrator. Sworn to and subscribed before me this the 7th day of November, 1890"—the place for the signature of the officer being blank. The order of the court, approving the sale, is as follows: "Estate of E. L. Lowe, deceased, November 7, 1890. Now at this time came on to be heard the above and foregoing report of C. H. Gilbert, administrator of the estate of E. L. Lowe, deceased, as to the real estate sold by him belonging to said estate, and the court, after hearing said report read and duly considering the matter, is of the opinion that said sale should be in all things confirmed and said report approved. It is therefore ordered and decreed by the court that said report be and the same is hereby in all things approved and the sales mentioned therein confirmed, and that C. H. Gilbert, administrator as aforesaid, is hereby authorized to make good and sufficient conveyance in law to the several purchasers of the real estate mentioned in the above report."

The administrator's deed to J. C. Pipkin appears to have preceded the confirmation order, having been executed on the 17th day of July, 1890, and, together with the acknowledgment and certificate of registration thereof, is as follows:

"The State of Texas, County of Hale. Know all men by these presents, that I, C.

H. Gilbert, administrator of the estate of E. L. Lowe, deceased, and of the county of Hale and state aforesaid, for and in consideration of the sum of one hundred and seventy-seven and 50-100 dollars to me in hand paid by J. C. Pipkin, have granted, sold and conveyed and by these presents do grant, sell and convey unto the said J. C. Pipkin, of the county of Hale and state of Texas, all those certain tracts and lots of land situated in Plainview, Texas, known and described as lots numbers 27, 28, 29, 30 and 31, in block 31, as shown by the town plat of Plainview, which is of record in the clerk's office of Hale county, Texas. To have and to hold the above-described premises together with all and singular the rights and appurtenances thereto in any wise belonging unto the said J. C. Pipkin, his heirs and assigns, forever, and I do hereby bind myself, my heirs and successors, in office to warrant and forever defend all and singular the said premises unto the said J. C. Pipkin, his heirs and assigns, against every person whomsoever lawfully claiming or to claim the same or any part thereof. Witness my hand at Plainview, this 17th day of July, A. D., 1890. C. H. Gilbert, Administrator. Signed and delivered in the presence of ———.

"The State of Texas, County of Hale. Before me, S. P. Strong, clerk of the county court in and for Hale county, Texas, on this day personally appeared C. H. Gilbert, administrator of the estate of E. L. Lowe, deceased, known to me to be the person whose name is subscribed to the foregoing instrument, and acknowledged to me that he executed the same for the purposes and consideration therein expressed and in the capacity therein set forth. Given under my hand and seal of office, this 17th day of July, A. D. 1890. S. P. Strong, Clerk.

"Filed for record July 18th, 1890, at 8 o'clock p. m.; recorded July 19th, 1890, at 8 o'clock a. m. S. P. Strong, County Clerk."

[1] Appellants, under their first assignment of error, complain of the action of the court in admitting in evidence the list of claims as shown by the claim register of Hale county probate record in this estate, upon the ground that the same was not based upon an application, order of sale, and order confirming the sale for the purpose of paying debts of the estate, and that in this case, the various orders subsequent showing a different purpose than the payment of debts, such evidence was immaterial and, under their second, third, fourth, and fifth assignments of error, object to the admission in evidence of the application to sell the real estate belonging to the estate of deceased, and to the order of sale granted, the report of the administrator of the sale of the property sold, and the order confirming the sale, upon substantially the same grounds; that is, that the purpose of the sale was one not authorized by law, and that there was no sufficient description of the property ordered sold and none of the property sold. The question thus presented as to the authority of the court to grant the orders referred to is decisive of this case, and we are of the opinion that the testimony objected to was admissible for the purpose of showing an order of sale by a court of competent jurisdiction not subject to collateral attack, supporting the deed of C. H. Gilbert, administrator, to J. C. Pipkin, conveying the property in controversy. Upon the evidence, the county court of Hale county unquestionably had jurisdiction of the estate of E. L. Lowe, and had authority to order any or all of his property to be sold. The purposes for which the court having authority of jurisdiction may direct a sale of property are not jurisdictional. In our opinion, such questions go to the propriety or even the validity of the court's order when tested in a direct proceeding; but, when a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties makes an order of sale for a purpose not authorized by law, we think such order is simply erroneous, but not void, and to correct the same the law provides specific and ample remedies; but if these remedies be neglected, and the parties interested do not choose to pursue them, the order stands as the order of a court of competent jurisdiction and is valid and binding against every collateral attack.

In Poor v. Boyce, 12 Tex. 440, the petition or application of the administrator for the sale of the property recited that there had come to the hands of the administratrix certain improvements rightfully belonging to the estate, but "about which there will be a great deal of litigation and expense to the petitioner to obtain the land." For this reason, she asked for an order to sell the land. Accordingly, an order was made for the sale of the improvements, and exception was reserved to the introduction of this application and order, and the court in an opinion by Judge Wheeler, said: "The subsequent sale by order of the probate court divested the title of the heirs. The petition of the administratrix gave the court jurisdiction. Finch v. Edmonson, 9 Tex. 504. All other questions, in the absence of fraud, are concluded by the judgment. In the case of Lynch v. Baxter, 4 Tex. 431 [51 Am. Dec. 735], it was determined that it was not essential to the title of the purchaser of property at administrator's sale that the record should show a necessity for the sale. The order of sale is conclusive of that question until it be set aside by a proceeding having that object directly in view, and the purchaser, in the absence of fraud, will be protected."

In Weems v. Masterson, 80 Tex. 45, 15 S. W. 590, the application for an order of sale by a guardian of minors represented that they owned a certain tract of land which was "constantly depreciating in value on account of depredations that are constantly being made by parties unlawfully entering upon said land and carrying off the wood and timber; * * * that it is their belief that it would be for the interest of said minors to sell the land and invest the proceeds in some other way." The court ordered the sale to be made. The title of the purchaser was attacked upon the ground that the statute did not authorize the court to order a sale of the ward's land by the guardian for the purposes expressed in the application. The opinion of the court was delivered by Chief Justice Stayton. He reviewed the decisions in Texas, from Lynch v. Baxter, down, and held that the county courts, in all matters relating to the administration of estates of deceased persons and minors, are courts of general jurisdiction, and that all presumptions will be indulged in favor of the jurisdiction of such courts when exercised over a subject-matter confided to them by law that would be indulged in favor of the jurisdiction of any other court of general jurisdiction, and that their judgments and decrees cannot be collaterally attacked unless the record shows the want of jurisdiction; that the county court of Harris county, which made the order, did have power to order and confirm the sale of lands belonging to a minor's estate; that its jurisdiction had attached to the estate of minors then being administered; that although the application for the order to sell did not state that it was necessary for the support and education of the minors or for the payment of debts, yet, if absolutely necessary to confer jurisdiction on the court, it ought to be presumed that another application had been filed before the order was made, and that the order of the court, directing the sale to be made and confirming the sale, would not be void and subject to collateral attack, although no application to sell other than that found in the record was ever made; that to hold the order of sale and the sale void, because the application set up a purpose not specified in the statute, would be like holding that a judgment of the district court could be collaterally attacked because the pleadings were defective. That in that case the proceedings of the probate court should have been held to be conclusive of the validity of the sale of the lands; that the case of McNally v. Haynes, 59 Tex. 585, in which it was suggested that, if the application for the order to sell lands of an estate should disclose the fact that the purpose or object of the sale was not such as to authorize the court to make the order, the purchaser could not rely upon it, should be disapproved; that the fact that the application may be defective cannot deprive an order of its conclusive effect in all collateral proceedings.

This is one of the great judgments rendered by Judge Stayton. It was intended to review the whole law of the subject, clarifying the principles involved, and establishing the law upon the firm basis that, the probate court having potential jurisdiction of the estates of deceased persons and minors, that jurisdiction attached to the estate by the commencement of administration proceedings on such estate in that court, and when an application was made by the administrator or guardian for the sale of lands belonging to the ward or deceased, and this application was followed by an order directing the guardian or administrator to sell the lands, it becomes immaterial, on collateral attack, whether the application was perfect or defective, whether it asks for the sale for a purpose authorized by law, or not authorized by law; that these questions went, not to the jurisdiction of the court, but to the correctness of its orders; and that the question of correctness could only be reviewed in a direct proceeding and could not be called in question in a collateral proceeding.

In Taffinder v. Merrell, 95 Tex. 95, 65 S. W. 177, 93 Am. St. Rep. 814, the application of the guardian for an order to sell his ward's land stated that: "It would be greatly to the interest of his said ward for said property to be sold, because said property is unimproved and cannot be rented for anything, and the taxes will soon consume the entire amount." No other reason was given for asking for the order of sale. The order of court likewise ordered the sale to be made at public or private sale for cash or on credit, simply reciting that it appeared to the satisfaction of the court that "it is for the best interest of the minors that said real estate be sold." Here the application and the order of sale both showed that the order was asked for and was made simply upon the ground that it would be for the best interest of the minors. But the statutes neither then, nor at any other time, have ever authorized the probate court to make a sale of land belonging to minors simply upon the ground that the court and guardian might deem it to their best interest, and certainly never did authorize the sale of land belonging to a minor simply to be relieved of the burden of paying taxes on the land. Judge Williams delivered opinion of the court, saying: "The first objection to the guardian's sale above stated (that is, that it appears from the record of the probate proceedings that said sale was made for a purpose for which a sale was not authorized by law [95 Tex. at page 100, 65 S. W. at page 178, 93 Am. St. Rep. 814]) is likewise answered by the opinion of this court in the case of Weems v. Masterson, 80 Tex. 45 [15 S. W. 590]. Under the rules laid down in that case, the jurisdiction of the county court did not depend upon the showing in the application of one of the statutory causes for such sales. The absence of such a showing, or the statement of a reason which would not authorize the sale, might make the order of a sale erroneous; but it does not follow that it was not within the power of the court to make such order. In the language of the opinion referred to, the application for the sale was sufficient to invoke the exercise of the jurisdiction the court possessed over the subject-matter; those interested must be conclusively presumed to have had notice of the application such as the law prescribes; and the decrees of the probate court in this collateral proceeding must be deemed conclusive of the fact that the sale was made for a lawful purpose and in a lawful manner, in the absence of some evidence in the record showing to the contrary, other than that the application was defective."

[2] In other words, the doctrine of our Supreme Court is settled to this effect: That the death of a resident of a county, leaving an estate in the county, gives the probate court of that county a potential jurisdiction over all the estate of the deceased resident; that, when the administration proceedings upon said estate are instituted in said court, its active jurisdiction over that estate attaches; that when in the course of the administration of that estate the administrator files an application to have lands belonging to the estate sold, since the statutes require that notice of the application for such sale be presumed on collateral attack that they did have notice, and that thereby the court acquired jurisdiction over the persons of all persons interested in the property. The court then being a court of general jurisdiction in probate matters and having acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter (that is, of all the property belonging to the estate) and of the person (that is, of all persons interested in the estate), it had complete and perfect power (that is, complete and perfect jurisdiction, which means jurisdiction over the subject-matter and over the person), and no difference how faulty or defective or improper the order of sale may be, these are matters which can be tested only on direct proceedings, and which cannot be raised on collateral attack, but, as to all such objections on collateral attack, the judgment of the court is conclusive and binding. Tested by this rule, which we conclude to be the law of Texas, there can be no doubt but that in this suit the order of sale made by the probate court of Hale county upon the application of C. H. Gilbert, administrator of the estate of E. L. Lowe, the sale by the administrator under that order, the confirmation of such sale upon being reported by the administrator, and the administrator's deed in favor of J. C. Pipkin, must be treated as having conferred complete title upon Pipkin to the land in controversy.

This is precisely upon the same principle in the case of Pelham v. Murray, 64 Tex. 477, 482, where a probate court had adjudged certain property exempt and not subject to sale and directed the administrator to surrender it to the widow, reciting that she was the only remaining constituent of the family, and that she was willing to accept the same in lieu of the balance due her on exemption, that the order was held not void and subject to collateral attack, although the decree was erroneous, and the property was not in fact exempt property. Judge Stayton delivered the opinion in that case also, and he says: "We are of the opinion that while the judgment was erroneous, and therefore might have been avoided by proper proceedings, it was not void and is conclusive of the question so long as it was not set aside by some direct proceedings having that end in view."

In the case of Martin v. Robinson, 67 Tex. 379, 3 S. W. 555, the Supreme Court said: "When in a collateral attack it is said that an administration was a nullity, unless some fact be then shown the words 'null and void' are used in the sense of voidable, for if there then be a fact or facts, proof of which would make the administration valid, it cannot be void, and the legal presumption is that the very fact which would give validity was proved before the court which granted the administration. The rule suggested in this respect in some cases would be the rule in a proceeding appellate in character if the cause be tried de novo; but it seems to us that no such rule can exist when the validity of an administration granted by a decree of a court of record having general jurisdiction is sought to be attacked or held for naught in a collateral proceeding, for, if it would be possible to prove facts sufficient to sustain the administration, it must be presumed on such attack that these very facts were proved before the administration was granted. We understand the rule to be, when the judgment or decree of such court is collaterally called in question, that it must be deemed valid unless it appears that no facts could have been shown which would render it so."

[3] This opinion is but another statement of the rule recognized in numerous other decisions, both in Texas and in other jurisdictions, that if a court of general jurisdiction has made an order, judgment, or decree, every presumption will be indulged in favor of the jurisdiction of the court when such order, judgment, or decree is collaterally attacked. The rule appears to be applicable in this case because it appears that there were debts existing against the estate of E. L. Lowe at the time application for the sale of property, including the property in question, was made.

[4] It appears that there was a necessity existing, at the time the application for or der of sale was made, to provide funds for the year's support of the minor children of deceased, and the statute makes it the duty of the court upon his own motion, apparently at the first regular term of the court after the grant of letters testamentary or of administration, to fix the amount of allowance for the support of the widow and minor children of the deceased, and, as soon as the inventory, appraisement, and list of claims are returned, to order a sale of the estate, or so much thereof as will be sufficient to raise the allowance. We think the situation was such as to authorize the probate court to make a sale of the property belonging to E. L. Lowe's estate for the support of the heirs. The order authorizing the sale directed that so much of the property should be sold as might be necessary for the support of the heirs.

[5] While there does not appear in the record any order by the court fixing the allowance for the year's support of the minor children, nor any order fixing the amount of the allowance for them, in lieu of exempt property, but such orders may have existed, and whether they did or not would not be a jurisdictional question. The court having jurisdiction to order the sale (provided the allowance had been made), a purchaser could rely on the order of sale and need not look for the order making the allowance. We think it sufficiently appears, from the evidence in support of the orders in question and of the judgment of the district court, that there was a necessity for raising an allowance for the year's support of the heirs or minor children, and that there was a necessity for raising the funds to which they were entitled in lieu of exempt property. There was also a legacy under the terms of the will of $1,280 to be raised. One of the purposes for which facts existed which would have authorized the court to make the sale, the support of the minor children, is made a ground of the application and is mentioned in the order of sale.

[6] We also think that the question as to whether the condition of the estate as it existed at the time the order of sale was granted as to the necessity of selling the lands was a question for the determination of the court in the exercise of its jurisdiction conferred by law, and that its judgment thereon is not subject to collateral attack.

[7] We are further of the opinion that the lands in controversy were sufficiently described. The patent to Lowe described the land as the E. L. Lowe pre-emption survey, of 160 acres in Hale county, known as survey No. 2, block M. & L., etc., giving field notes. E. L. Lowe and others laid out the town of Plainview and dedicated to the public the streets, alleys, and public square "of said town of Plainview in said county of Hale, state aforesaid, as shown by the accompanying map of the said town of Plainview." It was admitted in the record that the north part of the town of Plainview was the south half of the Lowe pre-emption. There were no homestead rights in the property in controversy because Lowe with his children and M. A. Lowe, the aunt of his deceased wife, was at the time of his death residing, to use the language of Judge Kinder, "in a little old house over here about three-quarters of a mile northeast of town." The appraisers included in their appraisal 368 lots in Plainview. The administrator, in his application for authority to sell, described the property as "a certain tract of real estate belonging to the said estate of E. L. Lowe, and said real estate is here described as all those lots yet unsold belonging, situated in the county of Hale, state of Texas, and better known as the north half of the town of Plainview, patented to E. L. Lowe by virtue of the pre-emption laws of the state of Texas." The order of sale authorized C. H. Gilbert, the administrator of the estate of E. L. Lowe, deceased, "to sell so much of the real estate belonging to said estate, situated in the town of Plainview, as is necessary," etc. The administrator reported that he had made "the following sales of real estate belonging to said estate: * * * To J. C. Pipkin, lots 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, block 31, consideration $177.50, cash, July 12, 1890." The order of confirmation refers to "the above and foregoing report of C. H. Gilbert, administrator of the estate of E. L. Lowe, deceased, as to real estate sold by him belonging to said estate, and orders that said report be and the same is hereby in all things approved, and the sales mentioned therein confirmed," and Gilbert, as administrator, is authorized to make good and sufficient conveyance to several purchasers. The administrator's annual report charges him with receipts of sales of real estate during the year amounting to $2,027.50. The deed of Gilbert, administrator, to Pipkin, conveys lots 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31, in block 31, as shown by the town plat of Plainview, Hale county, Tex. Taffinder v. Merrell, 95 Tex. 95, 65 S. W. 177, 93 Am. St. Rep. 814; Hermann v. Likens, 90 Tex. 448, 39 S. W. 282; Wells v. Polk, 36 Tex. 126; Robertson v. Johnson, 57 Tex. 64; Macmanus v. Orkney, 91 Tex. 30, 40 S. W. 715. We therefore conclude that the order of sale must be held valid as against this collateral attack. R. S. 1895, art. 2037, 2038, 2043, 2046, 2047, 2052; Martin v. Robinson, 67 Tex. 374, 3 S. W. 550; Endel v. Norris, 93 Tex. 540, 57 S. W. 25; Lynch v. Baxter, 4 Tex. 441, 445, 446, 51 Am. Dec. 735.

[8] Nor do we think that the objection that the deed bears date before the sale of the land was reported and before the order of confirmation is of any merit, it being well established that the order of sale, report of sale, and confirmation of sale give the purchaser title, and no deed is necessary; nor is it material that the deed was made before the order of confirmation. City of El Paso v. National Bank, 96 Tex. 501, 502, 74 S. W. 21; Rock v. Heald, 27 Tex. 527; Sypert v. McCowen, 28 Tex. 638; McBee v. Johnson, 45 Tex. 634.

[9] Appellants, under their fifteenth assignment, contend that the subsequent appointment of Mrs. M. A. Lowe, as guardian of the minor children ipso facto, superseded and ousted the administrator from his appointment, and impliedly at least terminated the administration and rendered void the orders involved in this case. In our opinion, the authorities cited by appellants do not support this contention, and we have been unable to find any that do. We do not regard the South Carolina case (McLaurin v. Thompson, Dud. 335) cited by appellant, and holding that, where it appears that in the course of administration of an estate a second administrator has been appointed, his appointment will supersede that of the former administrator, as decisive of the question raised by appellants, or even persuasive to that effect; that is, that the appointment of a guardian for minor heirs will nullify the appointment of an administrator of a deceased person's estate. Our statutes provide that, upon the death of any person intestate, his property shall vest in his heirs at law, but that all of his estate, except such as may be exempt by law from the payment of debts, shall pass to the possession of the administrator to be disposed of in accordance with law (R. S. 1911, art. 3235), and upon the appointment of Gilbert, the administrator, he became entitled to the possession and disposition of all of Lowe's estate except the exempt property. Express provision is also made by our Constitution and laws for the guardian of minor children of deceased persons to reside upon the homestead with the wards. In this case the homestead was no part of the property in controversy, but consisted of other and different property, and it appears to have been considered desirable that the minor children should continue to reside at this home with their aunt as they had previously resided there with her and their father. It appears therefore that there was sufficient reason for her appointment as guardian, in order to enable her legally to occupy with the minors the homestead which their father had left them. We think the intention also evidently was that Mrs. Lowe should occupy and use the homestead and other exempt property with the minor children, thereby lessening the expense of their rearing and maintenance, while her brother Gilbert took out letters of administration for the purpose of handling the other property belonging to Lowe's estate, in accordance with law, and that there was no necessary conflict between the jurisdiction of Mrs. Lowe as guardian and Gilbert as administrator of the estate. Neither does it appear from the record that upon the appointment of said guardian any order was made and entered of record terminating said administration and discharging the administrator; but it appears from the record that the court recognized the necessity of the existence of both the guardianship and the administration within their respective spheres, and in this we cannot say there was error.

Having carefully examined appellants' remaining assignments not hereinbefore specifically discussed, and finding no reversible error raised under any or either of them, we conclude that the judgment appealed from should be in all things affirmed, and it is, accordingly, so ordered.

AMERICAN CENT. INS. CO. v. HARDIN et al.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1040*)—HARMLESS ERROR—OVERRULING SPECIAL DEMURRERS.

In an action on a fire insurance policy, error, if any, in overruling special demurrers to those parts of plaintiff's petition relating to what the insurer's agent told him about taking an inventory, and to the taking of additional insurance, was harmless, in view of evidence showing that there was a substantial compliance with the iron-safe clause of the policy, and that the agent authorized the taking of additional insurance or knew thereof before the loss, and had made no objection.

2. INSURANCE (§ 335*)—FORFEITURE—CONDITIONS SUBSEQUENT—KEEPING BOOKS AND INVENTORY.

Where insured had kept all the invoices of merchandise purchased by him and a book of entry in which he entered all sales on credit and all cash receipts from sales, from which the amount of goods on hand at the time of loss could be approximately established, in substantial compliance with the iron-safe clause, he was entitled to recover.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 853; Dec. Dig. § 335.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 384*)—ESTOPPEL—DELIVERY OF POLICY—CONDITION AGAINST OTHER INSURANCE.

An insurer whose agent consented in advance to the taking out of additional insurance and issued a slip showing such agreement was estopped from setting up such additional insurance as a forfeiture of the policy; and, in view of the agent's knowledge, the fact that such slip was not attached to the policy until after the loss was immaterial.

in which Sanger Bros. filed a plea of intervention. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. G. Senter, of Dallas, for appellant. T. B. Ridgell, of Rockwall, for appellees.

RAINEY, C. J. Appellee sued appellant to recover upon a policy of fire insurance for the sum of $1,000, covering $150 on store and office furniture and fixtures and $850 on a stock of merchandise contained in plaintiff's store at Fate, Tex. The policy was attached to the petition, and made a part thereof. It contained the usual warranty clauses, among which was the "iron-safe" clause, and also a clause against coinsurance, unless agreed to in writing and attached to the policy. The petition, among other things, alleged: "That at the time the policy was issued plaintiff had just purchased the stock of goods, and had the original invoices of purchase, and that the agent of defendant, Murphy, agreed within a few days after the policy was issued and before ten days after its date that the said invoices would suffice and be accepted in lieu of an inventory, and, though the policies provide that an inventory should be taken in thirty days, that such invoice should not be required, and was not necessary, and that plaintiff need not take any further inventory than to keep and preserve his invoices of purchase which he then had and which the plaintiff knew; that it was contracted and agreed after the policy was issued and at divers times, and within not less than five or ten days from the date of the policy, that such invoices of purchase would be accepted by the defendant, and no further inventory would be required within thirty days; that plaintiff has invoices, books, and records showing cash and credit sales, and showing his entire business transactions and has same in an iron safe, and that, immediately after the fire, he exhibited the same to the defendant's agent and adjuster, and same was accepted as an inventory and proof of loss by defendant; that, after the issuance of the policy, the plaintiff took out other insurance on his stock of goods with the St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Company, which additional insurance was with the consent of the defendant; that plaintiff thereafter took out a policy on his goods in the National Underwriters, with the consent and knowledge of the defendant, and, after having obtained permission of the defendant to do so, in the amount of $1,250 on said stock and $250 on said building; that plaintiff and defendant's agent had several conversations in plaintiff's store and in a bank during August, September, and up to October 9, 1911, in reference to plaintiff needing additional insurance, and that Murphy, the agent of defendant, agreed that plaintiff should take out $1,500 insurance on his goods and $250 on his building; that about October 9, 1911, plaintiff told Murphy, the agent of defendant, that he was going to take out a policy of insurance in the National Underwriters, and that he was to take out $1,250 insurance on the stock of goods and $250 on his building, and the defendant, through said agent, agreed that plaintiff was entitled to same and could take out the same, and plaintiff, acting under said agreement, did take out said policy with the National Underwriters, and at the time informed said Murphy that he had taken out same, and said agent agreed and acquiesced in the same, and defendant thereafter, with said knowledge and agreement, permitted the policy to remain in force; that defendant after said policy of the National Underwriters was delivered and taken out knew of the policy, in that defendant knew that plaintiff had paid the premium for same with two checks, the defendant's agent seeing the checks and knowing their purpose, and that they still permitted the policy to remain in force; that defendant's said agent agreed in writing to said insurance, and prepared what is known as a binder to be attached to the policy, which binder agreed to the additional insurance; that said binder was prepared on October 16, 1911, and was not attached to the policy until thereafter, as the result of mistake and oversight."

Defendant answered by special demurrers, general denial and specially, that Murphy, the local agent, was without authority to make any contract for additional insurance or other than to issue its contracts of insurance upon the forms provided therefor, as shown in the policy sued on; (2) that plaintiff had failed to comply with the "iron-safe" clause; (3) that other or additional insurance on said property had been procured by plaintiff, which avoided the contract; (4) that plaintiff was insolvent and the taking of other insurance with Murphy's consent was done in fraud of defendant's rights for the benefit of the First State Bank of Fate, for which Murphy was the cashier and manager, and to which plaintiff was indebted. This plea was duly verified by affidavit. Plaintiff filed a supplemental petition, alleging an estoppel and waiver as to the additional insurance and failure to make an inventory, because Murphy had consented thereto, and had executed a written "binder" to be attached to said policy authorizing said additional insurance, which binder was so attached, and that defendant allowed said policy to remain in force. Sanger Bros. filed a plea of intervention, alleging that, after the fire, the plaintiff had assigned the policy to them to secure his indebtedness to them, etc.

The trial court overruled all exceptions of defendant, and, after hearing the evidence, submitted the case to the jury on special issues, and upon the return of the jury's answers thereto rendered judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals.

Conclusions of Fact.

We conclude that T. C. Murphy was the agent of appellant at Fate, Tex., with authority to solicit insurance, countersign and issue policies, and as such agent issued to appellee the policy sued on herein, and which policy contains the terms and stipulations as shown by the petition of plaintiff and answer of defendant. No inventory of the merchandise insured was taken by plaintiff, but he had on hand the original invoices of the merchandise purchased by him, and no inventory was taken for the reason that Murphy, the agent of defendant, told him it was not necessary to do so, as the invoices would answer every purpose. Plaintiff kept a book in which he recorded his cash and credit sales. From this book and the invoices on hand could be substantially ascertained the amount of goods plaintiff had on hand at the time of the fire, which amount the jury found to be $4,103.98. With the consent of T. C. Murphy plaintiff secured additional insurance on the merchandise. Murphy knew of the taking of said additional insurance, and gave plaintiff a written slip authorizing such insurance, which slip was to be placed on the policy, but said slip was not attached to the policy until after the fire.

Conclusions of Law.

[1] (1) The overruling of defendant's special demurrer to that portion of plaintiff's petition relating to what Murphy told him about taking an inventory, if error, becomes harmless in view of the testimony which shows that there was a substantial compliance with the "iron-safe" clause of the policy of insurance.

(2) The overruling of defendant's special demurrer to that portion of plaintiff's petition relating to the taking of additional insurance by plaintiff also becomes immaterial as the evidence shows that Murphy, defendant's agent, authorized the taking thereof, or knew thereof, before the fire, and made no objection.

[2] (3) Appellee had been in business less than 12 months, and the jury found that he had kept all the invoices of the merchandise purchased and a book of entry in which was entered all sales made on a credit and an entry of all the cash taken in on sales of merchandise. These invoices and this book of entry were produced by appellee, and from which the amount of goods on hand at the date of the fire could be approximately established. The jury also found that the keeping of such invoices and book of entry was a substantial compliance with the terms of the policy relative to the "iron-safe" clause. The evidence warranted this finding of the jury, and the rendering of the judgment of the court. Fire Ass'n v. Masterson, 83 S. W. 49, and authorities cited; Insurance Co. v. Andrews, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 184, 89 S. W. 419.

[3] (4) The appellant is estopped from setting up as a forfeit of the policy the taking out of additional insurance on said merchandise, for T. C. Murphy, its agent, consented to and knew of the taking out of said additional insurance by plaintiff before it was done, and, as provided by the policy, agreed to same, and issued a slip showing such agreement. That such slip was not attached to the policy until after the fire becomes immaterial in view of the knowledge of Murphy, appellant's agent. Insurance Co. v. Smith, 135 S. W. 688.

(5) We find no material error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

CHILDS et al. v. BROWN.

COURTS (§ 122*)—JURISDICTION—AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY—ALLEGATIONS IN PETITION.

A petition for the dissolution of a firm and the appointment of a receiver thereof, which contains no allegation of the value of the firm business as a whole or of the value of plaintiff's interest therein, fails to show that the subject-matter in controversy is of value sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the district court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 427; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

Appeal from District Court, Archer County.

Action by W. J. Brown against W. T. Childs and another. From an order appointing a receiver, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

J. T. Montgomery, of Wichita Falls, and W. E. Forgy, of Archer, for appellants. Carigan & Householder, of Wichita Falls, for appellee.

CONNER, C. J. This is an appeal from an order of the honorable district court of Archer county appointing a receiver upon the application of appellee, W. J. Brown. The order was granted upon an amended petition of appellee wherein he complained of the Bank of Holliday, W. T. Childs, as the managing officer of the bank, and others. It was alleged that the parties complained of were conducting a banking business as partners and the plaintiff had an interest therein; that its said managing partner, W. T. Childs, was conducting the business for his own benefit appropriating its proceeds to his own use; and that he had excluded the plaintiff, Brown, from all information as to the assets of the bank or as to the conduct of the business, and he prayed for the appointment of a receiver.

We are of opinion that the judgment must be reversed for want of a showing of jurisdiction in the court which granted the order. Construing the petition most liberally in favor of appellee, it may possibly be said that the plaintiff sought a dissolution of the partnership, though this is not very clear. It is clear, however, that the petition contains no allegation of the value of the partnership business as a whole, nor of the value of the interest of appellee therein. It therefore fails to show that the subject-matter in controversy was of value sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the district court. See Moore v. Snell, 88 S. W. 270.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

PERRY v. CARLISLE et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Amarillo. Nov. 23, 1912.)

1. WEIGHTS AND MEASURES (§ 8*)—PUBLIC WAIVES—ACTIONS TO ENJOIN OTHERS—PETITION.

Where plaintiff's petition to enjoin an unauthorized weigher alleged that plaintiff was duly elected public weigher for the precinct of the county in which the town was located, and that he duly qualified and received his commission, it was not subject to general demurrer for failure to allege that the office of public weigher was created by the commissioners' court of the county, and that necessary steps to the creation of said office had been taken by the voters in the precinct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Weights and Measures, Cent. Dig. § 10; Dec. Dig. § 8*.]

2. WEIGHTS AND MEASURES (§ 8*)—PUBLIC WEIGHERS — SUIT FOR INJUNCTION — PETITION.

Under Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 7828, which supplanted Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4308, providing for the appointment of public weighers of produce offered for sale in towns, and omitted the provision of the former act that nothing shall be construed so as to prevent any other person from weighing the articles mentioned when requested by the owners thereof, and in view of Pen. Code 1911, art. 996, providing that no one except the regularly appointed weigher or his deputy shall weigh any cotton, wools, sugar, or hides required to be weighed, sold, or offered for sale in any city having a public weigher, the petition of a public weigher seeking to enjoin an unauthorized weigher need not allege that the weighing was not done at the request of the owner in order to entitle him to a preliminary injunction, the criminal statutes showing that it was the policy of the law to protect the public weigher, and the fees of his office and the last pronouncement of the Legislature having omitted that qualification.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Weights and Measures, Cent. Dig. § 10; Dec. Dig. § 8*.]

3. WEIGHTS AND MEASURES (§ 8*)—PUBLIC WEIGHERS—PETITION—"TOWN."

The petition of a public weigher who sought to enjoin an unauthorized weigher from weighing produce which alleged that the plaintiff was the public weigher for the town of S. is not deficient for failing to allege that S. was a city; the word "town" being a generic word which includes cities, boroughs, and villages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Weights and Measures, Cent. Dig. § 10; Dec. Dig. § 8*.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7019-7029.]

4. WEIGHTS AND MEASURES (§ 8*)—PUBLIC WEIGHER—RIGHT TO INJUNCTION.

Under Pen. Code 1911, art. 996, providing that it shall be unlawful for any person except a regularly appointed weigher or his deputy to weigh any cotton, wool, sugar, or hides required to be weighed, sold, or offered for sale in any city having a public weigher, the public weigher of a municipality is entitled to enjoin an unauthorized weigher who set up his establishment just outside the municipality, so as to weigh property bought and offered for sale therein.

Appeal from District Court, Dickens County; Jo A. P. Dickson, Judge.

Action by C. H. Perry against J. W. Carlisle and the Farmers' Union Cotton Yard. From an order dissolving a preliminary injunction, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

See, also, 151 S. W. 1158.

Dalton & Russell, of Plainview, and R. S. Holman, of Spur, for appellant. B. D. Glasgow, of Spur, for appellees.

PRESLER, J. This is a suit for injunction brought by appellant (plaintiff in the court below) on the 19th day of September, 1912, seeking to restrain appellees from weighing cotton, wool, sugar, or hides for the public, sold or offered for sale, and from weighing cotton, wool, sugar, or hides for other persons in the town of Spur, in precinct No. 3, Dickens county, Tex. Appellant in his original petition, among other things, alleged that on the 8th day of November, A. D. 1910, the day of the last general election for state, county, and precinct offices in Texas, he was duly elected public weigher for precinct No. 3, in Dickens county, Tex.; that the town of Spur is situated in said precinct; that he duly qualified and received his commission as such public weigher on or about the 21st day of November, A. D. 1910, and that he has continuously been and now is such public weigher, acting as such, and has been continuously and is well equipped and prepared to receive, store, and weigh all cotton and produce presented to him for weighing; that he had and has scales and a cotton yard conveniently located in the town of Spur, and was and is capable of weighing, and offering to weigh, all cotton and storing all cotton and other produce offered to him for storing and weighing at convenient places of easy access to the public, and that he charged and charges ten cents per bale for weighing and five cents per bale for marking cotton; that at the time he was elected and so qualified the appellees had opened up a yard in the town of Spur, Tex., and commenced to weigh cotton and all other produce offered to them, and solicited such weighing and weighed all cotton and produce they they could weigh for farmers, merchants, and other persons, and have continued and now are so doing and carrying on the business of weighing in the town of Spur, and holding themselves out to the public as such, and charging a compensation of ten cents per bale for weighing cotton; that appellees are not and never were public weighers or deputy public weighers for Spur, Tex., or Dickens county, or any part thereof; that appellees have weighed enough cotton to amount to about $400 in fees that appellant would have earned but for appellees, who have received, stored, and weighed cotton at their yard all along and are doing so now, and threatening to continue so to do indefinitely, and will so do unless restrained, to appellant's irreparable injury and damage, which injury is a continuous one, and that he has no adequate remedy at law; that there are about 5,000 bales of cotton alone weighed at Spur each cotton season from September 1st to April 1st, and to recover the legal penalties would require a multiplicity of suits, and, owing to the manner of handling the cotton, it is impossible to get the names of the owners weighing and sue them, and that the right of action against persons who employ appellees as weighers was and is inadequate; that appellees are depriving appellant of the fees of his office, and admit weighing cotton, and that they intend to continue to and are persisting in the same and charging for such weighing, and that, unless appellees are restrained, the damage to appellant will be irreparable, and that appellees are unable to respond in damages; that the cotton and produce weighed by appellees and threatened and solicited to be weighed was not that authorized by written instructions from owners shipping it to Spur, authorizing their commission merchant, factor, or agent to have said cotton and produce weighed by private weighers, and that appellees were not and are not intended to be the owners of the cotton and the produce that they have weighed and threatened and intend to weigh, said petition being duly verified by affidavit of appellant.

[1] Upon ex parte hearing of said petition the court in vacation granted the injunction as prayed for, and, appellant having filed bond as required by the order of the court on the same date, a writ of injunction was issued and served on appellees, commanding them to "desist and refrain from weighing cotton, wool, sugar, or hides, sold or offered for sale in the town of Spur, Tex. and in precinct No. 3, Dickens county, Tex., for others than yourselves, until further order of said court"; the writ being made returnable to the ensuing term of the district court on the 25th day of November, 1912. From the order granting said writ of injunction appellees herein duly prosecuted their appeal to this court, which cause is here docketed as No. 357. Appellees at the same time, to wit, on the 23d day of September, 1912, filed their verified answer, and also a motion to dissolve the writ of injunction in the court below. Thereafter, to wit, on the 5th day of October, 1912, appellant by leave of the court filed his first amended original petition, pleading therein substantially as in his original petition, except that in his first amended original petition appellees are alleged to have "opened up a yard in the city of Spur, Tex., or just outside of the present incorporated limits, on south side of railroad track, but still in the town of Spur proper, the city being incorporated about April, 1911," stating, also, that he charges 10 cents per bale for weighing cotton. Appellant also on the same date (5th of October, 1912) filed his answer to appellees' answer and motion to dissolve, excepting to appellees' said answer, and specially answering that appellees are not, and never were, warehousemen, and did not act in that way, but as public weighers, as alleged, and that they did the weighing as alleged in appellant's petition, and that appellees are still going ahead weighing cotton, and that it would not injure them if the injunction granted was continued until final hearing, but that to dissolve the same would greatly damage appellant, and in support of said answer attached and made a part of the same the affidavit of T. J. Harkey, together with the exhibits thereto attached and made a part thereof. On the same day (5th of October, 1912) appellees filed their answer and counter affidavits of J. W. Carlisle and Will Taylor by way of replication to appellant's answer, controverting the facts alleged in appellant's said answer. Thereafter, on the 11th day of October, 1912, upon due notice of said hearing, the court proceeded to hear the motion of appellees to dissolve the temporary injunction theretofore granted on September 19, 1912, stating that he heard the same upon plaintiff's first amended original petition, the answer of appellees, and upon the pleadings and affidavits as hereinbefore stated, and that said affidavits were all the evidence introduced on the hearing, and proceeded to grant an order dissolving said injunction and carrying the main case over until the next regular term of the district court of Dickens county, Tex., for final hearing, at the request of appellant, and awarding the costs of said motion to dissolve in favor of appellees. From this order dissolving said temporary injunction appellant herein duly appeals in the present case. At a former day of this term motions were presented, both in this cause and in cause No. 357, heretofore referred to, signed and joined in by all parties to this controversy, asking that said cases be set for hearing on the same date and considered together, for the reason that the two are practically the same case between the same parties and involving the same questions, which motions have been granted. Said cause No. 357, styled J. W. Carlisle et al., Appellants, v. C. H. Perry, Appellee, 151 S. W. 1158, is here considered with the present case, and we find the decisive questions necessary to be considered, both in the disposition of this case and of cause No. 357, concisely presented in appellees' brief herein. And the first contention as therein stated, to the effect that the original petition of appellant upon which said writ of injunction was granted, is insufficient, in that the same does not allege that the office of public weigher for precinct No. 3 in Dickens county, Tex., was ever created by the commissioners' court of said county, or that any necessary steps to the creation of said office had ever been taken by the voters of said precinct. We think the allegations contained, both in said original and in plaintiff's first amended original petition, sufficient on general demurrer to show that the office of public weigher for precinct No. 3 in Dickens county existed, and that appellant was the legal incumbent of said office on the dates alleged in his petition, and that it was not necessary for the purposes of this petition to allege compliance with the statutory proceedings under and by virtue of which such office is created; the allegations of the petition to which this contention relate being as follows: "That on the 8th day of November, A. D. 1910, the day of the last general election for state, county, and precinct offices in Texas, plaintiff was duly elected public weigher for precinct No. 3 in Dickens county, Tex., and in which precinct the town of Spur is situated; that he duly qualified as such and received his commission as such officer on or about the 21st day of November, A. D. 1910, and he has continuously since been and is now such public weigher."

[2] Appellees' second contention is that both appellant's original and first amended petition are deficient and subject to general demurrer in not alleging that the weighing of which appellant complains was not done at the instance or request of the owner or owners of the cotton weighed, and that said owners were not present and supervising said weighing, contending that the owner had the right to have his cotton weighed by any weigher he chose, and in support of this contention cites us to the cases of Hedgpeth v. Hamilton Warehouse Company (Sup.) 140 S. W. 1084; Whitfield v. Terrell Compress Co., 26 Tex. Civ. App. 235, 62 S. W. 116; Galt v. Holder, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 504, 75 S. W. 508; Watts & Wedenmyer v. Jowers, 61 Tex. 184; Ex parte Hunter, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 114, 29 S. W. 482; Martin v. Johnson, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 628, 33 S. W. 306; Gray v. Eleazer, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 417, 94 S. W. 911. This contention of appellees' is no doubt based upon the proviso contained in title 90, art. 4308, Sayles' Texas Civil Statutes (General Acts of 1883, p. 83), as follows: "Provided nothing herein contained shall be construed so as to prevent any other person from weighing cotton, wool or hides when requested so to do by the owners thereof." As this proviso, which in part gives support to some of the opinions cited by appellees, was subsequently repealed and was omitted from the statutes before the filing of this suit (see General Acts 1899, p. 264; Revised Statutes of Texas 1911, art. 7828), we conclude that it was not incumbent upon appellant to allege in his said petition that the weighing complained of was not done at the request of the owners of said cotton, and upon a review of the entire law relating to public weighers, as prescribed by the statutes, in force at this time, and at the date of the matters complained of in appellant's petition, the same being contained in title 132, Revised Civil Statutes of Texas 1911, and chapter 8, tit. 14, Revised Criminal Statutes of Texas 1911, we are of the opinion that both the original and the first amended original petition of appellant (the latter considered in connection with the affidavits and exhibits shown by the record in support thereof) were sufficient in all respects to authorize the issuance and continuance of the temporary writ of injunction granted, and that the court below erred in dissolving the same; it being evidently the purpose of article 906, Revised Criminal Statutes 1911 (577 former Code), to protect the public weigher or deputy in the fees of his office by making it unlawful for any other person to weigh any cotton, wool, sugar, or hides required to be weighed, sold, or offered for sale in any city having a public weigher duly qualified, and to follow the Supreme Court in the case of Hudspeth v. Hamilton Warehouse Company, above cited, and the Court of Civil Appeals in Whitfield v. Terrell Compress Co., and other cases cited by appellant, we would have to ignore the existence and application of this article of the Penal Code to the facts of this case, which we do not feel constrained to do. We think that both the original petition, upon which the temporary writ was granted, as well as the first amended petition, negatives any ground allowed by the statute upon which the weighing done by appellees and complained of by appellant could be legally authorized, and asked only that appellees be restrained in such weighing for the public and for other persons as is in our opinion clearly under the statute illegal, and that such acts on the part of appellees constituted an invasion of appellant's legal rights and an injury to his rights of property, such as authorized the issuance of the writ as originally granted and a continuance of the writ upon the showing made on hearing of appellees' motion to dissolve. Davidson v. Sadler, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 600, 57 S. W. 54; title 132, Revised Civil Statutes of Texas 1911; article 906 (577), Revised Criminal Statutes of Texas 1911.

[3] Nor do we think there is any merit in appellees' various contentions to the effect that the city of Spur is referred to in appellant's original petition as "the town of Spur," and that it is not alleged in said petition to be a city by incorporation or otherwise. The word "town" is a generic word. Of this genus cities and boroughs are species. N. Y. L. B. R. Co. v. Drummond, 46 N. J. Law, 644-646. Mr. Tomlin in his law dictionary says: "Under the name 'town' or 'village' boroughs and cities are contained; for every borough or city is a town." State ex rel. Rice v. Simmons, 35 Mo. App. 374-380.

[4] It further appears from the amended original petition, answer, and affidavits attached filed by appellant with leave of the court, in reply to appellees' answer and motion to dissolve, together with the supporting affidavits filed by appellees, that the town of Spur was a city incorporated in April, 1911, and that the cotton yard of appellees was not situated within the corporate limits of said city, but was located across and near the south line of the same, and upon this appellees base the contention that the weighing complained of was not done in the town or city of Spur, and does not fall within the inhibition of article 996, Revised Criminal Statutes of Texas 1911, which statute, however, in our opinion, does not make the contemplated offense consist of the weighing being done in the city, but in the weighing of any cotton to be weighed, sold, or offered for sale in the city having a public weigher duly qualified. That is, in other words, the location of the yards where the weighing was done is immaterial as to whether it is in the city or not if the cotton in question was required to be weighed for the purpose of being sold or offered for sale in any city having a public weigher duly qualified. In this instance the uncontroverted evidence, as shown by the affidavits referred to, shows that appellees' cotton yard was situated in close proximity, but outside of the incorporated limits of the city and operated for the purpose of weighing cotton sold and intended to be sold in said city, located, adjoining, and close by, which it is also to be noticed was located in the precinct of which appellant was the duly qualified public weigher. Nor do we think that the injunction granted against appellees restrains them from the weighing of any cotton or other specified produce which they have the right under the law to weigh as private weighers. By the terms of said writ of injunction, appellees are commanded to refrain from weighing cotton, wool, sugar, or hides sold or offered for sale in the town of Spur, Tex., and in precinct No. 3, Dickens county, Tex., for others than for themselves. We therefore conclude that the writ in question was properly and legally granted upon the petition upon which the court acted, and that upon the showing made on the hearing of the motion to dissolve that the court erred in sustaining said motion, and that the same should have been continued in effect until the final hearing in term time, and upon a like showing at such final hearing the writ should be perpetuated.

It is therefore ordered that said judgment of dissolution be and the same is hereby reversed, and the writ heretofore granted is ordered continued in force as above stated, and that the costs in this court and in the court below be taxed against appellees, and that this cause be reversed and remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion, and it is so ordered.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Galveston. Dec. 6, 1912.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 197*)—SALE OF UNCLAIMED FREIGHT—STATUTORY RIGHT.

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 324, authorizing a carrier using due diligence to notify the consignee at destination to store the goods not taken by the consignee, and thereafter become liable only as warehousemen, does not authorize a sale by a carrier of unclaimed freight.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 891-900; Dec. Dig. § 197.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 197*)—SALE OF UNCLAIMED FREIGHT—STATUTORY RIGHT.

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, arts. 327, 328, authorizing a carrier to sell freight remaining unclaimed for three months on giving thirty days' notice, and article 324, authorizing a carrier using due diligence to notify the consignee to store freight not taken by the consignee and thereafter become liable only as warehousemen, are not in pari materia because they are enacted for different purposes and are independent of each other, and the right to sell unclaimed freight does not depend on whether the carrier used due diligence to notify the consignee of the arrival of the freight, but, though it be assumed that the statutes must be construed together, a consignor shipping freight to itself must put itself in position to receive notice of the arrival of the freight at destination, and where it fails to do so, the carrier need not seek the consignee of the freight elsewhere to notify it of the arrival of the freight before making a sale of the freight remaining unclaimed for three months.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 891-900; Dec. Dig. § 197.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 197*)—SALE OF UNCLAIMED FREIGHT—STATUTORY RIGHT.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 327, authorizing a carrier to sell freight remaining unclaimed for three months and the owner, known or unknown, fails within that time to claim or pay the proper charges, a carrier may sell freight remaining unclaimed for three months, regardless of whether any charges are due thereon, and the owner of the freight cannot by payment of charges compel the carrier to keep the freight longer than three months.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 891-900; Dec. Dig. § 197.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 197*)—SALE OF UNCLAIMED FREIGHT—STATUTORY RIGHT.

The statute does not direct the place of sale, and a sale may be had at a point other than the point of destination and an owner to avoid a sale at a place other than the point of destination must show that the place selected for the sale was unreasonable, and that he was probably injured by the sale being made there.

5. CARRIERS (§ 197*)—UNCLAIMED FREIGHT—RIGHT TO STORAGE CHARGES—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

A carrier failing to comply with Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4520, providing that carriers shall not be allowed storage charges on freight unless notice is given, is not entitled to charges for storage of freight remaining unclaimed for three months, and then sold.

Appeal from Jefferson County Court; R. W. Wilson, Judge.

Action by the Patten Manufacturing Company against the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reformed and affirmed.

Crook, Lord, Lawhon & Ney, of Beaumont, for appellant. Terry, Cavin & Mills, of Galveston, and F. J. & C. T. Duff, of Beaumont, for appellee.

PLEASANTS, O. J. This suit was brought by the appellee against the appellant to recover damages for the alleged conversion by appellant of freight shipped over its line by the Truxal-Painter Manufacturing Company, which company had assigned its claim to appellee.

Plaintiff's petition alleges that plaintiff is a corporation incorporated under the laws of the state of Tennessee, having its domicile at Chattanooga, Tenn.; that the defendant is a railroad corporation, owning and operating its lines of railway into and through the state of Texas; that on or about February 21, 1907, the Truxal-Painter Manufacturing Company shipped from Chattanooga, Tenn., one electric hoisting machine and outfit; that said machine and outfit was consigned to the Truxal-Painter Manufacturing Company at Beaumont, Tex.; that the defendant, Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, received said shipment of freight and transported same to Beaumont, Tex., and that on or about September 1, 1907, while the freight was in its possession, and still the property of the Truxal-Painter Manufacturing Company, the defendant railroad negligently and unlawfully converted said property to its own use; that at the time of the conversion of said property it was of a reasonable market value of $550; that the Truxal-Painter Manufacturing Company had sold and assigned all of its claims, rights, and interests in this cause of action to the plaintiff the Patten Manufacturing Company. Plaintiff prayed for damages in the sum of $550, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from September 1, 1907. The defendant, Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, answered first by general demurrer and second by general denial. A jury being waived, the cause was tried on an agreed statement of facts before the court, and on the 30th day of September, 1911, judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff and against the defendant in the sum of $518.55, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the 14th day of October, 1907, making a total of $637.55, with interest from date of judgment.

The agreed statement of facts upon which the case was tried in the court below, after stating that the machinery described in plaintiff's petition was shipped from Chattanooga, Tenn., by the Truxal-Painter Manufacturing Company on February 21, 1907, freight prepaid, and consigned to the Truxal-Painter Manufacturing Company at Beaumont, Tex., and was received by appellant from its connecting carriers and transported by it to Beaumont, contains the following: "That said shipment of freight reached Beaumont, Tex., on the 14th day of March, 1907, and remained unclaimed by shipper and consignee at Beaumont, Tex., until June 29, 1907, when the same was shipped by defendant company to Galveston, Tex., and was sold at Galveston, Tex., on October 14, 1907, for the sum of $30.24. That at the time of the sale the defendant company held a claim for storage on said goods for the sum of $20.33; that said goods were shipped from Beaumont, Tex., to Galveston, Tex., and were sold by the defendant without the authority of the shipper and consignee, and without notice to it except as hereinafter stated. It is agreed that the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company and its agents, upon the arrival of said shipment at Beaumont, Tex., endeavored to find and locate the Truxal-Painter Manufacturing Company in Beaumont, Tex., in order to give it notice of the arrival of said freight, but could not locate any such concern or agent of such company in Beaumont, Tex.; that said railway company and its agents thought that possibly the name of the consignee was given wrong, and that its proper name was Texas Painter Manufacturing Company, and endeavored to locate some company or its agent by that name in Beaumont, Tex., but failing to locate in Beaumont, Tex., any such concern by that name, that said defendant railway company did not, before that sale, notify the shipper, Truxal-Painter Manufacturing Company, at Chattanooga, Tenn., that it held said freight at Beaumont, Tex., nor did it notify said Truxal-Painter Manufacturing Company that it intended to remove said property to Galveston, Tex., and sell same for charges, and the said Truxal-Painter Manufacturing Company did not learn of the sale of said shipment for charges until after the sale had been made. It is further agreed that before making the sale of said shipment that the defendant gave thirty days' notice of the time and place of sale, and a descriptive list of the package sold, with names and numbers or marks found thereon, which notice was given by posting same in three public places in Galveston county, Tex., and by posting a notice of said sale for thirty days prior thereto on the door of the depot or warehouse in Galveston, Tex., where the goods were sold, and that the defendant also gave at least thirty days' notice of said sale by making publication thereof in at least one newspaper in Galveston county, Tex., and that, in addition thereto, the defendant posted a notice of said sale for at least thirty days before same was made on the depot or warehouse door in Beaumont, Jefferson county, Tex., and that the defendant company has at all times since said sale held the sum of $9.91 subject to the order of the shipper or owner of said goods. It is further agreed that there was no market value for this machine and outfit in Beaumont, Tex., or Galveston, Tex., at the time of its receipt in Beaumont, Tex., and at the time of its removal and sale at Galveston, Tex., but that its actual or intrinsic value at said times and places was the sum of $490, the price it would cost in Chattanooga, Tenn., plus freight charges in transporting the same from Chattanooga, Tenn., to Beaumont, Tex., which was the sum of $26.50; that its market value at the times hereinbefore mentioned in Chattanooga, Tenn., was $490, and that Chattanooga, Tenn., was the nearest market for said machine and outfit. It is further agreed that since said shipment of goods was made that the Patten Manufacturing Company, plaintiff herein, purchased and took over from the Truxal-Painter Manufacturing Company all of its property and assets, including the claim of the value of the goods hereinbefore mentioned, against the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, and that the said Patten Manufacturing Company is now the legal owner and holder of said claim. It is agreed that all unclaimed freight and packages after being held for the statutory length of time at the various depots of the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company is usually and customarily shipped to Galveston, and there offered for public sale at what is commonly termed 'The Old Hoss Sale'; that these goods were so shipped to Galveston, and there sold at public sale, after the giving of notices as hereinbefore set forth."

We shall not discuss the several assignments of error presented in appellant's brief in detail. The questions hereinafter discussed and decided are raised by appropriate assignments.

[2] The article authorizing the sale of unclaimed freight by a common carrier is as follows: "When any freight or baggage has been conveyed by a common carrier to any point in this state, and shall remain unclaimed for the space of three months at the office or depot nearest or most convenient to destination, and the owner, whether known or unknown, fails within that time to claim such freight or baggage, or to pay the proper charges if any there be against it, then it shall be lawful for such common carrier to sell such freight or baggage at public auction, offering each box, bale, trunk, valise or other article separately as consigned or checked." We do not think the two articles should be considered in pari materia, and construed together. They were enacted for different purposes, and are wholly independent of each other. The right given under article 327 to sell unclaimed freight is not made to depend upon whether the carrier has used due diligence to notify the consignee of the arrival of the freight, and the only notice required to authorize the sale is the 30 days' notice of the sale provided for in article 328, which it is agreed was strictly complied with by the appellant. If, however, the two articles be construed together and the right of appellant to sell the unclaimed freight depended upon whether it had used due diligence to notify the consignee of its arrival, the facts show that it used such diligence to find and notify the consignee at Beaumont, and only failed because the consignee was not there to receive the notice. From the identity of names it appears from the bill of lading that the consignor and consignee were the same, but appellant could not know from this fact that the residence or domicile of the consignee was at Chattanooga, Tenn., and, if it had been charged with such notice, we do not think due diligence would have required it, in order to relieve itself of liability as a carrier, to notify the consignee at that place. It was the duty of the consignor who shipped the freight from Chattanooga, Tenn., to itself at Beaumont, Tex., to put itself in position to receive notice of the arrival of the freight at Beaumont, Tex., and, having failed to do this, appellant was under no obligation to seek the consignee elsewhere in order to notify it of the arrival of the freight at Beaumont. Railway Co. v. Townes, 93 Ark. 430, 124 S. W. 1036, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 572.

[3] By the terms of article 327, before quoted, the carrier is given the right to sell freight when the owner fails to claim or pay the proper charges thereon within three months after it reaches its destination or the depot of the carrier nearest or most convenient to the place of destination. We think it clear from this article that, when freight is unclaimed for the space of three months, the carrier has the right to sell, regardless of whether any charges are due upon the freight. The owner of the freight cannot by payment of the freight and storage charges, if any are due, compel the carrier to keep the freight longer than three months, and, if at the expiration of that time the freight is unclaimed or not taken by the owner, the carrier is authorized to sell it.

[4] The statute does not direct where the sale shall be made, and there is no reason for requiring such sales to be made at the point of destination. Such requirement would often be to the disadvantage of the owner of the goods. It is to the interest of the carrier, as well as the owner, that the sale should be made at the place where the property would bring the best price, and in many cases this would not be at the point of destination. In any event, in order for the owner to avoid a sale made at a place other than the point of destination, it must be shown that the place selected for the sale was unreasonable, and the owner was probably injured by the sale being made at such place. No such contention is made in this case, and there is nothing in the facts from which it can be inferred that any injury resulted to appellee by reason of the sale having been made at Galveston instead of Beaumont. In the case of Slayden-Kirksey Woolen Mills v. Railway Co., 132 S. W. 77, the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third District holds that the carrier is not required under this statute to sell the property at the place of destination. We concur in the views expressed in that opinion.

It follows from these conclusions that there was no conversion of the property by appellant, and the trial court erred in holding that the appellee was entitled to recover the value of the property.

[5] The appellant was not entitled, however, to charge appellee for storage of the goods, because it did not comply with the provisions of article 4520 of the statute. This article is as follows: "Railroad companies shall in no case be allowed to charge storage upon freight received by them for delivery unless the owner or consignee thereof neglect to remove it from the depot of the company within three days after notice of its reception, which notice may be given by posting the same on the depot door, and after the expiration of such time the company may remove and store said freight at the expense of the owner or consignee and said freight shall be held liable for the freight and charges due thereon." The appellant having failed to post the notice required by this statute was not entitled to make any charge for the storage of the freight, and appellee was entitled to recover the entire amount realized from the sale of its property.

We think the judgment of the court below should be reformed so as to restrict appellee's recovery to the amount realized by appellant from the sale of the property, and as so reformed should be affirmed, and it has been so ordered.

Reformed and affirmed.

SOUTHERN PAC. CO. v. HIGGINS OIL & FUEL CO.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Galveston. Dec. 5, 1912.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 807*)—DISMISSAL—REINSTATEMENT.

Where a long-standing practice of the court permitted a cause to be continued without a docket order or minute entry or request of the parties to the court, and the parties had agreed that the case should be continued from term to term until both parties were ready to try it, it was within the court's discretion, after having dismissed the suit of his own motion, to reinstate the suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3177-3188; Dec. Dig. § 807.*]

Error from District Court, Jefferson County; W. H. Pope, Judge.

Suit by the Higgins Oil & Fuel Company against the Southern Pacific Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood, of Houston, and Orgain & Butler, of Beaumont, for plaintiff in error. Greer & Minor, of Beaumont, for defendant in error.

PLEASANTS, C. J. This suit was brought by defendant in error, Higgins Oil & Fuel Company, against the plaintiff in error,

Southern Pacific Company, to set aside a judgment of dismissal rendered in a former suit brought by defendant in error against plaintiff in error and to reinstate said suit upon the docket of the court and recover upon the cause of action therein alleged. The petition, which was filed in the court below on May 11, 1910, after alleging the cause of action upon which the original suit, filed August 29, 1902, was based, the sufficiency of which is not questioned by plaintiff in error, contains the following allegations:

"That said petition prayed for satisfaction against said defendant and for judgment for its damages aforesaid, with interest, costs of suit, and for general relief. That thereafter, after due service, said defendant, the Southern Pacific Company, by its attorneys, on September 16, 1902, filed its original answer in said cause, consisting of a general demurrer and a general denial, and on the same date, as shown by the minutes of this court, the defendant demanded a jury; but, as plaintiff is informed and believes, and therefore avers, did not pay the jury fee, and said cause continued thereafter on the nonjury docket of this court, and was thereafter by consent of both parties continued from time to time and from term to term. That, after the filing of said suit, various suggestions and negotiations looking to the compromise and settlement of said cause were carried on between the plaintiff and the defendant, or their respective representatives, and on April 24, 1905, as appears from the minutes of this court, said cause was continued for settlement; but said negotiations for the settlement thereof were never consummated, and said cause as theretofore was continued by consent from term to term.

"Your petitioner alleges it to be the fact, upon information and belief: That there was a general understanding between its counsel and the counsel for the defendant that said cause should be continued from term to term or from time to time, and that the same would not be tried without the giving of due notice by each to the other. That in accordance with said general understanding, since the filing of said suit on August 29, 1902, up to the 17th day of May, 1909, the minutes of this court in which said suit has been pending have, as your petitioner alleges upon information and belief, no entries concerning said cause save the following, to wit: That on September 16, 1902, plaintiff and defendant were granted leave to amend and a jury was demanded by the defendant. That on April 24, 1905, the following entry appears on said minutes: 'This cause is continued for settlement.' That on September 15, 1905, the following entry appears on said minutes: 'This cause is continued by consent.' That from the filing of said suit up to the 17th day of May, 1909, the docket of said court, your petitioner alleges upon information and belief, shows no entries save those mentioned above as contained in the minutes, and the following addition thereto: That said cause was set for trial on November 24, 1902, and that the same was continued, but without any order of continuance on the docket or on the minutes. That said cause was set for trial on December 16, 1903, and was continued, but without any order of continuance on the docket or on the minutes. That on September 23, 1904, said cause was set for November 1, 1904, but was continued without any order on the docket or on the minutes. That it was set for September 15, 1905, and on that date, as shown by the docket, continued by consent. That it was set for April 8, 1907, and, as shown by the docket, was on that date continued by agreement. That it was set for January 23, 1908, but was continued without any order on the docket or on the minutes.

"Your petitioner is informed and believes, and therefore avers: That in pursuance of or in accordance with the general understanding between its counsel and counsel for defendant to the effect, in substance, for a considerable period prior and subsequent to the 24th of April, 1905 (when said cause was continued for settlement), that said cause should be continued for the purpose of a settlement by compromise, if terms of compromise could be agreed upon, and afterwards, under the general agreement between said counsel that said cause would not be tried until said counsel respectively were notified by one or the other that a trial was desired, said cause was continued and passed over from term to term and from year to year, and that accordingly no order of any sort was made in said cause either on the docket or the minutes of this court at the March term, 1903, the May term of 1903, the September term, 1903, the March term, 1904, the May term, 1904, the December term, 1904, the December term, 1905, the March term, 1905, the May term, 1905, the December term, 1906, the March term, 1906, the May term, 1906, the September term, 1906, the May term, 1907, the September term, 1907, the March term, 1908, the May term, 1908, the December term, 1908, the March term, 1909. That, as heretofore shown, whenever said cause was set for trial it was continued either without any formal order of continuance on the docket or on the minutes, or else by an entry duly made on the docket and on the minutes showing that said cause was continued by agreement. Your petitioner is further informed and believes, and therefore alleges, that at the term of this honorable court beginning on the first Monday in May, 1909, there was, prior to May 17, 1909, no setting of the nonjury docket upon which this case was pending, and your petitioner did not know, and it is informed and believes, and therefore alleges the fact to be, that its attorney in this case did not know that the nonjury docket of said court would be called on May 17, 1909, for trial or dismissal, and as plaintiff is informed and believes, and therefore avers, its counsel relied in good faith on the general understanding so long existing between him and counsel for defendant that this cause would be given no other course save to continue it until it was mutually convenient to them to set it down for trial.

"Your petitioner further alleges upon information and belief: That on May 7, 1909, counsel for defendant were both away from Beaumont engaged in the trial, or the preparation for trial, of a case in an adjoining county. That on May 17, 1909, said cause was dismissed by the court for want of prosecution. That on May 4, 1910, as your petitioner is informed and believes, and therefore avers, their attorney of record, F. D. Minor, who has been their attorney in charge of this case since its institution, intending to endeavor to try said cause at this term, and not remembering definitely whether the case was on the jury docket or the nonjury docket, inquired of a deputy clerk of the court on which docket it was, and then learned for the first time that said cause had been dismissed for want of prosecution on May 17, 1909. That until then your petitioner did not know, and it alleges upon information and belief that its counsel did not know, that said cause had been dismissed, but both believed in good faith that said cause was still pending on the docket of this court. Your petitioner alleges upon information and belief that, immediately upon learning that said cause had been dismissed, its counsel on the same day, to wit, May 4, 1910, went to see the attorneys for the defendant in said cause, and was informed by them that they had never heard of the dismissal of said cause and did not know that it had been dismissed.

"Your petitioner is informed and believes, and therefore alleges, that the honorable judge of this court, not knowing of the understanding between counsel for plaintiff and for defendant as to the continuance of said cause, and said counsel for both sides not apprehending that said cause would be dismissed, and counsel for petitioner relying upon the continuance of said cause, as it had been for many years before continued, and not being advised or informed that the nonjury docket of this court would be called and that said cause was likely to be dismissed, the dismissal of the said cause for want of prosecution was due to a mistake and to an accident. Your petitioner further alleges that if it or its counsel had known or had been advised that said cause was liable to be dismissed at said May term, 1909, said counsel would have been present in said court and would have caused the continuance of said cause to be entered, and that if counsel for defendant had been advised or informed that said cause was to be dismissed, they would have notified counsel for your petitioner, so that he might have obtained the continuance of said cause, or else they would have informed the court that said cause was to be continued. That your petitioner further alleges the fact to be that if it had known, or if its counsel had known, during the May term, 1909, that said cause had been dismissed for want of prosecution, the proper steps would immediately have been taken at that term to reinstate the same upon the docket. And petitioner alleges upon information and belief: That counsel for defendant would during that term have readily agreed to such reinstatement of the cause. That this proceeding was not instituted sooner because it was not until May 4, 1910, that your petitioner or its counsel had any information whatever that said cause had been dismissed for want of prosecution on May 17, 1909. Your petitioner alleges that it is advised and informed by its counsel that it has a good and meritorious cause of action against said defendant as set forth in its petition in said cause numbered 3,472 and as hereinbefore repeated and alleged. Premises considered, and inasmuch as your petitioner has no remedy save in a court of equity, it prays that the defendant may be duly served; that on the hearing said suit be reinstated on the docket with like effect in all respects as though the same had never been dismissed, and for such other and further relief in the premises as it may be entitled to, both legal and equitable, general and special, and for costs."

This petition was verified by the affidavits of L. L. Donnelly, secretary of defendant in error, and F. D. Minor, its attorney.

The answer of defendant in the court below contains a general demurrer and the following special exceptions: (1) A special exception to the petition "that it appears from the allegations in plaintiff's petition contained that the plaintiff is not in position to invoke the aid of a court of equity to secure the relief prayed for, because it appears from the allegations in plaintiff's petition that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence and laches, and shows an entire want of diligence upon the part of plaintiff to prevent the judgment sought to be set aside." (2) A special exception "to that part of plaintiff's petition wherein it prays that the former judgment of dismissal in suit No. 3,472 on the docket of this court, styled Higgins Oil & Fuel Company v. Southern Pacific Company, be set aside, and said suit be reinstated upon the docket of this court, because it does not appear that the plaintiff had a good cause of action of which it has been deprived by fraud, accident, or mistake, or the acts of the opposite party wholly unmixed with fraud and negligence upon its part." (3) A special exception "to that part of plaintiff's petition praying that a certain judgment of dismissal in cause No. 3,472, styled Higgins Oil & Fuel Company v. Southern Pacific Company, on the docket of this court, be set aside, and said suit be reinstated on the docket of this court as though it had never been dismissed, because it appears from the allegations therein contained that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence in using no diligence to prevent the entry of such judgment, and that said judgment was not caused or contributed to by any fraudulent act of the Southern Pacific Company or its counsel, and that said judgment was not the result of any fraud, accident, or mistake, but was the result of an entire lack and want of diligence upon the part of the plaintiff."

In addition to these exceptions, defendant filed a general denial and plea of limitation of four years.

On January 7, 1911, upon a hearing before the court, the demurrers and special exceptions of the defendant in error to the plaintiff's petition were heard by the court and overruled, and on the same day, upon the pleadings, the evidence and argument of counsel, the court ordered cause No. 3,472, which had been dismissed for want of prosecution on May 17, 1909, reinstated upon the docket and consolidated with cause No. 7,856, "and that said cause so consolidated with this proceeding stand in the same position as it was when said judgment of dismissal was rendered." No assignment of error challenges the order of the court reinstating the case. Thereafter, on June 12, 1911, the cause was tried with a jury, and a verdict and judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $2,221.85.

The only assignments of error presented in the brief of plaintiff in error complain of the ruling of the trial court in not sustaining the general demurrer and the special exceptions to the petition before set out. Under these assignments plaintiff in error contends that the allegations of the petition were insufficient to entitle plaintiff to have the cause reinstated, because said allegations show that the dismissal of the cause was not an accident, but resulted from plaintiff's inattention and negligence, and plaintiff not being free from fault and negligence, even if the dismissal was the result of accident, plaintiff was not entitled to a reinstatement under the well-established rule that, in order to entitle a party to set aside a judgment at a term of court subsequent to that at which the judgment was rendered, he must show that he has a good cause of action or defense "of which he has been deprived by fraud, accident, or the act of the opposing party, wholly unmixed with any fault or negligence on his own part."

It is clear from the allegations of the petition that both parties were under the mistaken belief that the court would not upon its own motion dismiss the suit without notice to plaintiff, and the judge by reinstating the cause confirmed the allegations of the petition that he would not have dismissed the suit if he had known of the agreement between the parties. The right of the judge to have dismissed the same without notice to the plaintiff, when he was not informed of the agreement between them that it should be continued from term to term until both parties were ready to try it, cannot be doubted, and we think his right to reinstate after he was informed of the agreement is equally clear. It was a matter within his discretion, and defendant cannot complain that he exercised that discretion by upholding the agreement it had made with plaintiff. Both parties evidently relied upon the practice of the court to permit the cause to be continued without any request by the parties or order on the docket or in the minutes of the court granting the continuance. Relying upon this practice and the agreement between them, neither party knew of the dismissal until shortly before the suit to reinstate was filed. This method of conducting the business of the court may not have been conducive of expedition in the dispatch of business; but, it having been the method pursued by the court for a number of years, we cannot say that plaintiff was, as a matter of law, guilty of negligence in relying thereon. We are not prepared to say that the judge would have abused his discretion if he had refused to reinstate the cause; but, having decided that the ends of justice would be best subserved by granting the petition to reinstate, we think he was authorized, upon the facts alleged, to make the order of reinstatement.

We are of opinion that the exceptions to the petition were properly overruled, and that the judgment of the court below should be affirmed.

Affirmed.

JOHNSON et al. v. OSWALD.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Dallas.
Dec. 7, 1912.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 177*)—CONVERSION OF MORTGAGED CHATTELS—LIABILITY.

One converting to his own use mortgaged chattels is only liable to the mortgagee for the market value of the chattels at the time and place of conversion, and, where the value exceeds the debt, then only to the extent of the debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 336, 340-357, 477; Dec. Dig. § 177.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 177*)—PETITION—SUFFICIENCY.

The petition, in an action by a mortgagee for the conversion of mortgaged chattels, should specifically allege the time and place of conversion and the value of the chattels converted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 336, 340-357, 477; Dec. Dig. § 177.*]

3. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 177*)—VALUE OF PROPERTY CONVERTED—EVIDENCE.

The testimony of a witness, in an action for the conversion of mortgaged chattels, that the mortgagor sold the chattels to a defendant who moved them to another place and resold them to codefendant; that the largest part of the property was by the carrier broken into scrap iron in moving; that defendant sued the carrier for the loss occasioned thereby and recovered a judgment for several hundred dollars; that the remainder of the property was in the possession of codefendant under his contract of sale; that defendant and codefendant by their conversion destroyed the mortgage lien and prevented the mortgagee from enforcing his lien on all but a fractional part of the property in possession of codefendant—did not show the value of the property when defendant bought and took possession of it, nor the time or place of his taking possession of it, and a judgment against defendant and codefendant was unsustainable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 336, 340-357, 477; Dec. Dig. § 177.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1140*)—CORRECTION OF ERROR BY REMITTITUR.

The error in the amount of a judgment, resulting from an error in calculation so as to make the judgment too large, does not require a reversal, where it can be cured by a remittitur.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4462-4478; Dec. Dig. § 1140.*]

Appeal from Dallas County Court; W. F. Whitehurst, Judge.

Action by E. E. Oswald against Marsene Johnson and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Fannin & Underwood, of Dallas, for appellants. George Sargeant and Cecil L. Simpson, both of Dallas, for appellee.

TALBOT, J. This suit was instituted by the appellee, Oswald, in the county court of Dallas county at law, against R. E. L. Giles, American Type Founders' Company, and the appellants Marsene Johnson and W. C. Lessing. The plaintiff sued to recover of the defendants Giles and the American Type Founders' Company the amount of two promissory notes, with interest and attorney's fees, as provided for in said notes, and to foreclose a chattel mortgage given to secure the payment of said notes, and of the defendants Johnson and Lessing damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of the conversion by them of the property upon which the plaintiff claimed a lien by reason of the chattel mortgage. On the 2d day of January, A. D. 1912, which was appearance day of the term, the case was called, and the defendants Johnson and Lessing not appearing either in person or by attorney, and neither having filed an answer, the plaintiff took a default judgment against them for $481.69, having in the meantime dismissed his case against the defendants Giles and American Type Founders' Company. The judgment recites the waiver of a jury, and that the court, after hearing the pleadings, the evidence, and argument of counsel, "is of the opinion that all material allegations in plaintiff's cause of action are true, that the defendants W. C. Lessing and Marsene Johnson are indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $481.69, with legal interest, and that the law is for the plaintiff." The judgment then proceeds in the usual form to decree that the plaintiff recover of the defendants Johnson and Lessing the sum of $481.69, with interest thereon from the date of the judgment at 6 per cent. per annum, together with all costs of suit. The appellants, Johnson and Lessing, in due time, filed a motion to set aside the judgment and for a new trial, which being overruled, they appealed.

There are several assignments of error, but they need not be considered and discussed in detail. The contention that the judgment is a personal one against the appellants on the notes sued on is probably not sustained by the record. At least, we are inclined to think it is subject to the construction that it is based upon the allegations in appellee's petition, attempting to charge a conversion of the property upon which he held a lien by the appellants and the proof offered in support thereof. The judgment, however, is clearly not as explicit as it should be in this respect.

[1, 2] It is assigned that the plaintiff's petition shows no cause of action whatever against the appellants, and therefore insufficient to support a judgment by default on appeal. If, as contended, the petition shows no cause of action against the appellants, then, as to them, it was subject to a general demurrer and insufficient to sustain the judgment rendered against them. It is clear the petition shows no liability on the part of the appellants for the payment of the notes sued on, and whether its allegations sufficiently charge a conversion of property upon which appellee had a lien to authorize a judgment against appellants for its value may be gravely doubted. The existence of the lien is sufficiently stated; but we find no direct or specific allegation that appellants at a certain time and place named converted the property, nor do we find any specific allegation of the value of the property. The allegations are: "That, at a date subsequent to February 4, 1910, or thereabouts, the defendants Marsene Johnson and W. C. Lessing began setting up some fictitious claim to said property in defiance of the rights of the American Type Founders' Company."

ders' Company, which adverse claim the American Type Founders' Company and this plaintiff had no knowledge of until about May, 1911, at which time the said American Type Founders' Company and this plaintiff were advised that said defendants, Marsene Johnson and W. C. Lessing, had taken possession of said property and had converted the same to their own use to the damage of the American Type Founders' Company in the sum of $500." The appellants are not liable on the notes described in the petition, and, if they converted to their own use property upon which appellee had a valid lien, they could only be held liable for the market value of the property at the time and place of conversion; and, if the value of the property exceeded the amount of the debt for which the lien was given to secure, then only to the extent of such debt. The allegations of conversion, of the time and place of conversion, and of the value of the property converted, should be specific.

[3] It is further contended that there was no evidence, or insufficient evidence, of the value of the property claimed to have been converted, and that for this reason the judgment should be reversed. In this contention we concur. The only evidence found in the record that remotely bears upon the question of the value of the property was given by the witness George Sergeant, and, as shown by the agreed statement of facts, is as follows: "R. E. L. Giles, the maker of these notes and mortgage, sold this mortgaged property to Marsene Johnson, who moved the property to Houston and resold it to W. C. Lessing. The largest part of the property was broken into scrap iron in moving by the railroad company. Marsene Johnson sued the railroad company for the loss and recovered a judgment for several hundred dollars damage. The remainder of the property is now in the possession of W. C. Lessing under his contract of sale with Marsene Johnson. Principal, interest, and attorney's fees due plaintiff on the notes and mortgages sued on amount to $481.69. Marsene Johnson and W. C. Lessing, by their conversion of this property, caused its destruction, and thereby prevented plaintiff from enforcing its lien on all but a fractional portion of property now in W. C. Lessing's hands, so that the damage sustained by plaintiff aggregates $481.69. No part of this has been paid." This testimony utterly fails to show the value of the property at the time Johnson bought and took possession of it, and so does it fail, too, to show either the time when he took possession of it, or the place where it was situated when he took it. Without proof of the value of the property at the time and place of its conversion, if converted, there was no basis in the evidence for a judgment against Johnson and Lessing upon the theory that they had converted it. It requires both allegations and proof to authorize and sustain a judgment. The absence of either is fatal. This proposition is so well established that the citation of authority in support of it is unnecessary.

[4] It is further contended that, in any event, the judgment rendered is too large. In this contention we also concur. If there had been evidence showing that the value of the property involved in the litigation, at the time and place of its conversion, was of value equal to or in excess of the debt sued on, a judgment for $481.69 against appellants would be excessive, for the reasons that said amount exceeds by $11.76, according to the calculation we have made, the principal, interest, and attorney's fees shown by the notes upon which the suit against Giles and the American Type Founders' Company was based, and to secure the payment of which the mortgage lien set up was given. Both of the notes are dated June 4, 1909. One of them is for $200, payable January 1, 1910, and the other is for the sum of $148, payable June 10, 1910. Both bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from date until maturity, and from maturity until paid at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, and provide for 10 per cent. additional as attorney's fees, if placed in the hands of an attorney for collection, etc. The error in the amount of the judgment would not, of itself, require a reversal of the case, as it could be cured by a remittitur; but, as a reversal is required for other reasons indicated, we call attention to it that a similar error may not occur upon another trial.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

CROWDER et al. v. McLEOD.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Ft. Worth. April 20, 1912. Writ of Error Dismissed Oct. 16, 1912.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 268*)—LIABILITY OF WIFE—ABANDONMENT—DEBTS OF COMMUNITY.

A wife who has been abandoned by her husband may act as a feme sole, pay community debts, and convey community property, either for that purpose or to secure necessities for herself and family, as the survivor of the connubial partnership, and is authorized to bind herself by a note executed to secure an extension of the community debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 953-967; Dec. Dig. § 268.*]

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 92*)—CONSIDERATION—EXTENSION OF TIME.

Extension of time secured by a wife who had been abandoned by her husband by the execution of her sole note for the payment of a community debt constituted a sufficient consideration for the note.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 166-173, 175-212; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

Appeal from Stonewall County Court.

Action by A. J. McLeod against Mrs. Nannie Crowder and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

N. R. Morgan, of Spur, for appellants. Ernest Herring, of Groesbeck, J. M. Carter, of Aspermont, and Theodore Mack, of Ft. Worth, for appellee.

CONNER, C. J. It seems undisputed in the record that appellee was the payee of a subsisting valid community obligation of one R. P. Fowler, who later permanently abandoned his wife, Nannie Fowler, leaving in her possession community property of the two; that, in order to obtain an extension and to avoid the immediate institution of a suit upon the said obligation of R. P. Fowler, Nannie Fowler during the continuance of said abandonment executed the obligation sued upon, and the principal question made on this appeal is whether said Nannie Fowler, who has since intermarried with W. S. Crowder, joined herein pro forma, could legally execute the obligation sued upon, and, if so, whether it was upon a sufficient consideration. Both of these questions in our judgment must be determined in the affirmative.

[1] While ordinarily under our statute a wife may not make contracts binding her separate property or the community property of herself and husband, save in certain cases not here pertinent, yet where, as here shown, she has been abandoned, she, in the nature of the situation, may act as a feme sole and pay community debts and convey community property either for that purpose or for the purpose of securing necessities for herself and family. When so abandoned, we think her powers with reference to and in preservation of the community property and in the settlement of connubial partnership business is analogous to the powers of a surviving partner generally. See Fermier v. Brannan, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 543, 53 S. W. 699; Neighbors v. Anderson, 94 Tex. 487, 61 S. W. 145, 32 S. W. 417; Wetzel v. Simon & Co., 87 Tex. 404, 28 S. W. 274, 942; Proetzel v. Rabel, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 559, 54 S. W. 373; Speer on Law of Married Women, §§ 105, 116.

[2] It follows that the extension of time granted constituted a sufficient consideration, and that the judgment must be affirmed.

Appeal from District Court, Hardin County; L. B. Hightower, Judge.

Action by J. F. Keith and another against Gustan Guedry. From a Judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. Lockett, of Houston, Greers & Nall, of Beaumont, and John L. Little, of Kountze, for appellant. Geo. D. Anderson, of Beaumont, and Singleton & Nall, of Kountze, for appellees.

McMEANS, J. J. F. Keith and the Keith Lumber Company brought this suit against Gustan Guedry for the recovery of 1,238½ acres of land in Hardin county, patented to the assignees of John M. Bowyer. They also sued John H. Kirby and Charles D. Bragg on their covenants of warranty. The suit against Bragg was dismissed, and, as the plaintiffs recovered against defendant, Guedry, there was no recovery against Kirby on his warranty. The defendant Guedry disclaimed as to all the land sued for except 640 acres, John P. Wilds survey, which was in conflict with the Bowyer, and as to said 640 acres he pleaded not guilty and the statute of limitations of three, five, and ten years. A trial before the court without a jury resulted in a judgment for plaintiffs, and from this judgment the defendant has appealed.

This case has been tried twice, and this is the second appeal. On the first trial a judgment was rendered on the verdict of a jury in favor of defendant for the 640 acres John P. Wilds survey, and on appeal said judgment was affirmed by the Court of Civil Appeals of the Fourth District, 114 S. W. 392. Afterwards the Supreme Court granted a writ of error and reversed the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals and of the district court and remanded the case for a new trial. 103 Tex. 160, 122 S. W. 17, 125 S. W. 5.

The trial court filed its finding of facts, which, on account of its great length, we will not undertake to set out in this opinion. We think, however, that the evidence in the record justifies the following fact findings: The appellees claim the John M.

Bowyer survey of 1,238½ acres which was surveyed March 30, 1881, by virtue of duplicate certificate No. 35/137 issued January 24, 1879, in lieu of certificate No. 1,062, issued by the board of land commissioners of Harris county on August 9, 1851, to John M. Bowyer. The field notes of the survey were filed in the General Land Office April 12, 1881, and on October 25, 1881, were indorsed as being in conflict with the John P. Wilds survey, and on November 9, 1883, were indorsed corrected. On July 2, 1886, patent was issued for the land described by the field notes to Levi Ketchum and James D. Rhea as assignees of John M. Bowyer, which was recorded in Hardin county. It is conceded by the appellant that appellees connected themselves by a complete chain of title with the patentees. The appellee claims the John P. Wilds unpatented survey of 640 acres made on April 30, 1856, and which is entirely covered by the Bowyer survey. John P. Wilds immigrated to Texas in 1838, and was the head of a family, and on July 4, 1839, he obtained from the board of land commissioners of Jefferson county a conditional headright certificate No. 46 for 640 acres, took the oath, and made the proof of witnesses as required by law. The clerk of said board reported to the General Land Office, on July 18, 1839, that said certificate had been issued. The board appointed to investigate the records of the board of land commissioners east of the Brazos river reported May 24, 1841, recommending this certificate as genuine and legally issued. On November 4, 1845, John P. Wilds obtained from the board of land commissioners of Jefferson county his unconditional headright certificate No. 46 for 640 acres, and the issuance of this certificate was by the clerk of said board of land commissioners reported to the General Land Office. John P. Wilds located upon the 640 acres in controversy in 1839 or 1840, and resided thereon with his family until he sold it to Ursin Guedry in 1856, and said Guedry moved on the place immediately, and resided thereon with his family until his death in 1861, and his family continued to reside thereon substantially all the time until the fall of 1881.

The 640 acres in question were surveyed April 30, 1856, by A. H. Redding, surveyor of Jefferson county, which then included what is now Hardin county. The field notes of the survey recite that the survey was made by virtue of headright certificate No. 46, and they were recorded in the surveyor's office April 30, 1856, and were, with the map thereto attached, filed in the General Land Office on July 14, 1856. It is conceded by the appellees, and we find, that the appellant, Gustan Guedry, has the title which was acquired by the location of the John P. Wilds survey. The trial court found, and the evidence warrants the finding by us, that neither the conditional nor the unconditional certificate issued to John P. Wilds was ever returned to or filed in the General Land Office. No patent was ever issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to John P. Wilds, or any other person, for the land surveyed by virtue of the John P. Wilds headright certificate. The court concluded as a matter of law, based upon findings substantially as above, that the John P. Wilds 640-acre survey became forfeited for failure to return to or file in the General Land Office the certificate by virtue of which said survey was made, and that the land thereby became vacant and subject to appropriation, and that the John M. Bowyer survey was validly located, surveyed, and patented over the said John P. Wilds forfeited survey. This conclusion is attacked by appellant by several assignments of error, which we will not discuss in detail. We are of opinion that all of said assignments must be overruled.

[1] As before stated, the certificate upon which the John P. Wilds survey was made (and whether it was made by virtue of the conditional or unconditional does not clearly appear and it is not material upon which) was never returned to or filed in the General Land Office. On the 29th day of November, 1871, the Legislature of this state enacted that: "In all locations and surveys of land heretofore made by virtue of any such certificate as is specified in the first section of this act, and in which the field notes have been returned to the General Land Office, and the certificate by virtue of which the survey was made is not on file in the General Land Office, nor has been withdrawn for location of unlocated balance, as is provided in the first section of this act, such certificate shall be returned to, and filed in the General Land Office within eight months from the passage of this act, or the location and survey made by virtue thereof, shall be null and void." Laws 2d Session 1871, p. 45, c. 57. The John P. Wilds certificate being a headright, was embraced in the terms of the first section of that act, therefore included in the part of the second section copied above. As said by our Supreme Court in this case on the former appeal (103 Tex. at page 166, 122 S. W. at page 19): "It follows that by the unmistakable language of the law the survey made under that certificate became void, and on March 30, 1881, the land was subject to location and appropriation by the certificate of John M. Bowyer, then located thereon, unless it shall appear that the unconditional certificate was at some time prior to July 29, 1872, on file in the General Land Office." We have before stated that the evidence shows that neither of said certificates was ever returned to and filed in the General Land Office, and, this being true, it follows, of course, that the unconditional certificate was not returned to or filed therein prior to July 29, 1872.

[2] The contention of appellant that the act of November 29, 1871, is unconstitutional was decided against him by the Supreme Court in the opinion referred to. But appellant by his seventh assignment complains that the court erred in not holding that the John M. Bowyer survey and patent are void, because made on the same land formerly covered by the John P. Wilds survey, and without giving 90 days' notice of the forfeiture of the John P. Wilds survey. He contends by his proposition under this assignment, in substance, that the owner of a certificate by which a forfeited survey was located has a vested right in the land and has 90 days after he shall have been notified of the forfeiture within which to relocate on the same land, and during that time the land is reserved from location, survey, and patent by another, and any location, survey, or patent made before the expiration of 90 days, or without notice of the forfeiture being given, is void and is not validated by any subsequent lapse of time or by failure of the owner of the forfeited survey to relocate on same. This contention is based on the act of June 2, 1873, which provides: "When a survey has become forfeited and void from any cause, as soon as such forfeiture is discovered the Commissioner shall notify the party interested in such survey or location, in writing by mail, directed to such party at his post office address, if known, and if not known, directed to him at the county seat of the county in which the land is situated, of such forfeiture; and no new file or location shall be made on the land covered by such forfeited survey or location, except by the owner of such forfeited survey or location for a period of ninety days after the mailing of such notice." Revised Statutes 1879, art. 3812. This act was amended by the act of February 11, 1881, which went into effect July 1, 1881, and is brought forward in Revised Statutes of 1895 as article 4057, by adding thereto the following: "And the Commissioner shall keep a record of the date said notice was mailed and the name of the party to whom the notice was mailed, and the name of the post office to which said notice was addressed; and the record of such entries shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, and the absence of such entries shall be prima facie evidence that the notice required above had not been given."

As this last amendment was made after the location of the Bowyer certificate, it may be that no presumption would arise from the fact that the records of the Land Office were silent on the question that the notice of forfeiture was not in fact given. The court in its fact findings found that there was no evidence that notice of the forfeiture of the John P. Wilds survey was given to said Wilds, Ursin Guedry, or his heirs, among whom the survey was partitioned. The court made additional findings of fact after the expiration of the time provided by law for filing its findings, in which it is specifically found that no notice of the forfeiture was ever given.

We think the assignment must be overruled, for, regardless of the conclusion this court might otherwise reach, we think the question is, in effect, concluded by the decision of the Supreme Court on the former appeal. It is clear from the opinion that the Supreme Court held that the failure to file the Wilds certificate in the General Land Office before the 29th day of July, 1872, rendered the location and survey void. If void, then the land was subject to location under any other valid certificate. This view of the Supreme Court is emphasized by the concluding portion of its opinion wherein this language is used: "In remanding the cause we think it proper to say that, the state having issued a patent upon the location made under the Bowyer certificate, it will devolve upon the defendant below (Guedry) to prove that the unconditional certificate issued to J. P. Wilds was located and the field notes and certificate returned to and deposited in the General Land Office at some time prior to the 29th day of July, 1872. Such proof in our opinion would show a vested right which would be superior to the right upon which the patent was issued, unless the plaintiffs shall prove that, after the Wilds certificate had been deposited in the Land Office, it was withdrawn therefrom by the owner of the certificate, or by some person authorized by him to do so. Snider v. Methvin, 60 Tex. 490. If such proof should be made by plaintiffs, then the survey made by the Wilds certificate must be held to have been forfeited under the act of November 29, 1871, and plaintiffs would be entitled to recover the land in controversy."

Appellant's eleventh assignment of error complains of the action of the court in refusing to render judgment in his favor on the issue of limitation under the three, five, and ten years' statutes.

The court found that appellant had failed to establish title by limitation in himself, or through those under whom he claims, to the land in controversy. We have carefully examined the evidence set out in the briefs of the parties on this issue, and, while it is conflicting, we find that there was testimony which justified the court's conclusion. The assignment is overruled.

There are many other assignments presented by appellant in his brief, all of which we have carefully considered, and have reached the conclusion that none of them point out error which requires a reversal of the trial court's judgment. The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

Affirmed.

GENERAL ACCIDENT, FIRE & LIFE ASSUR. CORPORATION v. LACY et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Dallas. Nov. 2, 1912. On Motion for Rehearing, Dec. 21, 1912.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 163*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—PROCEEDING TO VACATE—MERITS OF DEFENSE.

The court, on motion to open a default judgment, may not as a general rule pass on the merits of the defense in support of the motion.

2. JUDGMENT (§ 143*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—VACATION—GROUNDS.

A defendant who, more than a month before the end of the term at which the default judgment was taken, filed his application to vacate the judgment, and pleaded as an excuse for the default a compromise and settlement of the claim sued on and a promise by plaintiff to dismiss the action, showed a reasonable excuse for defaulting and a meritorious defense, necessitating the vacating of the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 269, 270, 272-291; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 602*)—FAILURE TO PAY LOSS—DAMAGES—ATTORNEY'S FEES.

Acts 31st Leg. c. 108, § 35, making an insurer, failing to pay a loss within 30 days after demand, liable to pay the loss with damages and attorney's fees for the collection of the loss, requires a specific allegation in the petition of demand and refusal to pay within the time prescribed, and a petition merely alleging that, though often requested, insurer has refused to pay the policy or any part thereof, is not sufficient to justify the recovery of the damages and attorney's fees.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1498; Dec. Dig. § 602.*]

On Motion for Rehearing.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 835*)—OBJECTIONS—TIME TO MAKE.

Under Court Rule 22 (142 S. W. xii), providing that parties will be expected before submission to see that the transcript of the record is properly prepared and inaccuracies will not be admitted after submission as a reason for correcting the record or obtaining a rehearing, a defendant in error on rehearing may not maintain a motion to amend or strike out the transcript because of inaccuracies therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3241-3246; Dec. Dig. § 835.*]

5. JUDGMENT (§ 162*)—VACATING DEFAULT JUDGMENT—MERITORIOUS DEFENSE—EVIDENCE.

The court, on hearing a motion to open a default judgment, may take the testimony on the merits of the defense interposed, where no objection is made to a trial of the issue in that way.

Error from Wood County Court; B. M. Smith, Judge.

Action by Henrietta Lacy and another against the General Accident, Fire & Life Assurance Corporation. There was a judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Reversed and remanded.

G. W. Keeling, of Pittsburg, and Israel Dreeben, of Dallas, for plaintiff in error. Jones & Jones, of Mineola and Winnsboro, for defendants in error.

TALBOT, J. This suit was filed by Henrietta Lacy, joined by her husband, Jerry Lacy, on the 6th day of September, 1910, against the General Accident, Fire & Life Assurance Corporation, Limited, of Perth, Scotland, in the county court of Wood county, Tex., upon an accident insurance policy alleged to have been issued by plaintiff in error, to one David C. Lacy, the son of the plaintiffs in the said suit. Citation was issued to the defendant assurance corporation by the clerk of the county court of Wood county, directed to the sheriff of Camp county; plaintiff having alleged that defendant corporation had no agent in Wood county, which said citation was served by the sheriff of Camp county, Tex., and his return showing that he served the citation, but not showing service of a certified copy of plaintiffs' petition. The defendant did not appear and plead, nor waive or accept service. On the 18th day of January, 1911, same being a day of the January term of said court, a judgment was rendered by default in favor of plaintiffs against the defendant, for the amount sued for, to wit, $400 principal, $48 penalty, and $100 attorney's fees. At the same term of the court at which said judgment was rendered and on February 8, 1911, plaintiff in error filed a motion to vacate and set aside said judgment, which was by the court overruled. On February 23, 1911, the defendant in error filed a motion to have the sheriff of Camp county amend his return on the citation so as to show service of a certified copy of the petition upon the plaintiff in error. This motion was by the court sustained and the amendment directed to be made. Defendant in the court below, being dissatisfied with the rulings of that court, has brought the case to this court by writ of error.

At the last term of the court we affirmed the judgment of the lower court without a written opinion, but, upon a further consideration of the case on motion for a rehearing, have concluded the judgment should be reversed and the cause remanded. In its motion to have the default judgment set aside and a new trial awarded, the plaintiff in error pleaded a compromise and settlement of the claim sued on for the sum of $100 prior to the rendition of said judgment; that said sum was paid to defendant in error in full satisfaction and discharge of any and all claims defendant in error had by reason of the policy sued on; and that in consideration thereof defendant in error agreed and promised to dismiss this suit. Attached to the motion to have the judgment by default vacated and set aside was a written release, dated December 19, 1910, purporting to have been signed by the defendant in error and witnessed by J. O. Lacy and A. M. Lacy. This release recites the receipt of $100 by the defendant in error in compromise and full settlement of any claim which may have arisen by reason of the policy issued to David Lacy and made the basis of the suit. There is no statement of facts in the record; but the judgment overruling the motion to vacate the default judgment contains the following recitation, namely: "The court further finds that the purported release which was executed by Henrietta Lacy is null and void, for the reason that same was procured by the defendant through fraud and deceit, and the court further finds that there was no consideration given for said release." This judgment also recites that the "court, after hearing all of the testimony upon said motion, is of the opinion that the same is not well taken and that the same should be in all things overruled." We have been unable, however, to find any pleading in the record filed by the defendant in error contesting plaintiff in error's motion to set aside the judgment or otherwise raising an issue as to the truth of the matters set up in said motion.

[1] But whether any such pleading was filed or not, we think the court in hearing evidence, if any was heard, in opposition to the motion and in determining on the motion to vacate the default judgment that the compromise and release pleaded by the plaintiff in error had been effected and procured by fraud and deceit, and therefore such compromise and release were null and void, erred. That the compromise and release pleaded by the plaintiff in error in its sworn application to set aside the default presented a defense prima facie meritorious is not and cannot be denied, and, according to very high and doubtless the weight of authority, the trial court, in the hearing of the application, was not authorized to inquire into the truth of the defense thus asserted. It is said that when the application is by motion, and the applicant shows a reasonable excuse for having made default, and also shows by affidavit that he has a meritorious defense to the plaintiff's claim, the court must pass on the question of setting aside the default on the showing thus made. It cannot take testimony as to the truth of the facts of defense. To permit the taking of testimony as to the matters set out in the affidavit and a determination of the issue thus raised would, in effect, be to try the defense before the court had determined, by setting aside the default, that the defendant should be heard to make a defense. The following are some of the cases so holding: Worth v. Wetmore, 87 Iowa, 62, 54 N. W. 56; Joerns v. La Nicca, 75 Iowa, 709, 38 N. W. 129; Pratt v. Kells, 28 Ala. 390; Francis v. Cox, 33 Cal. 323; Gracier v. Weir, 45 Cal. 53; Douglass v. Todd, 96 Cal. 655, 31 Pac. 623, 31 Am. St. Rep. 247; Ruck v. Havens, 40 Ind. 221.

[2] The record shows that the plaintiff in error, more than a month before the expiration of the term of court at which the judgment by default in this case was taken, filed its application to open and set aside said judgment, and pleaded, as an excuse for making default, a compromise and settlement of the claim sued on and a promise on the part of the defendant in error to dismiss this case. This was a reasonable excuse for not appearing and answering the suit, and, together with allegations of compromise and settlement, showed good grounds for vacating the judgment. 23 Cyc. p. 920, and cases cited in note.

[3] We are further of the opinion that the pleadings were insufficient to authorize a recovery for the penalty and attorney's fees, provided for in chapter 108, Acts of the Thirty-First Legislature. This statute, section 35, provides that in all cases where a loss occurs and the life or accident insurance company liable therefor shall fail to pay the same within 30 days after demand therefor, such company shall be liable to pay the holder of such policy, in addition to the amount of the loss, 12 per cent. damages on the amount of such loss, together with reasonable attorney's fees for the prosecution and collection of such loss. There is no specific allegation of demand and failure on the part of the plaintiff in error in this case to pay within 30 days after such demand, found in the petition. Such an allegation was, we think, essential to a recovery of the damages and attorney's fees allowed in the judgment. The general allegation "that, although often requested, the defendant has wholly refused and failed to pay said policy or any part thereof," is not in our opinion sufficient. Neither can the filing of the suit be regarded as the demand intended by the statute in question. This statute is penal in its nature and must be strictly construed. It requires, we think, a specific allegation of demand and refusal to pay within the time prescribed, and the petition of defendant in error, not containing such an allegation, was obnoxious, it would seem, to a general demurrer, and therefore not sufficient to support the judgment for the damages and attorney's fees awarded. That the specific allegation referred to must be made seems clearly inferable from the following decisions: Northwestern Life Assur. Co. v. Sturdivant, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 331, 59 S. W. 61; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Ford, 103 Tex. 522, 131 S. W. 406; Security Co. v. Hallum, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 134, 73 S. W. 554; Penn

Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Maner, 101 Tex. 553, 109 S. W. 1084.

In view of another trial, it is proper to call attention to the condition of the policy sued on, as shown by the record sent to this court. It appears that the policy was made an exhibit to and a part of the plaintiff's petition in the court below, and, as copied into the transcript, bears date June 18, 1909, and recites that the deceased, David Lacy, is insured "from 12 o'clock noon, eastern standard time, of the day this contract is dated, until 12 o'clock noon, standard time, of the first day of July 1907," etc. Thus, upon the face of the policy it appears that the deceased was insured for a period of time antedating the issuance of the policy. The policy may be incorrectly copied into the transcript, or either the date of the policy or the period of time intended to be covered by the insurance was inaccurately stated, in drawing the policy. If an error in writing the policy was made, appropriate allegations in regard thereto should be made by an amendment of the pleadings.

The motion of the plaintiff in error for a rehearing is granted, and for the reason indicated the judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause remanded.

On Motion for Rehearing.

[4] The motion of the defendant in error to strike out the transcript in this case, because of inaccuracies therein, or to make a certified copy of their contest of the plaintiff in error's motion filed in the county to set aside the judgment by default taken in that court, a part of the record in this court, cannot prevail. Rule 22 (142 S. W. xli), relating to the preparation of cases for submission in this court, as recently amended by the Supreme Court, provides: "All parties will be expected, before submission, to see that the transcript of the record is properly prepared, and the mere failure to observe omissions or inaccuracies therein will not be admitted, after submission, as a reason for correcting the record or obtaining a rehearing." Under this rule the motion to amend or strike out the transcript comes too late and must be overruled.

[6] In their motion for a rehearing the defendants in error contend that we erred in holding that the trial court should not have heard evidence in opposition to the plaintiff in error's motion to vacate the default judgment appealed from and determined therefrom that the compromise and release set up in said motion had been effected and procured by fraud and deceit. This contention is predicated, not upon the ground that we did not correctly state the general rule of law upon the subject, but upon the proposition that the record fails to disclose any objection on the part of the plaintiff in error to a trial of this issue in that way. In support of their proposition, defendants in error cite the cases of Sugg v. Thornton, 73 Tex. 666, 9 S. W. 145, and Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Williams et al., 79 Tex. 633, 15 S. W. 478. These cases were not called to our attention before the written opinion heretofore filed in the case was handed down, and they were overlooked. The cases cited sustain the position now assumed by counsel for the defendant in error; but, for the other reasons given in our opinion, the cause must stand reversed and remanded for a new trial. As stated in our original written opinion, the pleadings of the plaintiffs below were insufficient to authorize the judgment by default for the penalty and attorney's fees therein awarded; nor were the pleadings, as they appear from the transcript sent to this court, sufficient to authorize and support the judgment for the amount of the policy sued on. This condition of the pleadings, as the case was being reversed on other grounds, was simply referred to in our original opinion with the suggestion that the difficulty disclosed by the policy which was attached to and made a part of the plaintiffs' petition might be and should be corrected by an amendment on another trial.

The motion for a rehearing is overruled.

FT. WORTH & D. C. RY. CO. v. WESTERN STOCKYARDS CO. et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Amarillo. Nov. 16, 1912. Rehearing Denied Dec. 7, 1912.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 172*)—GRANT OF RIGHT OF WAY—CONSTRUCTION.

The grant of a right of way 200 feet in width to the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company by special act of the Legislature in 1873 (chapter 208) was a grant effective in present and subsequent grantees located their certificates, and their assigns took, subject to such legislative grant.

2. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 172*)—GRANT OF RIGHT OF WAY—REVOCATION.

Where a grant of land to a railroad for right of way rested upon a condition subsequent, failure to perform such condition did not operate to revoke the grant, but merely authorized the state to forfeit it by judicial proceedings or legislative act.

3. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 172*)—GRANT OF RIGHT OF WAY—ACCEPTANCE OF DEED—ESTOPPEL.

The fact that a railroad, after receiving from the state a grant of land 200 feet in width, accepted a deed from a subsequent settler to a strip of such grant 100 feet wide, did not estop it from suing for the full 200 feet.

4. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 172*)—ACCEPTANCE OF DEED—RAILROAD GRANT.

Where a railroad to which the Legislature had granted a strip of land contracted with the party claiming title to one-half the strip from a subsequent settler, relative to the building of stockyards upon such half, and such contract described the land belonging to the railroad company by a blue print and map which did not include such half, such contract, being an unequivocal admission that its claim of right of way did not include this part, estopped it from thereafter claiming same, especially where it appeared that the other contracting party and his assigns had incurred great expense in purchasing adjacent property and constructing valuable improvements.

5. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 41*)—ACQUISITION OF TITLE—RAILROAD GRANT.

Where a person and his assigns claiming title under a settler held adverse possession for 15 years of 100 feet of the 200 feet of land granted to a railroad for a right of way, they acquired title by adverse possession.

Appeal from District Court, Potter County; J. N. Browning, Judge.

Action by the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company against the Western Stockyards Company and others. From a judgment for defendants on a directed verdict, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Turner & Wharton, of Amarillo, and Spoons, Thompson & Barwise, of Ft. Worth, for appellant. Madden, Trulove & Kimbrough, and F. M. Ryburn, all of Amarillo, for appellees.

HALL, J. This suit was instituted by appellant railway company against the Western Stockyards Company and the Panhandle Packing Company to recover a strip of land 50 feet in width, being a portion of section 137, block 2, A. B. & M. surveys, Potter county, Tex. The strip of land in question, beginning 1,400 feet west of the eastern boundary line of said section at a point 50 feet north of the center of plaintiff's main track for the southeast corner, thence north 50 feet for the northeast corner, and said strip 50 feet in width extending in a westerly direction parallel with plaintiff's main track to a point 2,065 feet east of the west boundary line of said section. The petition is in the usual form of trespass to try title, and contains a second count, pleading plaintiff's title in detail. The substance of the second count is that plaintiff acquired the strip of land in question by virtue of its charter granted by special act of the Legislature in 1873 (Laws 1873, c. 208), section 8 of said act being as follows: "That the right of way to be to the extent of 200 feet wide is hereby granted to said railway company through the public lands of the state of Texas and also the right to take and use in the construction of said road any timber or other material used in the construction of railways found lying upon any part of the public lands of this state." The charter authorized the road to be constructed from a point at or near Ft. Worth, Tex., beginning at a junction with the Texas & Pacific Railway, and continuing in a north-westerly direction to the western boundary line of the state of Texas, in the direction of the city of Denver, Colo.; that plaintiff began the actual work of locating said line of road within one year after the date of its charter, and continued in accordance with the requirements of the law until the line was constructed, equipped, and in operation, which was in the month of April, 1888; that the road was constructed across the section in question in the year 1887; that at the time of the granting of its charter and until July 20, 1875, said land was known as section 137, and was vacant, unappropriated public domain, having been surveyed, located, and patented after July, 1875; that, by reason of the construction of its road, it became entitled to a strip of land 200 feet in width across said section; that the land in controversy is a part of the town of Amarillo, which town has since the construction of plaintiff's road become a large and important shipping point having about 10,000 population, with two other lines of railway intersecting plaintiff's line at said point, and it has become necessary for plaintiff to use and occupy the whole of said strip of land 200 feet in width across said section for tracks, switches, and other facilities for the proper operation and management of its said line of road. The petition further sets out the history and origin and establishment of Western Stockyards Company, and alleges that said company constructed certain stock pens and stockyards on plaintiff's line of road north of its main track, and was occupying the land in controversy, except that portion of it which had been conveyed by said Stockyards Company to the Panhandle Packing Company, a second corporation. Some of the questions presented for our consideration by this appeal have been considered by us in disposing of the case of Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Co. v. Southern Kansas Railway Co. et al., 151 S. W. 850, by our opinion, dated November 2, 1912, and not yet officially reported. We see no reason for holding other than we did in that case that the language of the grant, when construed in connection with the presumption that the track would be built in the center of the right of way as granted, sufficiently designates the property granted.

[1] We also held in said case that the grant was effective in present, nor do we see any reason for changing our opinion upon that issue. In the case of St. J. & D. C. R. R. Co. v. Baldwin, 103 U. S. 426, 26 L. Ed. 578, there was a grant to the appellant railway company, the sixth section of which is as follows: "And be it further enacted that the right of way through the public lands be and the same is hereby granted to said St. Joseph & Denver City Railway Company, its successors and assigns, for the construction of a railroad as proposed and the right is hereby given to said corporation to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road, material for the construction thereof. Said way is granted to said railroad to the extent to 100 feet in width on each side of said road, where it may pass through the public domain," etc. Mr. Justice Field, in delivering the opinion of the court, stated that the act of Congress in question made two distinct grants, one of which was of a right of way directly to the company itself, and uses this language: "But the grant of the right of way by the sixth section contains no reservations or exceptions. It is a present, absolute grant, subject to no conditions except those necessarily implied, such as that the road shall be constructed and used for the purposes designated, nor is there anything in the policy of the government with respect to the public lands which would call for any qualification of the terms. Those lands would not be the less valuable for settlement by a road running through them. On the contrary, their value would be greatly enhanced thereby. The right of way for the whole distance of the proposed route was a very important part of the aid given. If the company could be compelled to purchase its way over any section that might be occupied in advance of its location, very serious obstacles would be often imposed to the progress of the road. For any loss of lands by settlement or reservation, other lands are given, but for the loss of the right of way by these means no compensation is provided, or could any be given by the substitution of another route. The uncertainty as to the ultimate location of the line of road is recognized throughout the act, and, where any qualification is intended in the operation of the grant of lands from this circumstance, it is designated. Had a similar qualification upon the absolute grant of the right of way been intended, it can hardly be doubted that it would have been expressed. The fact that none is expressed is conclusive that none exists. We see no reason therefore for not giving to the words of present grant with respect to the right of way the same construction which we should be compelled to give according to our repeated decisions, to the grant of lands, had no limitation been expressed. We are of the opinion, therefore, that all persons acquiring any portion of the public lands after the passage of the act in question took the same subject to the right of way conferred by it for the proposed road." In this case the act of Congress reserved in that part of the special charter granting lands to the state of Kansas for the benefit of said road all lands that had been previously granted or which had been appropriated by pre-emption or homestead settlement, and the facts show that at the time of said grant the route of the road had not been fixed.

There is in the instant case an agreed statement of facts, a part of which is as follows: "That at the time said act was passed (May 26, 1873) all that portion of Northwestern Texas, within 100 miles of the land in controversy, and over which said corporation's line of railroad and telegraph lines were subsequently located and constructed, was uninhabited and a large portion thereof (all that portion being on what is called 'Staked Plains,' including where the land in controversy is located) was rarely visited or seen by man or beast, except that after the spring rain and green grass would come, usually in May or June, the buffalo and wild horse would roam there in large numbers to graze during the remainder of the spring and summer seasons, and bands of Indians would come and roam from their reservations to hunt. This condition of affairs in said territory continued for a year or more after said act was passed, so that during said time the land in controversy and a very large portion of Northwestern Texas over which said line of railroad has been subsequently located was what is known as 'frontier,' and subject to incursions, and depredations by hostile bands of Indians, such as history shows to have been the conditions in far out frontier counties, rendering an undertaking of a survey and location of said line at said time correspondingly dangerous to life and property as well as expensive." We presume that the above facts are shown in order to excuse appellant's failure to comply with the fifteenth section of the special act, requiring appellant to file with the Commissioner of the General Land Office within six months after the organization of the company plans and maps, showing the line upon which it intended to construct its road. These facts are unnecessary in our opinion, because the grant took effect in present. The case of Railway Co. v. Baldwin, supra, is only one of many cases decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, construing similar grants to railroads of a right of way across public lands, among which we cite D. & B. G. Ry. Co. v. Alling, 99 U. S. 475, 25 L. Ed. 443, in which it is said: "We do not doubt that the intention of Congress was to grant to the company a present beneficial easement in the particular way over which the designated routes lay, capable, however, of enjoyment only when the way granted was actually located, and in good faith appropriated for the purposes contemplated by the charter of the company and the act of Congress. When such location and appropriation took place, the title, which was previously imperfect, acquired precision, and by relation took effect as of the date of the grant. The settled doctrine of this court would seem to justify that conclusion." The grant to the Denver & Rio Grande Railway Company was almost identical with the language of the grant in this case. In construing the act of March 13, 1875, in Noble v. U. R. L. Ry. Co., 147 U. S.

165, 13 Sup. Ct. 271, 37 L. Ed. 123, it is said: "The lands over which the right of way was granted were public lands, subject to the operation of the statute, and the question whether the plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of the grant was one which it was competent for the Secretary of the Interior to decide, and, when decided and his approval was noted upon the plots, the first section of the act vested the right of way in the railroad company. The language of that section is 'that the right of way over the public lands of the United States is hereby granted to any railroad company duly organized under the laws of any state or territory,' etc. The uniform rule of this court has been that such an act was a grant in present of lands to be thereafter identified. The railroad company became at once vested with a right of property in these lands of which they can only be deprived by a proceeding taken directly for that purpose. If it were made to appear that the right of way had been obtained by fraud, a bill would doubtless lie by the United States for the cancellation and annulment of an approval thus obtained." In M., K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Cook, 163 U. S. 495, 16 Sup. Ct. 1095, 41 L. Ed. 489, the grant was as follows: "That the right of way through the public lands be and the same is hereby granted to said Pacific Railway Company, Southern Branch, its successors, and assigns, for the construction of a railroad as proposed. Said way is granted to said railroad to the extent of 100 feet in width on each side of said road where it may pass through the public domain," etc. In construing said section, the court said: "The same conclusion necessarily followed in respect to the right of way. The grant of the lands and the grant of the right of way were alike grants in present, and stood on the same footing so that before the definite location all persons acquiring any portion of the public lands after the passage of the act took the same subject to the right of way for the proposed road. The easement and the lands were afloat until by definite location precision was given to the grant and they became permanently fixed." These and other decisions to the same effect seem to us to be conclusive, and, if we are correct in this, the original grantee, Adams, Beatty & Moulton, located their certificate subject to the provisions of this special charter, and their assignee, F. W. Levings, took no greater right, but acquired the land subject to the same burden, and conveyed no greater right than he had to H. B. Sanborn, who on the 29th day of June, 1905, conveyed the land to appellee Stockyards Company. We think we are sustained in our conclusions by Olive v. Sabine & E. T. Ry. Co., 11 Tex. Civ. App. 208, 33 S. W. 139; Texas Central Ry. Co. v. Bowman, 97 Tex. 417, 79 S. W. 295; McLucas v. St. J., etc., Ry., 67 Neb. 603, 93 N. W. 923, 97 N. W. 312, 2 Ann. Cas. 715; Churchill v. Choctaw Ry., 4 Okl. 462, 46 Pac. 506; Flint, etc., P. M. Ry. v. Gordon, 41 Mich. 420, 2 N. W. 648, and other cases cited therein.

[2] We believe the weight of authority to be that, if the grant rests upon a condition such as that contained in section 15 of appellant's charter, it is a condition subsequent, and that the failure to perform a condition subsequent does not operate as a revocation of the grant, but merely authorizes the state to take advantage of it and forfeit it by judicial proceedings or by some positive act of the Legislature, resuming title to the land. Utah, etc., R. R. Co. v. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 110 Fed. 879; San Pedro v. S. P. Ry. Co., 101 Cal. 333, 35 Pac. 993; C. P. Ry. Co. v. Dyer, 1 Sawy. 641, Fed. Cas. No. 2,552; 32 Cyc. 989 (Ill.); 26 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of L. 436 et seq.

[3] Appellant's third assignment of error raises the question as to whether or not its acceptance of a deed from H. B. Sanborn in 1893, conveying to it a strip of land 100 feet wide out of section 137, creates an estoppel against its right to maintain this suit for the full 200 feet in width under its grant from the state. The case of Bybee v. O. & C. Railway Co., 139 U. S. 663, 11 Sup. Ct. 641, 35 L. Ed. 305, is in point, and seems to us to be conclusive of this issue. There the grant to the railway company was for alternate sections to the amount of 20 sections per mile, but it also gave a right of way through public lands to the extent of 100 feet in width on each side of the road. The date of this grant was July 25, 1866, and its line of road was not completed until July 1, 1880. In the interim, the plaintiff, Bybee, under the act of Congress July 28, 1866, settled on the land over which the right of way in controversy was afterwards claimed, and acquired a legal claim under said act, the date of his occupation being 1879, and before the railroad company had located its right of way across his particular section or in any manner indicated an intention to build across it. When in the construction of the road his land was reached, the railway company paid him $250 for right of way across it, and agreed that the road should not damage any of the ditches belonging to plaintiff on said land. After the construction of the road, Bybee filed suit to recover damages because of alleged injuries to one of his ditches, and the court held that the company was not only not estopped by taking the deed from Bybee, but that it obtained nothing by reason of such deed because it already had superior title to its right of way, and in disposing of the issue used this language: "With regard to the question of estoppel the complainant alleges that the defendant went into possession of that portion of the plaintiff's ditch across which its road was constructed, under a deed from plaintiff and his tenant in common for a consideration of $250 paid, and assented to the condition therein contained against impairing or destroying said ditch, the only right conveyed being a license 'to enter on said ditch and construct and operate its road over the same' upon such condition. The contention of the plaintiff is that in receiving this deed and entering into possession the relation of landlord and tenant was created between them, and not that of vendor and vendee, so far as the doctrine of estoppel is concerned. But as the deed was the conveyance of a perpetual right for a solid consideration therein expressed, and there was no covenant for the payment of any rent, nor for redelivery of possession, we think it should be regarded as creating the relation of grantor and grantee between the parties thereto. We have already found that the title of the company to its right of way upon the location of its route related back to the date of the act, and hence, when it took possession of the land in question, plaintiff had no title thereto which he could set up against the company. Had the defendant not accepted the deed from the plaintiff, it might, under our ruling upon the first point, have treated him as a trespasser. The real question then is whether the defendant is placed in a worse position by having accepted the deed from a party who had no title to the premises he assumed to convey; the defendant having taken the conveyance under a mistaken view of the law applicable to the case. It is conceded that as a general principle the grantee in deed of conveyance is not estopped to deny the title of his grantor, and, unless this case be an exception to this rule, it will necessitate an affirmance of this judgment. The rule was first applied by this court in the case of Blight v. Rochester, 20 U. S. (7 Wheat.) 535, 5 L. Ed. 516, in favor of the grantee, who was permitted to show that the person from whom he derived title was an alien, and, under the laws then existing, incapable of transmitting by inheritance the title to lands in this country. In Merryman v. Bourne, 76 U. S. (9 Wall.) 595, 19 L. Ed. 683, it was stated that the vendee 'holds adversely to all the world, and has the same right to deny the title of his vendor as the title of any other party,' and in Robertson v. Pickrell, 109 U. S. 608 [3 Sup. Ct. 407, 27 L. Ed. 1049], it was held in an elaborate opinion by Mr. Justice Field that defendants, who held under a deed of a life estate, were not estopped from setting up a superior title. Cases in the state courts to the same effect are Comstock v. Smith, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 116 [23 Am. Dec. 670], Osterhout v. Shoemaker, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 513, Clee v. Seaman, 21 Mich. 287, and Sparrow v. Kingman, 1 N. Y. 242." And again the court uses this language: "But the consequences of treating this case as an exception to the general rule are somewhat serious. If, as we hold, the defendant had the prior right to this land, it was under no obligation to treat with the plaintiff or pay him for the disturbance of his possession, which was unlawful as against the Company. Has it by this deed disqualified itself forever from asserting the right that it would have possessed had it not done this? We think not. Assuming, as some of the cases indicate, that, before disputing the title of his grantor, the grantee is bound to surrender his possession taken under the deed, such requirement is obviously inapplicable to a case like this, where the only possession consists in the disturbance of a water right or ditch claimed by the plaintiff by the construction of the road across such ditch. It could only be restored by the destruction of the road and the rebuilding of the ditch; in other words, by the surrender of possession under the deed, and a repudiation of the entire transaction, when it is admitted that the defendant could set up its prior title and proceed against the plaintiff as a trespasser. But this would be a useless and expensive formality; and we think the rule that forbids a tenant from disputing his landlord's title without first surrendering his possession has no application to a case like this. It may be said in general that the doctrine of estoppel exists only where there is an obligation to restore the possession of the land upon certain contingencies, such, for instance, as exist between landlord and tenant, or mortgagor and mortgagee. In such cases the occupant is considered to have pledged his faith to return the possession of the land which he occupies, and will not be permitted to do anything to impair the title of him from whom he has received it. 8 Washb. Real Property, 98; Gardner v. Greene, 5 R. I. 104; Osterhout v. Shoemaker, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 513. In this case the defendant not only did not agree to resurrender possession to the plaintiff, but it accepted the deed with this covenant or condition for which it received no consideration, and we do not consider it a breach of good faith upon the part of the defendant to set up this fact, nor ought it to be put in a worse position by having accepted this deed and paid $250 therefor, than it would have occupied had it refused altogether to treat with the plaintiff. The deed was evidently delivered and received by these parties under a misapprehension of their legal rights, and it would be manifestly unjust to hold the defendant forever estopped from asserting the invalidity of the covenant into which it had inadvertently entered."

[4] What has been heretofore said in effect disposes of all of appellant's assignments of error necessary to be considered in deciding the case, except the questions of estoppel and adverse possession. About 15 years prior to the institution of this suit one Bolton, an employé of Sanborn, constructed a fence parallel with appellant's line of railway 50 feet north of the center of the track, which remained there from the time of its construction until the construction of the stock pens and stockyards. Oc-

June 29, 1905, Sanborn conveyed a part of section 137, including the land in controversy, to the Western Stockyards Company, naming as the southern boundary line appellant's right of way. On the 6th day of February, 1909, the Western Stockyards Company conveyed to the Panhandle Packing Company a strip of land 65 feet north of and parallel with the center line of appellant's road. On the 21st day of January, 1905, appellant, acting through its vice president and general manager, entered into a contract with O. H. Nelson for the construction of the stock pens now owned by the Western Stockyards Company. Section 1 of the contract provides that "Nelson, his successors and assigns, shall within ninety days from and after the execution and delivery of these presents, build and maintain a thoroughly up to date stockyard and pens, with necessary driveways and approaches, suitable and adapted for receiving, feeding, watering, transferring, loading, unloading and reloading cattle, horses and other live stock, located according to attached blue print, marked 'Exhibit A' and made a part of this contract." The contract was also executed by the Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railway Company, acting through S. B. Hovey, its vice president and general superintendent, the Southern Kansas Railway Company, and the Pecos & Northern Texas Railway Company, both acting through their vice president and general manager, Avery Turner; the purpose of the contract, as expressed, being to establish such improvements at Amarillo for the mutual benefit, convenience, and use of the parties thereto. Thereafter, on the 10th day of July, 1905, by agreement of all parties, the contract was assigned to the Western Stockyards Company by the said Nelson. Again, on the 24th day of March, 1906, by mutual agreement, the life of the original contract was extended from 10 to 20 years. Section 8 of the original contract is as follows: "Said party of the first part [O. H. Nelson] further agrees to furnish sufficient ground and right of way for construction of necessary tracks for delivering and taking stock from such stockyards and pens and for other purposes in connection with operating such stockyards, such grounds and right of way to be furnished without cost to said railway companies, and the title to said railway tracks shall remain with the said railway companies and at the expiration or termination of this contract, if they decide the tracks are no longer required, they may enter in on said right of way and remove said tracks and all material belonging to said railway companies." The blue print and map referred to above and designated as "Exhibit A," and by the terms of the contract made a part thereof shows appellant's right of way to have been 18 varas wide on each side of its track, and does not include the land in controversy. The contract does not otherwise describe the land. The rule is that when a description of land, as part of a tract or survey, is general, it will be controlled by boundaries indicated on a plot or map. Cullers v. Platt, 81 Tex. 263, 16 S. W. 1003; Bogges v. Allen, 56 S. W. 195. While we do not agree with appellee that the act of appellant in accepting from Sanborn a deed to a right of way 100 feet in width across section 137 is an estoppel, the execution of this contract, with the provisions quoted above, in our opinion, is an unequivocal admission that its claim of right of way extended only 50 feet upon each side of the center of its track. A party is bound to have knowledge of its boundaries. The testimony further shows that in pursuance of the stockyards agreement Nelson and his assigns have at great expense purchased other property adjacent to the land in question, constructed extensive and expensive stockyards, packing house, constructed of brick, with its necessary machinery, all at an expense of many thousands of dollars. Sixteen feet of the packing house building is on the land in controversy, and, in addition, there are two tracks, the one entering into the property for loading and unloading produce of the packing company, together with another parallel, which have been paid for by appellees.

[5] These facts, together with the adverse possession for 15 years of Sanborn and appellees, in our opinion, make appellees' defense of estoppel in pais and limitation complete. The testimony upon these issues is practically undisputed, from which we conclude that the court did not err in peremptorily instructing a verdict for appellees. Texas, etc., Railroad Co. v. Maynard, 51 S. W. 255; Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Ely, 25 Wash. 384, 65 Pac. 555, 54 L. R. A. 526, 87 Am. St. Rep. 766.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

SMITH v. JORDAN.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. San Antonio. Dec. 11, 1912.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 635*)—RECORD—DISMISSAL.

An appeal from the refusal of a motion to retax costs will be dismissed, where the record does not show the pleadings and final judgment, the amount involved, or where the case originated, and the transcript contains only the motion to retax, judgment on the motion, assignments of error, and appeal bond.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error. Cent. Dig. §§ 2285, 2776-2782; Dec. Dig. § 635.*]

Appeal from Waller County Court; J. D. Harvey, Judge.

Action between Charley Smith and A. J. Jordan. From a refusal to retax costs, Smith appeals. Appeal dismissed.

W. J. Poole, of Hempstead, for appellant.

TALIAFERRO, J. This appeal arises upon the action of the trial court in refusing a motion to retax the costs. The record contains nothing to show that this court has jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. The pleadings and final judgment are not shown, and it cannot be ascertained from the record that this court would even have had jurisdiction of the original case. The transcript contains only the motion to retax, the judgment upon the motion, the assignments of error, and the appeal bond. None of the matters contained in the record show the amount involved in the litigation, nor whether the case originated in the county court or justice's court.

In this condition of the record, this court cannot assume jurisdiction, and the appeal is therefore dismissed.

McDOEL v. JORDAN et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Dallas.
Dec. 7, 1912.)

1. WILLS (§ 433*)—PROBATE—EFFECT—EVIDENCE OF TITLE.

Where title to land is claimed by a devise, evidence of the will of the alleged decedent and the proceeding of the county court admitting it to probate is admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 924-936; Dec. Dig. § 433.*]

2. DEATH (§ 4*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—"WAR"—"REPORT."

In an action to recover land which plaintiff claimed by devise, where there was testimony that the witness knew the testator in 1862 and understood that he died during the war, such being the report, the word "war" must be understood as the war between the states, and "report" as meaning common rumor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 5, 6; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6106-6107; vol. 8, pp. 7387-7388.]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 314*)—HEARSAY.

After the lapse of a long period of time, death may be proven by hearsay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1168-1173; Dec. Dig. § 314.*]

4. NAMES (§ 18*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Where the name of the grantee of a patent was identical with that of the signer of a will who was named in probate proceedings, the identity of names will, in the absence of other evidence, sufficiently establish the fact that the testator was the grantee named in the patent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Names, Cent. Dig. § 17; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where there was sufficient competent evidence to support a finding of the trial court, the fact that incompetent evidence was introduced does not constitute reversible error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4153-4160, 4166; Dec. Dig. § 1051.*]

Appeal from District Court, Freestone County; H. B. Daviss, Judge.

Action by Ellen Jordan and others against

C. J. McDoel. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. R. Boyd, of Teague, for appellant. W. W. Ballew, of Corsicana, and R. L. Williford and T. H. Bonner, both of Fairfield, for appellees.

RASBURY, J. Upon appropriate pleading in trespass to try title, appellees Ellen Jordan and her husband, Thomas A. Jordan, recovered judgment in the trial court against appellant, C. J. McDoel, for the title and possession of 480 acres of land out of the Thomas B. Wylie survey in Freestone county, Tex. Appellant McDoel recovered judgment against his grantor William H. Leuhrmann, who was a party to the suit, for $2,551.20, the amount paid in good faith for the land. There is no appeal by Leuhrmann, nor does he file brief or other appearance.

Appellees in proof of their title introduced in evidence (1) certified copy of patent to the land in controversy from the state to A. M. Dunn, assignee of Thomas S. Wylie; (2) application of Thomas A. Jordan and E. C. Jordan (appellees) to the chief justice of Navarro county to probate the will of Alexander M. Dunn, alleging his death in 1863, and that he left a will with the county clerk of Navarro county; (3) the will of A. M. Dunn by which he devised all his estate to Miss Ellen Wilder, including "all lands and tenements, farms, etc., more fully described in patents, deeds, and bonds, now in my possession * * * and lying subject to my order in the General Land Office; (4) proof of the execution of the will made before the county court by Hugh Ingram, showing the execution of same by A. M. Dunn on April 3, 1862, in the manner and form provided by law; (5) the decree of the county court admitting the will to probate and appointing the applicants administrators of the estate with the will annexed, and appointing appraisers, etc.; (6) appellee Ellen Jordan, who testified that she was 67 years of age and the wife of Thomas A. Jordan, and that her maiden name was Wilder; that she lived from her birth in Alabama until 17 years of age, when she came to Texas and lived in Freestone county until she reached the age of 20 years, when she married and went to Henderson county, Tex.; after a residence of about six years in Henderson county she removed to Navarro county and resided there about seven years, when she and her husband left and have lived at various places since and now reside in Yuma, Ariz.; that she first learned that she had an interest in the land in controversy through her counsel by letter; that she claims title to the land through the will made by her uncle Alexander M. Dunn, who signed his name to the will as A. M. Dunn, and bequeathed her the same; that she has no deed to the land; (7) deposition of Preston Owen who testified that he is 66 years old and has resided at Kerens, Navarro county, since 1852; that he was acquainted with A. M. Dunn, who formerly resided in Navarro county, Tex.; that he knew Dunn about 1862 and understood that he died during the war; that he (Dunn) was a grown man when he knew him; when asked on cross-examination, "Do you know, as a matter of fact, that A. M. Dunn is dead?" the witness answered that the report was that he died during the war; that he knew Miss Ellen Wilder, does not know where she lived, (but) she was with A. M. Dunn, and his understanding is she is Dunn's niece; that she married T. A. Jordan and several years after the war they lived near Kerens, but subsequently moved away. The foregoing is, in substance, all the testimony of the appellees shown by the record. The appellant offered, and there was admitted in testimony (1) general warranty deed to the land in controversy from R. W. Compton, T. R. Watson, J. B. Watson, and John Riley to Wm. H. Leuhrmann, dated November 14, 1904, and filed for record April 12, 1905, and properly recorded, the consideration being $1,300; (2) deed from Leuhrmann et ux. to appellant for same land for consideration of $1,920, properly acknowledged, filed, and recorded.

[1] Appellant by his first assignment of error contends that the court erred in overruling his demurrer to the sufficiency of the testimony offered by appellees and in refusing to render judgment for appellant. Under this assignment, the proposition is asserted that an application for and grant of administration is not evidence of death of alleged decedent in a collateral inquiry. In explanation of this proposition, it may be said that the assignment points out, in substance, all the evidence offered to prove the death of A. M. Dunn, under whose will appellees claim title, which consists in part of the proceedings had in the county court, by which the will of A. M. Dunn was admitted to probate. Conceding that the proposition states a correct principle of law, and waiving the point that there may be a marked difference in the admissibility of proceedings in administration to prove the death of a decedent, and those by which a last will and testament are admitted to probate to prove the same fact, it seems clear to us that the proceedings complained of were clearly admissible as muniments of appellees' title to the land. Wills, and the proceedings of the county court admitting them to probate, form necessary and important links in the chain of many land titles, and it cannot be successfully maintained that they are inadmissible for that purpose. Whitman v. Haywood, 77 Tex. 558, 14 S. W. 166. The case cited was a suit to establish boundary lines, and the plaintiff offered the will of Thomas Baren, through whom he claimed title to the land, with the order of the county court admitting the same to probate, which was objected to in the trial court and assigned as error in the Supreme Court, which latter tribunal held that all that was necessary to make the same admissible for such purpose was to show that the order probating the will was made by a court having jurisdiction to do so. These proceedings were also admissible to prove appellees' title, because they were facts relevant to the issue to be determined. In no other way could title to the land be shown by appellees. Similarly one who seeks to deraign title through sale under execution may and must show that a judgment was rendered which authorized the execution under which he purchased to issue. McCamant v. Roberts, 66 Tex. 262, 1 S. W. 260. Hence we conclude that, for the reasons stated, the proceedings were clearly admissible, and that the court did not err in that respect.

[2, 3] But appellant, by sufficient assignment and appropriate proposition, asserts that, since the court could not look to the probate proceedings as establishing Dunn's death, the remaining evidence was insufficient because it did not show by a preponderance of competent testimony that A. M. Dunn, under whose will appellees claim title, was in fact dead. The evidence adduced to establish the death of Dunn consisted of the testimony of Preston Owen, who said he knew Dunn in 1862, when he resided in Navarro county, and that he understood that he died during the "war," and on cross-examination he said Dunn was a grown man when he knew him, and that the "report" was that he died during the "war." This was all the testimony adduced upon the trial relative to the death of Dunn, and as a consequence is a preponderance of the evidence. Appellant, however, says it is not competent. We do not think we improperly extend the rules of evidence and legal construction in concluding that Preston Owen meant the war between the states when he speaks of Dunn dying during the "war," especially since he puts his last knowledge of him at 1862. Those who participated in that stirring event, as well as those who have come since, or were too young to engage in its heroic contests, know that in everyday language it is described as "the war," and that common knowledge would lead us to understand that Preston Owen meant the war between the states when he adopted the term commonly used to describe same. Then if we can safely assume, as we are persuaded we may, that the witness intended to say that he died during that period, does the further statement that he "understood" that Dunn died and that the "report" was that he died during that period furnish sufficient evidence to support the conclusion of the trial judge that he is dead? "Report," applied to the testimony of Preston Owen, means "an account brought back; a tale carried; a story circulated; hence rumor or common fame"— in short, hearsay. "Understood" means "implied, assumed, or apprehended." In other words, the effect of Preston Owen's testimony is that rumor and common fame, or "the account brought back" at that period, had it that Dunn died during the war between the states. The right to prove death by hearsay after the lapse of such a long period of time is well settled, and citation of authorities is unnecessary. Counsel does not deny the rule, but attacks the evidence adduced as not being even hearsay. We have indicated why we think the proof as made is sufficient and competent, particularly so when the record fails to show any evidence of a contrary nature.

[4] We think there is no merit in appellant's contention that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment of the court that the A. M. Dunn named in the probate proceedings, and who signed the will, was the same A. M. Dunn named in the patent offered in evidence by appellees. The names are identical, and, in the absence of any other evidence, that fact is sufficient to support the conclusion of the trial court that they are the same person.

[5] Nor do we think that the fact that the trial court considered the probate proceedings as proof of the death of A. M. Dunn material, if there can be found in the record sufficient other facts to sustain his conclusions, and we have indicated at another place in this opinion that the evidence of Preston Owen would alone be sufficient to support such a finding.

Finding no reversible error in the record, the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

CAMPBELL v. ELLIOTT.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Ft. Worth. Oct. 26, 1912. Rehearing Denied Nov. 23, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1097*)—LAW OF THE CASE.

The decision of the court on appeal conclusively settles the questions determined thereby, and they will not be considered on a subsequent appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4358-4368, 4427; Dec. Dig. § 1097.*]

2. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 177*)—ACQUISITION—FRAUD—PARTY ENTITLED TO COMPLAIN.

The state alone may take advantage of fraud in transactions for the acquisition of its lands, where the rights of an individual do not antedate such fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 576-578; Dec. Dig. § 177.*]

3. CONTINUANCE (§ 26*)—ABSENCE OF WITNESSES—DILIGENCE.

A continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness is properly denied, where no diligence is shown to procure the testimony of the witness for the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Continuance, Cent. Dig. §§ 74-93; Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

Error from District Court, Nolan County; James L. Shepherd, Judge.

Action by J. A. Elliott against I. C. Morris, continued after the death of defendant by W. A. Campbell, administrator. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

J. M. Wagstaff, of Abilene, and J. F. Eldson, of Sweetwater, for plaintiff in error. Orrick & Terrell, of Ft. Worth, for defendant in error.

SPEER, J. This case has been twice before appealed to the Court of Civil Appeals; the reports of those appeals being found in 43 Tex. Civ. App. 482, 98 S. W. 221, and 49 Tex. Civ. App. 527, 121 S. W. 209, respectively. On the last trial the plaintiff, Elliott, recovered judgment for the land in controversy and W. A. Campbell, administrator of I. C. Morris, now deceased, has perfected this writ of error.

A preliminary question will be first disposed of, and the prayer of defendant in error to file a supplemental record will be granted, and the cost of such supplemental record will be taxed against defendant in error, under rule 11 (142 S. W. xi), for the government of the Courts of Civil Appeals.

[1] We decline to go into a consideration of the questions raised by the first, second, and third assignments concerning the validity of the deed under which defendant in error claims, since all these questions were determined by us on the first appeal.

[2] The principal contention on this appeal appears to be that there was a showing of fraud on the part of W. C. Logan at the time he filed on the land in controversy, in that he was not the owner of section 38, his parent section, at the time he swore he was, and that, Morris having in all respects complied with the law as to settlement, etc., his administrator should recover in this case; but it is now too well settled to admit of discussion that only the state can take advantage of fraud in transactions for the acquisition of land from it, where the rights of the complaining party do not antedate such fraud. Logan v. Curry, 95 Tex. 664, 69 S. W. 129.

The issue of estoppel by judgment in the case of Morris v. Logan was also decided against plaintiff in error on the last appeal by the Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth District, and should not, for that reason, be again discussed. But besides the evidence is not, as plaintiff in error contends, undisputed that defendant in error employed counsel to represent Logan in that suit, or otherwise prosecuted the suit in the name of W. C. Logan. On the contrary, defendant in error testifies differently.

[3] The motion for continuance was not improperly overruled, since no diligence whatever was shown in the effort to procure the testimony of W. C. Logan, although this case has been dragging its weary way through the courts for many years, and this witness, most of all persons, was calculated to know the facts helpful to plaintiff in error, if any existed. The change of counsel made necessary by the illness of plaintiff in error's leading counsel appears not to have been prejudicial to him, since the case was tried upon the previous record, and there is nothing to indicate that there has been left undone anything that would further the interest of plaintiff in error.

There is no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

RIDER et al. v. RADFORD.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Ft. Worth. May 18, 1912. Writ of Error Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 16, 1912.)

1. TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE (§ 40*)—EVIDENCE OF PRIOR DEEDS.

Where plaintiff deraigned title through the W. Mercantile Company, he was entitled to introduce a deed from S. to B. & Co., and from the latter to the mercantile company in proof of his title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass to Try Title, Cent. Dig. §§ 55-61; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

2. TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE (§ 40*)—EVIDENCE.

Where plaintiff claimed title through a conveyance by a mercantile company to the R. Grocery Company, and it was undisputed that at the time of the conveyance defendant was a member of the mercantile company, and as such a party to the conveyance, the consideration for which was a credit of $2,500 on the indebtedness of the mercantile company to the grantee, the fact that the credit was not entered on the books of the grantee until after defendant had ceased to be a member of the mercantile company was immaterial; the rights of the parties being measured by the facts as they existed at the time of the conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass to Try Title, Cent. Dig. §§ 55-61; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 842*)—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIONS OF LAW—CONSTRUCTION.

A finding that a conveyance of the land in controversy from a grantor company to a grocery company was a bona fide sale of the property and not mere security was one of fact, or a mixed question of law and fact, and not a conclusion of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3316-3330; Dec. Dig. § 342.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 308*)—PURCHASE-MONEY NOTES—ENFORCEMENT.

Where a conveyance of land by a grantor company to a grocery company, in consideration of a credit on an indebtedness to the grantee, was a bona fide sale, and full title passed by a conveyance by the grocery company to defendant, notes executed for a part of the consideration of the latter sale were enforceable, either by the grocery company or by plaintiff, without reference to whether he had notice of defendants' occupancy of the premises.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 877-899; Dec. Dig. § 308.*]

Appeal from District Court, Taylor County; Thos. L. Blanton, Judge.

Action by J. M. Radford against A. T. Rider and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Ben L. Cox, of Abilene, and A. K. Doss, of Winters, for appellants. Kirby & Davidson, of Abilene, and Theodore Mack, of Ft. Worth, for appellee.

CONNER, C. J. [1] Inasmuch as appellee deraigned title through the Winters Mercantile Company, we think he was properly permitted to introduce the deed from Mrs. Lizzie Stewart to Brashear & Co. and from the latter company to the Winters Mercantile Company. Indeed, it is only through these conveyances that appellants themselves could show any title whatever other than that of the mere possession of the land claimed by them as a homestead. Appellants' first and second assignments of error must therefore be overruled.

[2] If in truth the consideration for the conveyance from the Winters Mercantile Company to the J. M. Radford Grocery Company was a credit of $2,500 on the indebtedness of the former company, the fact that the entry of such credit on the books of the latter company was after and not before appellant A. T. Rider had ceased to become a member of the Winters Mercantile Company is wholly immaterial. The rights of the parties are to be measured by the facts as they existed at the time of the conveyance to the J. M. Radford Grocery Company, and it is undisputed that appellant at this time was a member of the mercantile company and as such was a party to the conveyance under which appellee claims. If the conveyance was made upon the consideration stated, it must be held to be operative whether any credit was ever entered upon the books. Appellants' third assignment is therefore overruled.

[3] The court's fourth finding to the effect that the conveyance from the Winters Mercantile Company to the J. M. Radford Grocery Company was a bona fide sale of the property therein described, as contradistinguished from a mere security, is clearly a finding of fact rather than one of law, or at least a finding upon a mixed question of law and fact, and the appellants' fourth assignment of error is accordingly overruled. Nor do we think the appellants' fifth assignment can be sustained. While the several transactions involved in this controversy seem to have been closely contemporaneous, yet the witness Booth distinctly testified to the effect that the deed from the Winters Mercantile Company to the J. M. Radford Grocery Company represented an independent and distinct transaction from that of the other proceedings, and was intended as a bona fide sale of the property, and not as a method of obtaining security for the $2,500 recited in the deed as the consideration. The witness who testified appeared to be disinterested at the time of the trial, and the court having found in accordance with the testimony so stated, we cannot say that the finding is without evidence in its support. The fifth assignment must accordingly be overruled.

[4] The court's findings to the effect that the J. M. Radford Grocery Company was without knowledge of the occupancy of the premises in controversy are, in our view of the case, wholly immaterial. If the conveyance of the premises to the J. M. Radford Grocery Company was a bona fide sale, as the witness Booth testified it was and as the court finds, then full title passed, and the conveyance by the J. M. Radford Grocery Company to appellants was fully authorized, and, if so, the notes sued upon in this suit were enforceable either by the J. M. Radford Grocery Company or by appellee, irrespective of the question of whether appellee had or had not knowledge of appellants' occupancy of the premises. The seventh and eighth assignments are accordingly overruled.

The conclusions above noted render immaterial questions presented under other assignments. All will therefore be overruled, the court's findings of fact adopted, and the judgment affirmed.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS

BALLEW v. STATE. (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Dec. 4, 1912.) Appeal from Criminal District Court, Dallas County; Robt. B. Seay, Judge. S. L. Ballew was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed. C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HARPER, J. Appellant was indicted, prosecuted, and convicted of the offense of robbery, and his punishment assessed at 20 years' confinement in the state penitentiary. There is neither a statement of facts nor bills of exception accompanying the record, and, the record being in this condition, there is no ground in the motion for a new trial we can consider. The judgment is affirmed.

CLARK v. STATE. (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Dec. 11, 1912.) Appeal from Criminal District Court, Dallas County; Barry Miller, Judge. Pinkney Clark was convicted of burglary, and appeals. Affirmed. C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

PRENDERGAST, J. The appellant, by proper indictment and correct charge, was convicted of burglary. There is neither statement of facts nor bills of exceptions. The matters attempted to be raised in the motion for new trial cannot be considered without a statement of facts. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

COLEMAN v. STATE. (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Dec. 4, 1912.) Appeal from District Court, Galveston County; Robt. G. Street, Acting Judge. F. Coleman was convicted of robbery with firearms, and he appeals. Affirmed. C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of robbery with firearms, and given five years in the penitentiary. The record does not contain a statement of facts nor bills of exception. The indictment was attacked, but under recent decisions by this court it is sufficient. As the record is presented, there is no reversible error, and the judgment is affirmed.

DAVIS v. STATE. (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Dec. 11, 1912.) Appeal from Criminal District Court, Dallas County; Barry Miller, Judge. Bob Davis was convicted, and appeals. Affirmed. C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of murder in the second degree; his punishment being assessed at 25 years' confinement in the penitentiary. The record is before us without a statement of facts or bills of exception. There are quite a number of grounds set out in the motion for new trial. None of these, in the absence of statement of facts and bills of exception, can be intelligently reviewed. We are unable to say that any error was committed, or that there is any merit in any of the contentions, in the absence of the statement of facts. The judgment is affirmed.

NOE v. STATE. (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Dec. 11, 1912.) Appeal from Criminal District Court, Dallas County; Barry Miller, Judge. Claude Noe was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Affirmed. C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

PRENDERGAST, J. The appellant was indicted by proper indictment for burglary, and under a correct charge was convicted. There are neither bills of exceptions nor statement of facts. The question attempted to be raised by the motion for new trial cannot be considered without a statement of facts. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

O'MALLAY v. State. (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Dec. 11, 1912.) Appeal from Criminal District Court, Dallas County; Barry Miller, Judge. John O'Mallay was convicted of burglary, and appeals. Affirmed. C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

PRENDERGAST, J. Under a proper indictment and correct charge appellant was convicted of burglary. There are neither bills of exceptions nor statement of facts. No question is raised by the motion for new trial which can be considered by us without a statement of facts. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

WHITEN v. STATE. (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Dec. 4, 1912.) Appeal from District Court, Harrison County; H. T. Lytleton, Judge. Willie Whiten was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Reversed and dismissed. Beard & Davidson, of Marshall, for appellant. C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of manslaughter; his punishment being assessed at three years' confinement in the penitentiary. This record is in the same condition as that in the case of Woolen v. State, 150 S. W. 1165, and Mayfield v. State, 151 S. W. 30, recently decided. For the reasons for holding the indictment defective in those cases, the indictment herein will also be held unwarranted by law. Therefore, the judgment is reversed and the prosecution ordered dismissed.

HILL v. HILL. (Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 12, 1912.) Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Chancery Branch, Second Division. Action by Bessie R. Hill against W. W. Hill. From a judgment denying relief, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed. Rowan Hardin, of Louisville, for appellant. W. A. McKay, of Louisville, for appellee.

HOBSON, C. J. Dr. W. W. Hill and Miss Bessie Riley were married in June, 1907. They lived together as man and wife until July, 1911, when she left her husband's home, and in a few days thereafter brought this suit against him for divorce on the ground that without fault on her part he had habitually behaved toward her for not less than six months in such a cruel and inhuman manner as to indicate a settled aversion to her and to destroy permanently her peace and happiness. An answer was filed, controverting the allegations of the petition. Voluminous proof was taken, and on final hearing the circuit court dismissed the petition, refusing either to give the wife a divorce or allow alimony. From this judgment she appeals. We have read the record with great care, and are satisfied we ought not to disturb the chancellor's judgment. Neither the husband nor the wife was without fault, and each should in good faith seek a reconciliation with the other. The proof shows they are both excellent people of fine character. He is a successful physician. She is a lady of refinement and culture. Each has the power to make the other happy. We are satisfied from the record that the wife loves her husband, and that he has been more absorbed in his business and less attentive to her than he should have been. They differ in temperament. The trouble between them seems to have grown largely out of the fact that each failed to comprehend the other. They owe it to themselves and to society to follow the teachings of the church to which each belongs, and re-establish the home in which they lived apparently happily when this disturbance arose. Judgment affirmed.

STATE v. CORDIA. (St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 12, 1912.) Appeal from Circuit Court, Washington County; Joseph J. Williams, Judge. Francis Cordia was convicted of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor, and he appeals. Affirmed. M. E. Rhoades, of Potosi, and Byrns & Bean, of De Soto, for appellant. S. G. Nipper and W. A. Cooper, both of Potosi, for the State.

CAULFIELD, J. Defendant was indicted, tried, and on September 3, 1910, convicted for selling intoxicating liquor in less quantity than five gallons; he being a merchant, having a merchant's license, authorizing him to deal in goods, wares, and merchandise, but no dramshop license, and the prosecution being under section 11640 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1909. He appeals to this court, but assigns no error, and does not file a brief in his cause. An examination of the record fails to disclose any error or insufficiency in the indictment or other proceedings or any error or irregularity in the trial justifying a reversal of the judgment. The evidence warrants the conviction, and the instructions fairly present the case to the jury. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

REYNOLDS, P. J., and NORTONI, J., concur.

STATE v. CORDIA. (St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 12, 1912.) Appeal from Circuit Court, Washington County; Joseph J. Williams, Judge. Francis Cordia was convicted of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor, and he appeals. Affirmed. M. E. Rhoades, of Potosi, and Byrns & Bean, of De Soto, for appellant. W. A. Cooper and S. G. Nipper, both of Potosi, for the State.

CAULFIELD, J. Defendant was indicted, tried, and on September 7, 1910, convicted, under section 11640 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1909, for selling intoxicating liquor in less quantity than five gallons; he being a merchant, having a merchant's license authorizing him to deal in goods, wares, and merchandise, but no dramshop license. He appeals to this court, but has assigned no error and filed no brief here. Having examined the record, we find no error, insufficiency, or irregularity in the indictment, trial, or other proceedings, justifying a reversal of the judgment, and find that the evidence warrants the conviction, and the instructions fairly present the case to the jury. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

REYNOLDS, P. J., and NORTONI, J., concur.

STRICKLIN et al. v. MOORE. (Supreme Court of Arkansas. Jan. 20, 1913.) On petition for rehearing. Denied.

For former opinion, see 151 S. W. 1009.

HART, J. In testing the allegations of the complaint on demurrer on the former appeal, the court said that the adverse possession of W. N. Stricklin as tenant by the curtesy, coupled with the adverse possession of his wife, would constitute an investiture of title in the heirs of Mary D. Stricklin, subject to the life tenancy of W. N. Stricklin. The reason is that the estate by curtesy is a mere continuation of the wife's estate, and is in the nature of an estate by descent rather than by purchase. According to the allegations of the complaint, W. N. Stricklin's possession was capable of being referred to a claim of right by curtesy, it having been alleged in the complaint that his wife died in the possession of the lands. It then became a question whether the character of her previous possession, which had not run for the statutory period, could be continued by him. We held, under the allegations of the complaint, that his adverse possession could be tacked to the previous possession of his wife, and that, if the possession was continued for the statutory period, it would create an investiture of title in her heirs, subject to the life estate of W. N. Stricklin.

It is well settled that adverse possession must be continuous, and its continuity must be in the same right. Therefore it was necessary for appellants in this case to show that Mrs. Stricklin was in possession of the land at the time of her death, as well as to show that the possession of W. N. Stricklin after her death was continued in her right. We did not hold, as counsel for appellants seem to think we did, that a husband cannot act as agent for his wife, and cannot take charge of and manage her real estate. We did hold, however, that there was no testimony in the case that would have warranted a jury in finding that W. L. Stricklin was in possession of the lands prior to the death of his wife as her agent, or that he was holding the land for her. On the contrary, we held that the undisputed evidence showed that W. N. Stricklin held possession of the land in his own right prior to the death of his wife, and that, therefore, there could be no previous possession of the wife, to which his possession after her death could be tacked, so as to continue the adverse possession in her right. As we said, the testimony of B. L. Stricklin amounted to no more than a conclusion on his part that his mother was in the possession of the land prior to her death, for he did not testify to any fact or circumstance from which it might be inferred that she was in possession of the land, but only stated his conclusion on the matter. B. L.

Stricklin testified that after his mother died his father told him that the land belonged to Mary D. Stricklin, his wife, and that he was holding the land for her children. This statement, being made after the death of Mary D. Stricklin, is not sufficient to show that she had possession of the land prior to her death.

The declarations of W. N. Stricklin, made after the death of his wife, as to her ownership of the land, are not sufficient to show that she was in possession of the land previous to her death. To so hold would be to adopt the rule that a scintilla of evidence is sufficient to send the case to the jury, and this the court has never done. On the contrary, the court has uniformly held that, where there is no substantial evidence to support a verdict for the plaintiff, it is the duty of the trial court to so declare the law.

The petition for a rehearing will be denied.

I. NATURE AND REQUISITES.(A) Acquisition of Rights by Prescription in General.

§ 4 (Mo.) A grant to trustees of a church in trust for the congregation of the church for the use of the premises as a place of worship is a grant for a charitable use within Rev. St. 1909, § 1888, relating to limitations.—Strother v. Barrow, 151 S. W. 960.

§ 7 (Mo.) Limitations did not begin to run in favor of the parties in possession of public land until the issuance of a patent correctly describing the land.—Marshall v. Hill, 151 S. W. 131.

(E) Duration and Continuity of Possession.

§ 41 (Tex. Civ. App.) A person and his assigns claiming title under a settler and holding adverse possession for 15 years of 100 feet of the 200 feet of land granted to a railroad for a right of way acquired title by adverse possession.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Western Stockyards Co., 151 S. W. 1172.

(F) Hostile Character of Possession.

§ 62 (Ark.) Where a wife never had actual possession of land, the possession of the husband after her death was in his own right, and not as tenant by curtesy; and hence created title by adverse possession in himself as against an outstanding title and not in the heirs of the wife.—Stricklin v. Moore, 151 S. W. 1009.

§ 62 (Mo.) A widow occupying property under her quarantine cannot thereby acquire title as against the heir or remainderman.—Moran v. Stewart, 151 S. W. 439.

By delay during which a widow is permitted to occupy the whole of an estate, the other heirs do not lose their right to apply to the court to assign dower to her; the possession not being hostile.—Id.

§ 64 (Ky.) Possession under an unconditional parol gift of a well-defined body of land for 15 years confers title, but not so if the entry was under a mere expectation of a gift in the future.—Murphy v. Newingham, 151 S. W. 930.

§ 73 (Ky.) A patent, though void because including land previously granted, is color of title, and defines the possession of the patentee claiming to the extent of his boundary.—Bryant v. Strunk, 151 S. W. 881.

§ 80 (Mo.) A quitclaim deed purporting to convey land abutting a private alley, and describing such alley as "known as a private alley," held insufficient as color of title thereto, since it impeaches rather than asserts title.

—Dulce Realty Co. v. Stated Realty Co., 151 S. W. 415.

§ 84 (Mo.) Where defendant had held open and exclusive possession of land in dispute, claiming title, long enough for her possession to ripen into title, it did not affect that result because she may have known the record title was in another.—Cousins v. White, 151 S. W. 737.

§ 85 (Ark.) In ejectment between the heirs of a wife and a purchaser under an execution against the husband, evidence held insufficient to show any such change of possession under a colorable deed from the husband to the wife as gave her title by adverse possession prior to the execution sale.—Stricklin v. Moore, 151 S. W. 1009.

§ 85 (Ky.) Evidence held to sustain a chancellor's finding that plaintiff occupied the land in question by defendant's permission only and not under an unconditional parol gift.—Murphy v. Newingham, 151 S. W. 930.

(G) Payment of Taxes.

§ 87 (Ark.) Act March 18, 1899 (Laws 1899, p. 117), now Kirby's Dig. § 5057, providing that parties paying taxes on uninclosed and unimproved land shall be deemed to be in possession, but that no one can invoke the act unless he and his predecessors shall have made seven payments, three after its enactment, while retroactive, is not so as to persons under disability at its passage, but not under disability when payments began.—Deane v. Moore, 151 S. W. 286.

III. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, TRIAL, AND REVIEW.

§ 116 (Ky.) Where there is evidence of adverse possession by a junior patentee, the court must by its instructions define the extent of possession under the evidence.—Bryant v. Strunk, 151 S. W. 381.

§ 116 (Mo.) In an action for the recovery of land where adverse possession was set up, evidence held to sufficiently show defendant's possession under color of title, so as to authorize an instruction that 10 years possession under color of title would ripen into actual title.—Cousins v. White, 151 S. W. 737.

§ 51 (Mo.App.) Under Rev. St. 1909, § 773, it is not necessary for recovery of damages by one restraining a cow running at large that he give the owner written notice under section 772, when he gives the owner personal notice, though they do not agree on the damages.—Warren v. Cowden, 151 S. W. 501.

Where plaintiff, restraining a cow running at large, proceeds under Rev. St. 1909, § 773, dispensing, under certain circumstances, with necessity of written notice, under section 772, it is immaterial that he gave an insufficient written notice.—Id.

Authorizing recovery by plaintiff in replevin for his cow, restrained, when running at large, by defendant, without plaintiff having deposited the amount which he admitted to be due defendant or without an instruction to render verdict for that amount, if the jury found for plaintiff as to the other issues, was error.—Id.

II. NATURE AND GROUNDS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION.

§ 23 (Mo.) The Supreme Court will determine its jurisdiction of the subject-matter in condemnation proceedings, though no question thereon is raised by counsel.—Springfield S. W. Ry. Co. v. Schweitzer, 151 S. W. 128.

III. DECISIONS REVIEWABLE.(D) Finality of Determination.

§ 71 (Tex.Civ.App.) A proceeding by defendant in replevin to compel the constable to accept a replevy bond is not within Rev. Civ. St. 1911, arts. 4644-4646, relative to appeals from orders granting or refusing temporary injunctions, but is a proceeding by mandamus, independent of the replevin action.—Keasler Lumber Co. v. Clark, 151 S. W. 345.

§ 76 (Tex.Civ.App.) A judgment from which an appeal was taken during the term held a final judgment, and appealable, where the term ended without a change therein or the granting of a new trial.—Robbie v. Upson, 151 S. W. 570.

§ 76 (Tex.Civ.App.) The fact that a judgment was entered nunc pro tunc did not affect its finality.—Snell v. Ham, 151 S. W. 1077.

§ 77 (Mo.) An order appointing commissioners to set off homestead and dower to a widow held merely a preliminary order, and not a final judgment.—Moran v. Stewart, 151 S. W. 439.

§ 78 (Ky.) An order sustaining a demurrer to an amended petition, but making no further disposition of the action, is not a final order, and is not appealable.—Rodes v. Yates, 151 S. W. 359.

§ 78 (Tenn.) A decree overruling a plea in abatement to the jurisdiction is not upon the merits, so as to be final and appealable.—Employers' Indemnity Co. v. Willard, 151 S. W. 1029.

§ 78 (Tex.Civ.App.) An order to preserve property under the control of the court in replevin is interlocutory, and not appealable.—Keasler Lumber Co. v. Clark, 151 S. W. 345.

§ 80 (Tenn.) A final decree, which is appealable, is one that disposes of the entire merits of the case.—Employers' Indemnity Co. v. Willard, 151 S. W. 1029.

§ 80 (Tex.Civ.App.) Judgment, which did not dispose of one defendant's cross-action against his codefendants, held not a final judgment, from which he could appeal.—Hamilton v. D. S. Cage & Co., 151 S. W. 894.

(E) Nature, Scope, and Effect of Decision.

§ 100 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Acts 31st Leg. c. 34, amending Acts 30th Leg. c. 107, authorizing an appeal from an order granting, refusing, or dissolving a temporary injunction, no right of appeal lies from an order refusing to dissolve such an injunction.—Jaynes v. Burch, 151 S. W. 596.

§ 100 (Tex.Civ.App.) Jurisdiction to review an order denying a motion to dissolve or modify a temporary injunction is not given by Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 4644, authorizing appeal from an order granting, refusing or dissolving a temporary injunction.—Welborn v. Collier, 151 S. W. 655.

§ 113 (Ark.) An appeal does not lie from an order setting aside a default judgment as premature.—McPherson v. Consolidated Casualty Co., 151 S. W. 283.

§ 113 (Tex. Civ. App.) Where judgment was entered under a verdict rendered in pursuance of an agreement of the parties that a verdict might be returned by a majority of the jurors on which judgment might be entered, an order made at the same term setting aside the judgment and granting a new trial is not appealable.—Philadelphia Underwriters' Agency of Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. Brown, 151 S. W. 899.

V. PRESENTATION AND RESERVATION IN LOWER COURT OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW.(A) Issues and Questions in Lower Court.

§ 171 (Mo.) Where a proceeding was tried below and heard in the Supreme Court on the theory that it was a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto, it will be decided by the Supreme Court on the same theory.—State ex rel. Kumbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

§ 170 (Mo.) A constitutional question cannot be raised on appeal from the probate court, where no such issue was presented at the trial.—State ex rel. Nolte v. McQuillin, 151 S. W. 444.

§ 171 (Mo.App.) Complainant is bound on appeal by the theory of the cause adopted in his petition and at the trial.—Hight v. American Bakery Co., 151 S. W. 776.

(B) Objections and Motions, and Rulings Thereon.

§ 185 (Ark.) A party who did not object when a chancellor was substituted for the regular chancellor who announced his disqualification but went to trial cannot object on appeal.—Blagg v. Fry, 151 S. W. 699.

§ 187 (Ark.) Where there was no objection to a misjoinder of parties, it will not be considered on appeal.—Burnett v. Turner, 151 S. W. 249.

§ 193 (Ark.) Where there was no objection to an improper joinder of two causes of action, it will not be considered on appeal.—Burnett v. Turner, 151 S. W. 249.

§ 193 (Mo.App.) That a petition does not state a cause of action may be raised for the first time on appeal.—Angel v. City of Portageville, 151 S. W. 192.

§ 195 (Ky.) An objection to the filing of an amended answer cannot be raised on appeal, where there was no objection to its filing below nor exception taken to the order filing it.—Madden v. Meehan, 151 S. W. 681.

§ 195 (Mo.App.) Failure to question in the trial court the validity of an amendment to a special tax bill or to its admission in evidence precludes a consideration of the question on appeal.—Granite Bituminous Paving Co. v. Parkview Realty & Improvement Co., 151 S. W. 486.

§ 198 (Mo.) Error in directions to commissioners appointed to ascertain the value of real estate in a widow's action for dower held not reviewable, where there was no objection below, either at the time of appointment and direction or when the report was approved.—Moran v. Stewart, 151 S. W. 439.

§ 201 (Ark.) An objection not made below to the court's statement as to the effect of plaintiff's affidavit in replevin could not be reviewed.—Jenkins v. Quick, 151 S. W. 1021.

§ 204 (Ky.) A defendant who did not object to the admission of improper testimony may not avail himself of the error on appeal.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Meyers, 151 S. W. 19.

§ 204 (Ky.) A party, who, on the cross-examination of a witness, brings out incompetent testimony, and who does not object or except to it nor move to exclude it, may not complain thereof on appeal.—Andonique v. Carmen, 151 S. W. 921.

§ 216 (Mo.App.) That decedent had incipient epilepsy cannot be relied on as an excuse to negative contributory negligence, where it was abandoned by not being mentioned in the instructions offered by plaintiff.—Brady v. City of St. Joseph, 151 S. W. 234.

§ 216 (Mo.App.) The defect in an instruction on the measure of damages arising from the omission to give the legal elements on which the jury must base a verdict is but a nondirection, and defendant failing to request an instruction on the subject may not complain.—Madden v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 489.

§ 221 (Tex.Civ.App.) Objection that an injunction against a nuisance was too broad cannot be reviewed on appeal, where no steps were taken below to limit the scope of the decree, which conformed to the prayer for relief and the findings.—Nations v. Harris, 151 S. W. 334.

§ 232 (Ark.) Where an objection below to an instruction was properly overruled, an objection on other grounds cannot be urged on appeal.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Williams, 151 S. W. 243.

§ 232 (Ark.) Objection to conclusion of physician from examination of X-ray pictures, when he was not an X-ray expert, held not to assign error from admission of testimony showing a controversy among the physicians as to plaintiff's injuries.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Brogan, 151 S. W. 690.

§ 232 (Mo.App.) An objection, first raised on appeal, that a petition does not state a cause of action does not present for review a merely defective statement of a cause of action.—Angel v. City of Portageville, 151 S. W. 192.

§ 242 (Tex.Civ.App.) The question of plaintiff, suing as administratrix, not having executed a bond as such, and so not having capacity to sue as such, required by Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1265, to be raised by plea verified by affidavit, is waived by defendant, where it failed to have it determined by the trial court and to assign error thereon.—Casey v. Texarkana & Ft. S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 856.

(C) Exceptions.

§ 253 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the record fails to show any exception to plaintiff's petition, the question of the propriety of sustaining an exception thereto cannot be considered on appeal.—Walker v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 1142.

§ 260 (Mo.App.) A ruling admitting evidence not excepted to is not reviewable.—Byrd v. Vanderburgh, 151 S. W. 184.

§ 262 (Mo.App.) Where plaintiff did not except to the giving of a peremptory instruction for defendant, the nonsuit must be held a voluntary one.—Arnold v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 190.

§ 265 (Mo.App.) Unless excepted to, the propriety of taking an application for separate maintenance under advisement and postponing its decision so that the parties may become reconciled cannot be reviewed.—Creasey v. Creasey, 151 S. W. 215.

§ 266 (Mo.) Error in the directions to commissioners appointed to ascertain the value of real estate in a widow's action for dower and damages was not reviewable, where no exceptions were saved to the court's approval of the report of the commissioners.—Moran v. Stewart, 151 S. W. 439.

§ 270 (Mo.App.) An order overruling a motion in arrest of judgment will not be reviewed, in the absence of an exception.—Angel v. City of Portageville, 151 S. W. 192.

§ 272 (Mo.) Parties in a civil case should immediately except to errors of the trial court prejudicing their rights, to enable the court to correct the same.—Moran v. Stewart, 151 S. W. 439.

§ 274 (Mo.) Exceptions to the overruling of objections to commissioners' report held insufficient to present for review error in the approval of the report.—Moran v. Stewart, 151 S. W. 439.

Plaintiff's failure to except to approval of the report of commissioners in dower proceedings held not cured by a motion, made four years later, to set aside such approval, nor by exceptions to the striking of such motion.—Id.

§ 274 (Mo.App.) Where plaintiff did not except to a peremptory instruction for defendant, but took "an involuntary nonsuit with leave to move to set aside," an exception to the overruling of such motion could not relate back to the ruling on the instruction; the nonsuit being in fact voluntary.—Arnold v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 190.

(D) Motions for New Trial.

§ 297 (Mo.App.) An adverse ruling on a motion to affirm the justice's judgment cannot be reviewed in the absence of a motion for new trial or a rehearing.—Silberberg v. Gitenstein, 151 S. W. 983.

§ 301 (Mo.App.) The error in a judgment on a special tax bill declaring that it should draw 8 per cent. interest appears on the face of the record, and is reviewable, though not complained of in the motion for new trial.—Granite Bituminous Paving Co. v. Parkview Realty & Improvement Co., 151 S. W. 479.

§ 301 (Ark.) Objections to instructions and to the admission and exclusion of evidence are waived, where the party objecting fails to preserve exceptions to the rulings by assigning them as a ground in his motion for a new trial.—Thomas v. Jackson, 151 S. W. 521.

§ 305 (Mo.App.) Even where there has been a motion for new trial or a rehearing, the denial thereof is not open to review, unless there has been an exception to the ruling.—Silberberg v. Gitenstein, 151 S. W. 983.

VII. REQUISITES AND PROCEEDINGS FOR TRANSFER OF CAUSE.

(B) Petition or Prayer, Allowance, and Certificate or Affidavit.

§ 359 (Tenn.) Shannon's Code, 4889, authorizing the chancellor to allow an appeal in the cases enumerated therein as a matter of discretion, does not authorize him to allow an appeal from a decree overruling a plea in abatement to his jurisdiction; that not being one of the cases mentioned.—Employers' Indemnity Co. v. Willard, 151 S. W. 1029.

§ 361 (Tex.) A statement merely asking the Supreme Court to take jurisdiction, under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 941, subds. 5, 7, and 8, without pointing out the exact statutory grounds of jurisdiction, did not comply with the rules of the Supreme Court.—Edwards v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas, 151 S. W. 289.

(C) Payment of Fees or Costs, and Bonds or Other Securities.

§ 374 (Tex.Civ.App.) One bringing action in her individual capacity and as administratrix cannot appeal in her individual capacity without giving a bond, but under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1408, does not have to give bond in her capacity as administratrix.—Casey v. Texarkana & Ft. S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 856.

(D) Writ of Error, Citation, or Notice.

§ 417 (Ark.) Under Kirby's Dig. § 1188, an appeal from an order vacating a default judgment and granting a new trial made in the term at which the judgment was rendered does not lie, unless the notice of appeal contains appellant's assent for judgment against him on the affirmance of the order.—McPherson v. Consolidated Casualty Co., 151 S. W. 283.

VIII. EFFECT OF TRANSFER OF CAUSE OR PROCEEDINGS THEREFOR.

(A) Powers and Proceedings of Lower Court.

§ 447 (Ky.) Under Civ. Code Prac. § 747, providing for continuance of an injunction pending an appeal, the terms of the continuance must be first determined by the circuit court, and the party dissatisfied therewith may have the same reviewed by the Court of Appeals or judge thereof in vacation.—Kentucky Coal & Timber Development Co. v. Carroll Hardwood Lumber Co., 151 S. W. 689.

(B) Jurisdiction Acquired by Appellate Court.

§ 456 (Ky.) Where an appeal in an action to restrain the cutting of timber involved difficult questions of law, an injunction dissolved in part by the trial court will be continued pending appeal.—Kentucky Coal & Timber Development Co. v. Carroll Hardwood Lumber Co., 151 S. W. 689.

K. RECORD AND PROCEEDINGS NOT IN RECORD.

(A) Matters to be Shown by Record.

§ 499 (Mo.) The question whether the issues raised by a demurrer were concluded by an adverse ruling on motion to strike cannot be raised on appeal, where the record does not show that it was brought to the attention of the lower court.—Montgomery v. Gahagan, 151 S. W. 453.

§ 500 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where there is no judgment or record entry showing any ruling on an exception to the petition, such ruling cannot be reviewed on appeal, although preserved by a bill of exceptions.—St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Cartwright, 151 S. W. 630.

§ 501 (Mo.App.) Where no exception to the overruling of a motion for new trial appears in the bill of exceptions, review is confined to the record proper.—Angel v. City of Portageville, 51 S. W. 192.

§ 501 (Mo.App.) A motion for judgment on the pleadings can only be reviewed, when there is an exception thereto duly preserved in a bill of exceptions.—Hodson v. McAnerney, 151 S. W. 754.

§ 502 (Mo.App.) Unless an exception to the overruling of a motion for new trial appears of record in the bill of exceptions, all inquiry into the proceedings of the trial is closed to the appellate court; and it can only examine the record proper.—Murphy v. Lorwood Cooperative Co., 151 S. W. 191.

§ 511 (Mo.App.) Where the record proper does not show the filing of the bill of exceptions, the bill cannot be reviewed.—Hodson v. McAnerney, 151 S. W. 754.

(B) Scope and Contents of Record.

§ 518 (Mo.) A motion to strike out pleadings if treated as a pure motion must appear in the bill of exceptions, or the ruling thereon is not reviewable.—Parkyne v. Churchill, 151 S. W. 446.

§ 532 (Mo.App.) The ruling on a motion to affirm the judgment of a justice cannot be reviewed, unless the motion and an exception to the ruling is preserved in the bill of exceptions.—Silberberg v. Gitenstein, 151 S. W. 983.

(C) Necessity of Bill of Exceptions, Case, or Statement of Facts.

§ 544 (Mo.App.) Where there is no bill of exceptions, the court can only ascertain whether the record proper discloses any legal cause for its interference.—Advance Thresher Co. v. Speak, 151 S. W. 235.

The record proper includes the verdict and judgment.—Id.

The rule that all matters contained in the record proper may be examined by an appellate court, though there is no bill of exceptions showing a motion in arrest, as modified, requires such a motion as to immaterial errors; but where the errors are material they will be examined on appeal without such motion, and, if fatal, will entitle appellant to a reversal.—Id.

§ 547 (Tex.Civ.App.) In the absence of a statement of facts, findings by the trial court cannot be reviewed.—Cofield v. Supreme Camp of American Woodmen, 151 S. W. 341.

§ 548 (Tenn.) A demurrer to the evidence need not be preserved by bill of exceptions to review a ruling thereon.—King v. Cox, 151 S. W. 58.

§ 548 (Tex.Civ.App.) An objection to the admission of testimony cannot be reviewed in the absence of a bill of exceptions.—Gamble v. Martin, 151 S. W. 327.

§ 548 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where there is no bill of exceptions showing that testimony mentioned in an assignment of error was excluded, the court's action cannot be reviewed.—Walker v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 1142.

§ 549 (Ky.) Where on appeal instructions given and refused, while copied in the record, were not made a part thereof by bill of exceptions, the reviewing court can only determine whether the pleadings support the verdict.—Madden v. Meehan, 151 S. W. 681.

§ 554 (Tex.Civ.App.) The findings of fact are, in the absence of a statement of facts, conclusive.—Holloway v. Hall, 151 S. W. 895.

(D) Contents, Making, and Settlement of Case or Statement of Facts.

§ 560 (Tex.Civ.App.) A statement of facts covering 59 pages, a large part of which consisted entirely of questions and answers, held a violation of district court rules 72-78 (142 S. W. xxii) and Acts 32d Leg. c. 119, § 6, and was therefore subject to a motion to strike.—Albrecht v. Lignoski, 151 S. W. 886.

§ 564 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Acts 32d Leg. c. 119, § 7, a statement filed more than 30 days after adjournment of court without any order having been entered authorizing the same to be so filed cannot be considered.—Cosfield v. Supreme Camp of American Woodmen, 151 S. W. 341.

(E) Abstracts of Record.

§ 581 (Mo.) Matters in the bill of exceptions will not be reviewed, unless it is shown in the abstract of the record proper that a bill of exceptions was actually filed, as well as signed.—Langstaff v. City of Webster Groves, 151 S. W. 456.

Matters required to be presented in a motion for a new trial will not be reviewed, unless it appears from the abstract of the record entry of the court that such motion was filed and passed on.—Id.

§ 584 (Mo.) An abstract which commingles the record proper and matters of exceptions, so that it cannot be determined whether a motion for new trial was preserved in a bill of exceptions, and which under the caption "abstract of record" contains pleadings and the judgment, is fatally defective, and leaves for review only the record proper.—Parkyne v. Churchill, 151 S. W. 446.

(F) Making, Form, and Requisites of Transcript or Return.

§ 597 (Ky.) Under Civ. Code Prac. § 737, and court rule 27 (149 S. W. viii), relating to transcripts on appeal, the entire deposition of a witness, or the entire pleading, must be brought up, where any part of it is brought up.—Dockins v. Dukes, 151 S. W. 679.

§ 597 (Ky.) On an application to review an order continuing or refusing to continue an injunction pending appeal, the party applying for review must bring to the appellate court a transcript of that part of the record appertaining to the injunction.—Kentucky Coal & Timber Development Co. v. Carroll Hardwood Lumber Co., 151 S. W. 689.

(H) Transmission, Filing, Printing, and Service of Copies.

§ 621 (Tex.Civ.App.) A transcript upon writ of error cannot be filed after the filing of a motion to affirm on certificate; the appeal having been perfected upon the filing of an appeal bond.—Pitts v. Kane, 151 S. W. 336.

§ 621 (Tex.Civ.App.) An appeal from an order granting a temporary injunction cannot be considered, where the transcript was not filed in the Court of Civil Appeals within 15 days from the entry of record.—Jaynes v. Burch, 151 S. W. 596.

(I) Defects, Objections, Amendment, and Correction.

§ 635 (Tex.Civ.App.) An appeal from a refusal to retax costs will be dismissed, where the record contains nothing to show jurisdiction to entertain the appeal.—Smith v. Jordan, 151 S. W. 1177.

§ 639 (Mo.) Where the abstract is proper as to the pleadings and judgment, the appeal will not be dismissed because of defects in the abstract.—Parkyne v. Churchill, 151 S. W. 446.

§ 655 (Tex.Civ.App.) The district court has jurisdiction to correct on motion the record on appeal by striking therefrom conclusions of fact and law not signed and filed within the time allowed by law.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Powell, 151 S. W. 887.

(K) Questions Presented for Review.

§ 671 (Ky.) Where on appeal the record does not contain the evidence, the reviewing court can only determine whether the pleadings support the verdict.—Madden v. Meehan, 151 S. W. 681.

§ 671 (Tex.Civ.App.) In determining whether an application for a continuance was properly overruled, the appellate court can only consider the facts stated in the application, as shown by the trial court's record.—Continental Lumber & Tie Co. v. Wilroy, 151 S. W. 840.

§ 695 (Mo.) Where the testimony of a surveyor who made a survey is meaningless without a plat to which he referred, and the plat is not in the record, the sufficiency of his testimony to support the finding will not be considered.—Strother v. Barrow, 151 S. W. 960.

XI. ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

§ 719 (Tex.) In Rev. Civ. St. 1911, arts. 1607, 1612, requiring that errors at law not "apparent on the face of the record" be presented by timely assignments of error, the phrase quoted refers to such manifest error as when removed destroys the foundation of the judgment.—Oar v. Davis, 151 S. W. 794.

Refusal of Court of Civil Appeals to reverse or reform judgment in partition so as to allow life estate to a defendant who had made no claim for same held not an error of law apparent on the face of the record to which no timely assignment of error would be essential.—Id.

§ 719 (Tex.Civ.App.) The error in allowing an amendment to a pleading is not error apparent of record which must be considered without assignment of error, where the amendment is only made to appear by motion to correct the record.—Gordon v. State, 151 S. W. 867.

§ 719 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Rule 24 for the Courts of Civil Appeals (142 S. W. xii), requiring assignments of error to distinctly specify the grounds of error, an objection to an instruction as to the degree of care due from the defendant carrier toward plaintiff cannot be reviewed in the absence of an assignment thereon; such error not being fundamental.—Walker v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 1142.

§ 728 (Tex.Civ.App.) Error in overruling objections to questions cannot be held prejudicial, where appellant's brief and assignments of error do not show what answers were made.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Vance, 151 S. W. 904.

The exclusion of a question cannot be held prejudicial to appellant where the assignment of error does not show what witness' answer would have been.—Id.

§ 732 (Tex.Civ.App.) An assignment of error that the court erred in denying a new trial for reasons in the bill of exceptions, based on errors in the charge, cannot be considered, because not specifying the grounds of error relied on, as required by Rev. St. 1895, art. 1018, and court rules 24-26 (142 S. W. xii).—Sullivan v. Houston & T. C. R. Co., 151 S. W. 838.

§ 742 (Tex.Civ.App.) An assignment of error, not followed by a statement, will not be considered.—International Order of Twelve Knights & Daughters of Tabor v. Wilson, 151 S. W. 320.

§ 742 (Tex.Civ.App.) A reviewing court under rules for the Courts of Civil Appeals (rule No. 32 [142 S. W. xiii]), relating to briefs, need not consider an assignment of error containing three separate and distinct propositions of law.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Winger, 151 S. W. 586.

§ 742 (Tex.Civ.App.) An assignment of error followed by a proposition which merely refers to propositions found under other assignments of error, in violation of court rules 30, 33 (142 S. W. xii), will not be considered.—Sullivan v. Houston & T. C. R. Co., 151 S. W. 838.

Where the proposition subjoined to an assignment of error complaining of a paragraph of the charge for failing to instruct on matters raised by the evidence does not disclose the evidence, the assignment cannot be considered, in view of court rule 31 (142 S. W. xiii).—Id.

Where the propositions following an assignment of error complaining of the giving of a special requested charge do not point out the alleged errors, and the subjoined statements do not disclose error, the assignment will not be considered.—Id.

§ 742 (Tex.Civ.App.) Appellee's brief, in submitting four "counterpropositions to all of appellant's assignments" of error, violated the Court of Civil Appeals rule.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Southern Kansas Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 850.

§ 742 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where assignments of error are submitted as propositions, and as such they are multifarious, they will not be considered on appeal.—Chambers v. Wyatt, 151 S. W. 864.

§ 742 (Tex.Civ.App.) Rulings on evidence will not be reviewed where appellant's brief fails to disclose the grounds of objection made at the trial.—Lee v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 868.

§ 742 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where an assignment of error only raised the question that there was no evidence to support the verdict, a proposition, if intended to attack the verdict as against the preponderance of the evidence, was not germane to the assignment.—Thompson Bros. Lumber Co. v. Longini, 151 S. W. 888.

§ 742 (Tex.Civ.App.) Error in admitting evidence cannot be reviewed, where there is no showing in the assignments of error that witness gave the objectionable testimony, except certain statements from the motion for a new trial.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Vance, 151 S. W. 904.

The office of a proposition is to specifically present the question of law intended to be covered by the assignment, and the appellate court cannot consider any question not suggested by a proposition if the assignment is not relied on as such, nor need appellee answer such questions.—Id.

§ 742 (Tex.Civ.App.) Assignments of error submitted as propositions, without disclosing the point, as required by Courts of Civil Appeals Rule 30 (142 S. W. xiii), will not be considered.—Anderson v. Crow, 151 S. W. 1080.

An assignment of error, not supported by a proper proposition, but which merely refers to propositions under another assignment, will not be considered.—Id.

§ 742 (Tex.Civ.App.) A proposition under an assignment of error presenting an objection to testimony not raised by the assignment cannot be considered.—Knox v. Robbins, 151 S. W. 1134.

So far as the propositions under an assignment of error to the giving of an instruction state objections not embraced in the assignment of error, they will not be considered.—Id.

Assignments of error cannot be considered when the only statement under them is, "See statement under 15th assignment of error," if that statement refers to a question in no way relating to the questions presented by the particular assignments.—Id.

§ 750 (Tex.Civ.App.) An assignment of error that the verdict was against the preponderance of the evidence did not present the question whether it was excessive.—Freeman v. Morales, 151 S. W. 644.

§ 750 (Tex.Civ.App.) An assignment of error that the petition does not authorize the judgment does not raise the question of the sufficiency of service of process.—First Bank of Springtown v. Hill, 151 S. W. 652.

§ 750 (Tex.Civ.App.) Assignment of error that cause of action was barred by limitations, and there being no evidence to the contrary, the verdict and judgment was against the preponderance of the evidence, held to raise only the question whether the undisputed evidence showed that the cause was barred.—Thompson Bros. Lumber Co. v. Longini, 151 S. W. 888.

§ 750 (Tex.Civ.App.) An assignment of error in refusing a requested charge does not present for review the contention that the request was sufficient to direct the court's attention to the issue desired to be submitted and to require it to submit a correct charge.—Walker v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 1142.

§ 753 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the transcript does not contain a copy of an assignment of errors required by the statute and court rules, the court will only consider fundamental errors apparent upon the record.—Biggs v. Blount, 151 S. W. 1114.

XII. BRIEFS.

§ 756 (Tex.Civ.App.) A brief containing 22½ pages of double-spaced typewritten matter on paper of letter size, which, if single-spaced, would not have contained over 12 pages of letter size, held not to violate Act April 8, 1909 (Laws 31st Leg. [1st Called Sess.] c. 6), or rule 37, as amended October 12, 1912 (see Amendment of Rules, 149 S. W. x), providing that briefs, if written, shall not exceed 15 pages.—Powell v. Stephens, 151 S. W. 833.

§ 757 (Tex.Civ.App.) Assignments of error complaining of the refusal of special charges will not be considered where the charges are not copied in appellant's brief, nor reference made to the page of the record where they can be found.—Armstrong Packing Co. v. Clem, 151 S. W. 576.

§ 759 (Tex.Civ.App.) It is a valid objection to the consideration of an assignment of error that only part of it is copied in the brief.—Knox v. Robbins, 151 S. W. 1134.

§ 773 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where plaintiff in error fails to file brief, and no fundamental error appears, the judgment will be affirmed.—Moon v. Dozier, 151 S. W. 656.

§ 773 (Tex.Civ.App.) The court may dismiss an appeal for want of prosecution without looking into the record where appellant's brief is not filed in time, and there is no agreement waiving the statutory requirement.—Gordon v. State, 151 S. W. 867.

XIII. DISMISSAL, WITHDRAWAL, OR ABANDONMENT.

§ 777 (Mo.) Where parties file a stipulation reciting that the case has been fully settled, and that an order of dismissal at the cost of appellant may be entered, the appeal will be dismissed.—Mathis v. Wabash R. Co., 151 S. W. 421.

§ 781 (Ky.) Where a wife appealed from the judgment in her action for divorce, and, pending her appeal, the defendant died, leaving the widow with rights in his estate on renouncing the provisions of the will, so that only a moot question was presented, the appeal will be dismissed.—Barger v. Barger, 151 S. W. 406.

§ 807 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where a suit was dismissed because the court did not know of stipulation to continue from term to term until both parties were ready for trial, the court in its discretion could reinstate the case.—Southern Pac. Co. v. Higgins Oil & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 1161.

XV. HEARING AND REHEARING.

§ 835 (Mo.) Under Supreme Court rule No. 15 (73 S. W. vi), requiring that the briefs shall contain the points and authorities relied on, respondent cannot for the first time on rehearing assert that the order of the trial court granting it a new trial was correct because the damages were excessive.—Honea v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 119.

§ 835 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Court of Civil Appeals Rule 22 (142 S. W. xii), requiring the parties before submission to see that the record is properly prepared, one may not for purpose of rehearing have considered a certified copy of a judgment not shown by the transcript of the record on the original hearing.—St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Cartwright, 151 S. W. 1004.

 § 835 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Court Rule 22 (142 S. W. xii), relating to transcripts on appeal, a defendant in error on rehearing may not maintain a motion to amend or strike out the transcript.—General Accident, Fire & Life Assur. Corporation v. Lacy, 151 S. W. 1170.

XVI. REVIEW.

(A) Scope and Extent in General.

§ 837 (Tex.) Incompetent testimony received without objection cannot form the basis of findings of facts in an appellate court.—Henry v. Phillips, 151 S. W. 533.

§ 842 (Mo.App.) On appeal from an order granting a new trial in an action stating two causes of action in four counts, on the ground that the jury, by finding for plaintiff on all counts, had allowed a double recovery, the Court of Appeals cannot determine whether the total of the verdict exceeds the damages proved.—Blackmer & Post Pipe Co. v. Mobile & O. R. Co., 151 S. W. 164.

§ 842 (Mo.App.) Objections that the verdict and judgment are for the wrong party, and are contrary to the evidence, urged as grounds for new trial, cannot be reviewed on appeal, as they merely go to the greater weight of the evidence.—Byrd v. Vanderburgh, 151 S. W. 184.

§ 842 (Tex.Civ.App.) The trial court's construction of a deed is not binding on appeal, since it is a conclusion of law rather than a finding of fact.—Morris v. Short, 151 S. W. 633.

§ 842 (Tex.Civ.App.) A finding that a conveyance was a bona fide sale of property and not a mere security held a finding of fact, or on a mixed question of law and fact, and not a conclusion of law, so as to be reviewable.—Rider v. Radford, 151 S. W. 1181.

§ 843 (Mo.) The question whether a court erred in ordering the cancellation of certain contracts will not be determined, where they had in the meantime expired by their own terms.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

§ 843 (Mo.) An assignment to the overruling of a demurrer to the evidence raising questions specified in other assignments will not be considered.—Strother v. Barrow, 151 S. W. 960.

§ 852 (Mo.App.) The denial of a motion to dismiss will be reviewed, on the theory that the motion was a proper mode of raising the question of jurisdiction; both parties and the trial court having proceeded on that theory, and no question in that regard being raised on appeal.—Matthews v. Eby, 151 S. W. 470.

§ 854 (Mo.) Where the trial court in sustaining a motion for a new trial recites an erroneous reason therefor, the order will be reversed, unless appellee points out some other ruling of the trial court which justified the order.—Benjamin v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 91.

§ 854 (Mo.App.) An order granting a new trial will not be reversed, good reasons appearing on the record for granting a new trial, though the reasons assigned by the trial court were unsound.—Warren v. Cowden, 151 S. W. 501.

§ 854 (Mo.App.) The finding of a court sitting without a jury must be upheld on appeal if justified on any ground, where there was no finding of facts and no declarations of law given or refused, and the record does not otherwise indicate the ground on which the court based its finding.—Griggs v. Bridgwater, 151 S. W. 764.

(D) Amendments, Additional Proofs, and Trial of Cause Anew.

§ 889 (Mo.App.) Where a trial court ordered a reply to be amended to meet an objection thereto, it will be regarded on appeal as having been made, whether the verbal changes were made or not.—Locke v. Bowman, 151 S. W. 468.

(E) Presumptions.

§ 907 (Ky.) The court, on appeal, must presume that the trial court decided properly, in the absence of the evidence heard by it.—Dockins v. Dukes, 151 S. W. 679.

§ 907 (Mo.App.) Where the abstract of record is in the short form, and contains a copy of the judgment appealed from and the order allowing the appeal, but contains no reference to an objection made by counsel, the reviewing court will presume in favor of the regularity of the trial court's action and affirm the judgment.—Warner v. Michel, 151 S. W. 159.

§ 907 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where, in determining priorities between two transfers, the judgment stated that one should be paid in full before the other, there being no statement of facts in the record, the judgment will be sustained.—A. A. Fielder Lumber Co. v. Smith, 151 S. W. 605.

§ 909 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where a cause was tried on the second amended petition filed after the running of limitations, in lieu of the first amended petition filed in time, and not in the record, the contention that the cause was barred must be overruled.—Anderson v. Crow, 151 S. W. 1080.

§ 916 (Ky.) On appeal, in testing the sufficiency of an answer to support a verdict for defendant, the facts alleged therein must be taken as true.—Madden v. Meehan, 151 S. W. 681.

§ 917 (Ky.) A demurrer to an amended answer not shown by the record to have been ruled on will be presumed to have been waived by the filing of a reply.—Madden v. Meehan, 151 S. W. 681.

§ 919 (Ky.) A motion to strike a part of an answer, not shown by the record to have been ruled on, will be presumed to have been waived by the filing of a reply.—Madden v. Meehan, 151 S. W. 681.

§ 920 (Tex.Civ.App.) The court, on appeal from a judgment denying a temporary injunction, will presume that the trial judge did not abuse his discretion, in the absence of any statement of facts, bill of exceptions, or findings of fact in the record.—Spence v. Fenchler, 151 S. W. 1004.

§ 924 (Mo.) Where no exception to a reference was saved, the case will be treated as compulsorily referable, in determining the conclusiveness of findings.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

§ 930 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where a general verdict is rendered for defendant in a case involving several defenses, and the evidence sustains one defense, it is immaterial that it does not sustain the others, the presumption being that the verdict was based on the defense sustainable.—Parker v. Naylor, 151 S. W. 1096.

§ 934 (Tex.Civ.App.) In the absence from the record of the pleadings, the court will presume that the pleadings on file authorized the judgment.—Holloway v. Hall, 151 S. W. 895.

§ 934 (Tex.Civ.App.) The evidence should be viewed in the light most favorable to the judgment.—Ralls v. Parish, 151 S. W. 1089.

(F) Discretion of Lower Court.

§ 977 (Mo.App.) The order of the trial court in granting a new trial will not be reversed, unless there is an abuse of discretion.—Allen v. St. Louis S. F. R. Co., 151 S. W. 762.

Appellate courts are less disposed to reverse orders granting new trials than orders refusing them.—Id.

§ 978 (Mo.) Where the trial judge encountered several of the jurors and defendant's claim agent eating at the same table at a tavern, and thereafter the same jurors were seen playing at a game of pool with such agent, the discretion of the trial court in granting a new trial will not be disturbed, though the meeting between the claim agent and the jurors was accidental, and no actual misconduct was shown.—Benjamin v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 91.

(G) Questions of Fact, Verdicts, and Findings.

§ 987 (Mo.) While the appellate court may, in an equity case, review and weigh the evidence, it has no such power of review on appeal in actions at law.—Cousins v. White, 151 S. W. 737.

§ 994 (Mo.App.) The appellate court will not interfere with findings by the court which depend upon the credibility of witnesses.—Byrd v. Vanderburgh, 151 S. W. 184.

§ 999 (Mo.App.) A reviewing court is concluded by a determination of a jury upon a debatable issue of fact.—Wilhite v. City of Huntsville, 151 S. W. 232.

§ 1001 (Tex.Civ.App.) A verdict sustained by evidence is conclusive on appeal.—Bledsoe v. Thompson Bros. Lumber Co., 151 S. W. 910.

§ 1002. A verdict on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed.

—(Ark.) Doniphan Lumber Co. v. Fix, 151 S. W. 986;

(Mo. App.) Gillfillan v. Schmidt, 151 S. W. 161.

§ 1002 (Ark.) A verdict on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed because it appears to be against the preponderance of the evidence.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Williams, 151 S. W. 243.

§ 1002 (Mo.App.) A verdict on conflicting evidence, rendered under proper instructions submitting the credibility of witnesses, is conclusive on appeal.—Thornton v. Mersereau, 151 S. W. 212.

§ 1002 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the evidence was conflicting, the verdict will not be disturbed as against the weight of the evidence.—St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Cartwright, 151 S. W. 630.

§ 1003 (Ky.) A verdict will be disturbed only when palpably against the evidence, and not in every case where the appellate court would, on the evidence, reach a different conclusion.—Ætæa Life Ins. Co. v. Rustin, 151 S. W. 366.

§ 1003 (Ky.) A verdict will not be disturbed unless flagrantly against the evidence.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Goodwin, 151 S. W. 376.

§ 1003 (Mo.App.) That the verdict is contrary to the greater weight of the evidence is not ground for disturbing the verdict on appeal.—Byrd v. Vanderburgh, 151 S. W. 184.

§ 1003 (Mo.App.) A verdict for a party whose evidence is substantial and presents issues of fact will not be set aside though the court, on appeal, believes that it is against the weight of the evidence.—Madden v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 489.

§ 1006 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the jury has given plaintiff a verdict three times, although the evidence is meager, the verdict will be permitted to stand; but that there have been three verdicts for plaintiff should not prevent this court from reviewing the evidence.—S. W. Slayen & Co. v. Palmo, 151 S. W. 649.

§ 1008 (Mo.) The rule as to the conclusiveness of the trial court's findings is not inapplicable because the testimony was wholly by deposition, or because one judge heard the evidence and another decided the case on the transcript thereof.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

§ 1008 (Mo.App.) A finding that shipment was damaged before delivery to carrier held conclusive on appeal.—Bettman v. Mobile & R. Co., 151 S. W. 169.

§ 1009 (Ark.) The chancellor's finding supported by the clear preponderance of the evidence will not be disturbed.—Henderson v. E. V. Emerson Co., 151 S. W. 251.

§ 1009 (Ark.) A finding of the chancellor on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed unless clearly against the weight of the evidence.—Medlock v. Owen, 151 S. W. 995.

§ 1009 (Ky.) In reviewing questions of fact, considerable weight is given to the judgment of the chancellor.—Higgins v. Shields, 151 S. W. 391.

§ 1009 (Ky.) In a suit to quiet title, findings of fact by the chancellor on conflicting evidence will be deferred to upon appeal.—McCain v. Joiner, 151 S. W. 406.

§ 1009 (Ky.) While considerable weight will be given to a chancellor's fact findings, his judgment will be reversed when not supported by the weight of the evidence, as shown by the face of the record.—Coomes Bros. v. Grigsby & Co., 151 S. W. 943.

While a verdict will not be disturbed unless palpably against the evidence, a chancellor's findings have not the same weight, as he does not see and hear the witnesses.—Id.

§ 1009 (Mo.) While the Supreme Court is not bound by the chancellor's findings, it may properly defer in some degree to them.—Waddie v. Frazier, 151 S. W. 87.

§ 1010 (Mo.) A finding by the court, rendered without the giving of any declarations of law, will not be disturbed where there is any evidence to support it.—Dolphin v. Klann, 151 S. W. 956.

§ 1010 (Mo.) A finding sustained by testimony is conclusive on appeal.—Strother v. Barrow, 151 S. W. 960.

§ 1011 (Mo.) A finding on conflicting testimony will not be disturbed, though the Supreme Court doubts the correctness of the finding.—Daman v. Remme, 151 S. W. 429.

§ 1011 (Mo.App.) Finding of fact on conflicting testimony, is not subject to review.—Lewis v. Fisher, 151 S. W. 172.

§ 1011 (Mo.App.) On appeal in unlawful detainer, tried by the court without a jury, the judgment is conclusive as to a disputed issue of fact, unless not justified by the law and the facts.—Griggs v. Bridgewater, 151 S. W. 764.

§ 1011 (Tex.Civ.App.) Findings of the court on conflicting evidence will not be reviewed, though the appellate court might have reached a different conclusion.—Polk v. State Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 1126.

§ 1013 (Mo.) A finding of fact, based on a mere mathematical computation, is reviewable on appeal, since any incorrect finding is without evidence to support it.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

§ 1017 (Mo.) The appellate court may review findings of a referee and enter its own judgment thereon.—State ex rel. Federal Lead Co. v. Reynolds, 151 S. W. 85.

§ 1022 (Ky.) Findings on conflicting evidence by a special commissioner, concurred in by the lower court, will not be disturbed.—Wilson v. Ward, 151 S. W. 353.

§ 1022 (Mo.) The findings of the trial court, after setting aside those made by the referee, are not open for review as to the weight of evidence, since the referee's findings are not judicially made until approved; and where they are set aside the only findings are those of the court.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

§ 1022 (Tenn.) A concurrent finding by a master and chancellor will be sustained on appeal, where there is any evidence in its behalf.—Gleason v. Prudential Fire Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 1030.

(H) Harmless Error.

§ 1027 (Tex.Civ.App.) Any error in findings that certain votes were not fraudulent would be immaterial, where the result of the election would not be changed if such votes were thrown out.—Ralls v. Parish, 151 S. W. 1089.

§ 1028 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the unchallenged findings attain justice, the judgment will not be reversed merely because of informality of procedure, not affecting the merits or the substantial rights of the parties.—Holloway v. Hall, 151 S. W. 895.

§ 1029 (Tex.Civ.App.) In trespass to try title, errors of law would not justify reversal of judgment for defendant, where the evidence failed to show that plaintiff had title to the land.—Lee v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 868.

§ 1029 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where, under the facts, plaintiff could not recover, any error of procedure at the trial was not prejudicial to him.—Bledsoe v. Thompson Bros. Lumber Co., 151 S. W. 910.

§ 1031 (Ark.) Prejudice from introduction of incompetent evidence is presumed.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Steed, 151 S. W. 257.

§ 1032 (Ark.) The party introducing incompetent evidence has the burden of showing that no prejudice resulted.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Steed, 151 S. W. 257.

§ 1033 (Ark.) One complaining of a decree cannot take advantage of errors which are in his favor.—Reeves v. Moore, 151 S. W. 1025.

§ 1033 (Ky.) Where the evidence showed that the value and use of property had depreciated owing to an inadequate sewer which flooded the basement necessitating repairs at considerable cost, an instruction authorizing the assessment of such damages as will fairly and reasonably compensate for any damage done to the use of the property between specified dates, though erroneous, was not prejudicial to defendant.—City of Louisville v. Kramer's Adm'r, 151 S. W. 379.

§ 1033 (Mo.App.) Where the evidence did not show that a person suing for the purchase price of hay guaranteed it, an instruction that he did not guarantee that it was of any particular marketable grade, but only that it was of some value in some grade, was not prejudicial to defendant.—Mullinax v. Lowry, 151 S. W. 745.

§ 1033 (Tex.Civ.App.) In action against manufacturer of soap permitting plaintiff to test the soap, if error, held not prejudicial where the test failed to produce the expected result.—Armstrong Packing Co. v. Clem, 151 S. W. 576.

§ 1039 (Tex.Civ.App.) A plaintiff is not entitled to a reversal for insufficiency of the answer where the petition did not state a cause of action.—Hicks v. Murphy, 151 S. W. 845.

§ 1040 (Tex.Civ.App.) Any error in overruling an exception in an action on a note given for drilling water wells, to an allegation of the supplemental petition denying that plaintiff guaranteed the quality of the water, on the ground that such allegation was not responsive to any issue, was harmless.—Miller v. Layne & Bowler Co., 151 S. W. 341.

§ 1040 (Tex.Civ.App.) Error in overruling special demurrers to those parts of plaintiff's petition relating to what insurer's agent told him about taking an inventory, and as to additional insurance, was harmless, in view of evidence showing a substantial compliance with the iron safe clause, and that the agent authorized additional insurance, or knew thereof before the loss.—American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Hardin, 151 S. W. 1152.

§ 1042 (Tex.Civ.App.) Any error in striking a part of the petition became harmless, where the trial court heard the evidence on the question raised thereby and filed findings thereon.—Ralls v. Parish, 151 S. W. 1089.

§ 1043 (Ky.) Refusal of a continuance in a will contest, on the ground that contestee was nervous and unable to testify or advise her counsel, and on the ground of the absence of a witness, held, in view of the presence and testimony of other witnesses and the testimony of contestee, not reversible error.—Crosthwaite v. Crosthwaite, 151 S. W. 945.

§ 1046 (Ky.) The statement of the court that defendant resting at the close of plaintiff's case had no evidence to introduce held not prejudicial.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Meyers, 151 S. W. 19.

§ 1046 (Ky.) As Civ. Code Prac. § 317, subsec. 6, accords to the party having the burden of proof the conclusion of the argument, the denial of that right is reversible error.—Shirley v. Renick, 151 S. W. 357.

§ 1048 (Tex.Civ.App.) The error, if any, in overruling an objection to a question, is not prejudicial where no affirmative fact was elicited.—First Bank of Springtown v. Hill, 151 S. W. 652.

§ 1050 (Ark.) Admission of incompetent evidence is prejudicial error, especially where counsel for prevailing party refers to such evidence in his argument.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Steed, 151 S. W. 257.

§ 1050 (Ky.) Admission of evidence of employer's precaution after the injury by constructing a safe passway held harmless, where the uncontradicted evidence showed that it was negligence not to provide such passway.—Fluehart Collieries Co. v. Elam, 151 S. W. 34.

§ 1050 (Tex.Civ.App.) Error in admitting evidence is harmless; other evidence to substantially the same effect having been admitted without objection.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Good, 151 S. W. 617.

§ 1050 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where testimony substantially the same as some complained of was not objected to, a case will not be reversed even if the testimony complained of was not admissible.—S. W. Slayden & Co. v. Palmo, 151 S. W. 649.

§ 1050 (Tex.Civ.App.) Any error in admitting evidence was harmless to defendant, where a witness for defendant testified to substantially the same fact.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Vance, 151 S. W. 904.

§ 1051 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where there was sufficient competent evidence to support a finding, that incompetent evidence was introduced is not reversible error.—McDoel v. Jordan, 151 S. W. 1178.

§ 1052 (Tex.) Though it appears that brokers suing for commission introduced the purchaser's testimony by one of the brokers that his firm effected the sale was harmless error, where that issue was not submitted to the jury.—Ansley Realty Co. v. Pope, 151 S. W. 525.

§ 1056 (Ky.) In an action for injuries to a child at a railroad crossing by a car on which there was no brakeman, it was not prejudicial to refuse to admit evidence that, even had there been a man on the car at the time of the accident, he could not have stopped the car, where the recovery was based on insufficient warning.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Allnutt, 151 S. W. 14.

§ 1056 (Mo.App.) Error in excluding evidence as to an item of property in controversy as to which judgment was rendered for appellant was harmless.—Byrd v. Vanderburgh, 151 S. W. 184.

§ 1058 (Tex.Civ.App.) Refusal to allow a witness to answer a question was harmless, where having elsewhere been permitted to testify to substantially the same facts.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Good, 151 S. W. 617.

§ 1060 (Ky.) A remark of counsel of plaintiff in response to an objection to the admission of evidence held not prejudicial error.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Meyers, 151 S. W. 19.

§ 1060 (Ky.) Where, in an action for assault and battery, the plaintiff's attorney, over an adverse ruling, persisted in questions as to sickness caused plaintiff's wife and baby, held reversible error.—Shields' Adm'rs v. Rowland, 151 S. W. 408.

§ 1060 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injuries to a child while crossing railroad tracks, improper remarks of counsel, embracing matters outside the record, held not reversible where called for by remarks of opposing counsel, and the verdict was not excessive.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Wininger, 151 S. W. 586.

§ 1061 (Mo.App.) Error in sustaining a demurrer to the evidence as to matters recited in favor of appellant is not reversible error.—Byrd v. Vanderburgh, 151 S. W. 184.

§ 1064 (Mo.App.) Error in authorizing a recovery, in an action for injuries by being struck by an automobile, if the driver did not use the highest care a careful person would exercise under like circumstances, when only specific acts of negligence were alleged, held reversible.—McDonnell v. Columbia Taxicab Co., 151 S. W. 767.

§ 1064 (Tex.Civ.App.) Recital in court's charge that the case was submitted on special charges, not stating which side presented them, held not prejudicial to plaintiff, although the special charge was presented by defendant.—Hengy v. Hengy, 151 S. W. 1127.

§ 1064 (Tex.Civ.App.) Error in an instruction, that a street railway company was required to use that high degree of care "usually" exercised by very cautious and prudent persons under similar circumstances, held not ground for reversal.—Walker v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 1142.

§ 1066 (Ark.) Instruction submitting issue of contributory negligence held harmless, where there was no evidence from which reasonable minds could have concluded that plaintiff was negligent.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Brogan, 151 S. W. 699.

§ 1066 (Mo.) An instruction which did not wholly follow the petition held harmless, if erroneous, in view of evidence clearly supplying an omitted issue and in light of Rev. St. 1909, § 1850, 2082.—Honea v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 119.

§ 1066 (Mo.App.) Where there was evidence that plaintiff's horse was not frightened as alleged, an instruction to find for defendant if plaintiff was injured from any other cause held harmless, though there was no evidence of other cause.—Kiel v. Ott, 151 S. W. 182.

§ 1066 (Mo.App.) Where there was no evidence of contributory negligence of plaintiff, an instruction that the city was bound to use ordinary care to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition was harmless, though conveying the impression that the city was liable regardless of the negligence of plaintiff.—Ledbetter v. City of Kirksville, 151 S. W. 228.

§ 1066 (Mo.App.) It was not prejudicial error to charge that a fact concerning which there was no dispute was admitted by defendants, although they had not in fact admitted it.—Mulmax v. Lowry, 151 S. W. 745.

§ 1066 (Tex.Civ.App.) Instruction requiring office to, or knowledge by, insured's wife, as well as himself, that the company would no longer attend to the insurance on the premises held not prejudicial where there was no contention that either one had notice or knowledge.—Commonwealth Fire Ins. Co. v. Obenchain, 151 S. W. 611.

§ 1066 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the evidence, in an action for injuries, did not warrant an issue of his assumption of risk, error in submitting that issue conjunctively with the inconsistent issue of contributory negligence was harmless to defendant.—Armour & Co. v. Morgan, 151 S. W. 861.

§ 1066 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injuries to a servant, an instruction on an issue of negligence not presented by the proof held harmless.—Continental Oil & Cotton Co. v. Gilliam, 151 S. W. 890.

§ 1068 (Ark.) The error in an instruction based entirely on a party's claim, and ignoring the contention of the adverse party, is not prejudicial to the adverse party obtaining a verdict in his favor.—Johnston-Reynolds Land Co. v. Fuqua, 151 S. W. 693.

§ 1068 (Ky.) An instruction on contributory negligence without support in the evidence was not prejudicial, where the verdict for defendant did not rest on such instruction.—Samuels v. Louisville Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 37.

§ 1070 (Mo.App.) In replevin, with counterclaim for damages and the surrender of notes, held, that a verdict for defendants for $735 was not determinative of the issues, and was reversible error.—Advance Thresher Co. v. Speak, 151 S. W. 236.

§ 1073 (Mo.) Rendering default judgment in ejectment on sustaining demurrer to part of answer claiming affirmative relief, though there was also a general denial, held not harmless error.—Montgomery v. Gahagan, 151 S. W. 453.

§ 1074 (Tex.Civ.App.) Although on motion to open a default judgment many errors were committed in the trial of the issues to determine whether defendant had a valid defense, they are harmless, where no valid excuse is shown for not filing the answer in time.—Gilaspie v. City of Huntsville, 151 S. W. 1114.

(I) Error Waived in Appellate Court.

§ 1078 (Tex.Civ.App.) In absence of any ruling shown by the record upon a special exception to the answer, it will be presumed that such exception was waived.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Vance, 151 S. W. 904.

(J) Decisions of Intermediate Courts.

§ 1094 (Tex.) An application to the Supreme Court for writ of error, upon the grounds, as provided by Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 941, § 8, that the decision of the Court of Civil Appeals practically settled the case, admits the correctness of the facts found, and merely challenges the law.—Edwards v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas, 151 S. W. 289.

(K) Subsequent Appeals.

§ 1096 (Mo.) In examining the trial court's conclusions on the facts, the reviewing court could consider the lapse of time, the discrepancy between the present testimony and that given on a former trial, and the fact that the changes made in the testimony conformed to the needs of the parties introducing the witnesses, as determined by the former decision.—First Nat. Bank v. Renick, 151 S. W. 421.

§ 1097 (Tex.Civ.App.) The decision of the court on appeal conclusively settles the questions determined thereby, and they will not be considered on a subsequent appeal.—Campbell v. Elliott, 151 S. W. 1180.

XVII. DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION OF CAUSE.

(A) Decision in General.

§ 1108 (Tex.) A determination in a contest of the election that local option had not been adopted in the county, pending an appeal in an action on a liquor dealer's bond, held to warrant a determination that the bond was of no force and effect, though the local option law provided that a contest of the election should not suspend enforcement of the law.—State v. Savage, 151 S. W. 530.

§ 1109 (Ky.) A judgment relates to the date of submission of an appeal so that the death of either party after submission is not material.—Barger v. Barger, 151 S. W. 406.

(B) Affirmance.

§ 1135 (Mo.) Where the only record is the record proper, which contains a good petition and a judgment responding to one count thereof, the judgment will be affirmed.—Parkyne v. Churchill, 151 S. W. 446.

§ 1140 (Tex. Civ. App.) The error in the amount of a judgment does not require a reversal, where it can be cured by a remittitur.—Johnson v. Oswald, 151 S. W. 1164.

(D) Reversal.

§ 1170 (Ky.) In view of Civ. Code Prac. § 756, the Court of Appeals, though doubtful as to whether the chancellor erred in not transferring issues for trial by jury, will not reverse if the findings and judgment of the chancellor are correct.—Rieger v. Schulte & Eicher, 151 S. W. 395.

§ 1175 (Tex.) Where the facts are undisputed, the Supreme Court on writ of error will not send the case back to the Court of Civil Appeals, failing to announce conclusions of fact as required by Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 1639.—Foard County v. Sandifer, 151 S. W. 523.

XVIII. LIABILITIES ON BONDS AND UNDERTAKINGS.

§ 1234 (Ky.) Under Civ. Code Prac. § 748, the obligors in a supersedeas bond are expressly made liable for any judgment the Court of Appeals may order to be rendered.—White v. White, 151 S. W. 1.

APPEARANCE.

See Justices of the Peace, § 84; Venue, § 32.

§ 9 (Mo.) Where heirs appeared specially in the probate court merely to object to the court's jurisdiction to order a sale, but took no part in the proceedings, the court acquired no jurisdiction over them.—State ex rel. Deems v. Holtcamp, 151 S. W. 153.

ARBITRATION AND AWARD.

I. SUBMISSION.

§ 8 (Tex. Civ. App.) Though Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 61, permits other than statutory forms of arbitration, the court has power to set aside a verdict and judgment entered upon an agreement of the parties that a verdict of a majority of the jurors should have the force of a judgment.—Philadelphia Underwriters Agency of Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. Brown, 151 S. W. 899.

In the absence of clear and specific averment, it will not be assumed that an agreement that a verdict might be returned by a majority of the jurors, and that judgment might be entered thereon, was intended to oust the court of its jurisdiction to set aside the judgment at that term, and grant a new trial.—Id.

II. ARBITRATORS AND PROCEEDINGS.

§ 27 (Mo. App.) Where one acting as an arbitrator of the amount due under a contract for services to be rendered by plaintiff, unknown to plaintiff, owned an adjoining farm and was interested in a drainage ditch on which plaintiff did part of his work, he was disqualified as an arbitrator, and the plaintiff could treat the whole proceeding as void.—Stone v. Johnston, 151 S. W. 987.

III. AWARD.

§ 67 (Mo. App.) Evidence held to show that plaintiff had knowledge of defendant's fraud practiced in an arbitration proceeding when he treated a new contract arising therefrom valid, thus ratifying the award.—Stone v. Johnston, 151 S. W. 987.

ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL.

See Criminal Law, §§ 717-730, 1037; Trial, §§ 25, 124-133.

ARREST.

See Evidence, § 244; False Imprisonment; Weapons, § 11.

II. ON CRIMINAL CHARGES.

§ 63 (Ky.) Under Ky. St. §§ 1309, 1310, 1311, providing for the arrest of persons carrying concealed weapons by ministerial officers, a policeman, discovering a person carrying a pistol concealed while talking to him in regard to another charge, held justified in making his arrest.—Madden v. Meehan, 151 S. W. 681.

Under Ky. St. § 2885, and Cr. Code Prac. § 36, authorizing arrests by police officers, a policeman held not entitled to make an arrest for an offense committed out of his presence without a warrant.—Id.

ARSON.

See Criminal Law, §§ 595, 829.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

See Abatement and Revival, § 69; Appeal and Error, § 1060; Homicide, §§ 84-96, 257, 310; Witnesses, § 350.

I. CIVIL LIABILITY.

(A) Acts Constituting Assault or Battery and Liability Therefor.

§ 13 (Ky.) The mere fact that the assaulting party during the fight retreated a few steps before seizing a weapon does not amount to a withdrawal, so as to make the other party guilty of a fresh assault in following him up.—Shields' Adm'rs v. Rowland, 151 S. W. 408.

(B) Actions.

§ 34 (Ky.) Evidence of abusive language is admissible in mitigation of punitive damages for an assault.—Shields' Adm'rs v. Rowland, 151 S. W. 408.

§ 38 (Ky.) Plaintiff may recover for such mental or physical suffering, or both, as are the proximate result of the injury.—Shields' Adm'rs v. Rowland, 151 S. W. 408.

§ 39 (Ky.) Where an assault and battery was malicious, plaintiff may recover punitive damages in the jury's discretion.—Shields' Adm'rs v. Rowland, 151 S. W. 408.

§ 40 (Ky.) Though plaintiff may recover for such mental or physical suffering, or both, as are the proximate result of the injury, and if the tort was malicious, punitive damages in the jury's discretion he cannot recover more than the sum claimed.—Shields' Adm'rs v. Rowland, 151 S. W. 408.

§ 42 (Ky.) Evidence held to require a submission to the jury the question of punitive damages.—Shields' Adm'rs v. Rowland, 151 S. W. 408.

II. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY.

(A) Offenses.

§ 54 (Tex.Cr.App.) Under Pen. Code 1911, arts. 1008, 1009, 1011, 1022, accused held properly convicted of aggravated assault in the house of a private family.—Ward v. State, 151 S. W. 1073.

§ 56 (Tex.Cr.App.) An assault with an ordinary saw was not an assault with a deadly weapon, where the injuries inflicted were very slight.—Fisher v. State, 151 S. W. 544.

(B) Prosecution and Punishment.

§ 96 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where accused testified that, to protect his son from violence, he struck prosecutor, the failure to submit the right of accused to defend his son was reversible error.—Coons v. State, 151 S. W. 820.

ASSESSMENT.

See Drains, §§ 14, 76; Municipal Corporations, §§ 450-567.

ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

ASSIGNMENTS.

See Highways, § 113; Insurance, §§ 122, 212-222; Landlord and Tenant, §§ 75-79, 208; Lost Instruments; Subrogation, § 31.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(B) Mode and Sufficiency of Assignment.

§ 34 (Tex.Civ.App.) An oral transfer is as effective an equitable assignment as a written transfer.—A. A. Fielder Lumber Co. v. Smith, 151 S. W. 605.

§ 50 (Tex.Civ.App.) An order by a contractor to the supervising architect of a school building, on whose certificate estimates under the contract were to be paid to pay a material-man and charge to the contractor's account, was good as an equitable assignment of part of the fund in the hands of the school trustees.—A. A. Fielder Lumber Co. v. Smith, 151 S. W. 605.

II. OPERATION AND EFFECT.

§ 85 (Tex.Civ.App.) Transfers of portions of a fund will be satisfied in the order of their dates.—A. A. Fielder Lumber Co. v. Smith, 151 S. W. 605.

ATTACHMENT.

See Garnishment; New Trial, § 89.

I. NATURE AND GROUNDS.

(A) Nature of Remedy, Causes of Action, and Parties.

§ 13 (Tex.) An attachment was properly issued in scire facias to have a judgment entry corrected by adding an omitted part, and to revive the judgment; the proceeding to revive being merely a suit for the debt.—Coleman v. Zapp, 151 S. W. 1040.

(B) Grounds of Attachment.

§ 32 (Mo.App.) From one's statement, when buying property, "I haven't got my checkbook here, and I can't pay you now, but I will send you a check when I get home," an implied affirmation that the money was in bank is permissible, making the debt one fraudulently contracted, as regards right to attachment; he not having the money in bank.—Matthews v. Eby, 151 S. W. 470.

VII. QUASHING, VACATING, DISSOLUTION, OR ABANDONMENT.

§ 233 (Mo.App.) Attachment in the circuit court held obtained through fraud, and so to give no jurisdiction.—Matthews v. Eby, 151 S. W. 470.

VIII. CLAIMS BY THIRD PERSONS.

§ 308 (Mo.App.) Interpleader in attachment claiming as purchaser has the burden of proving that he took actual possession as required by law.—Byrd v. Vanderburgh, 151 S. W. 184.

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

See Appeal and Error, § 1060; Constitutional Law, §§ 308, 321; Estoppel, § 58; Executors and Administrators, §§ 485, 496; Garnishment, § 191; Partition, § 114; Stipulations; Use and Occupation, § 1; Wills, § 405.

I. THE OFFICE OF ATTORNEY.

(C) Suspension and Disbarment.

§ 45 (Mo.App.) An attorney devising a scheme for the execution of false bills of sale and notes, and directing a party thereto to give perjured testimony and unlawfully procuring the papers of a decedent, and converting the same to his own use, held guilty of misconduct justifying disbarment.—In re Selleck, 151 S. W. 743.

§ 51 (Tenn.) It is the right and duty of a trial judge to make charges against attorneys, where matters justifying such charges are within his knowledge, under Shannon's Code, §§ 5781-5784.—In re Cameron, 151 S. W. 64.

§ 57 (Mo.App.) Where, in proceedings to disbar an attorney, the evidence is conflicting, the court will defer to the findings of the special commissioners.—In re Selleck, 151 S. W. 743.

II. RETAINER AND AUTHORITY.

§ 89 (Mo.App.) An attorney may dismiss his client's suit or stipulate that it shall abide the judgment in another suit where the facts and parties are the same, and has a wide range of action as to those things pertaining merely to the remedy.—Grant City v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 187.

§ 101 (Mo.App.) An attorney's general authority, as such, gives him no power to compromise his client's claim or to make any agreement, or take any action that will sacrifice his client's cause.—Grant City v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 187.

Where a stipulation by an attorney to dismiss an appeal was merely an incident to an unauthorized compromise of the case by him, it related rather to the cause than the remedy and was unauthorized.—Id.

BAIL.

II. IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

§ 57 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where a recognizance does not state the punishment assessed against accused in compliance with Code Cr. Proc. 1911, arts. 900-903, his appeal must be dismissed.—White v. State, 151 S. W. 826.

§ 59 (Tex.Cr.App.) Under Code Cr. Proc. 1911, art. 321, subd. 5, and article 962, a bail bond binding defendant to appear at the next term of court on a date which fell within the term of court at which it was executed held to require an appearance on the specified date set, and not insufficient because of the inconsistency.—Barrett v. State, 151 S. W. 558.

§ 65 (Tex.Cr.App.) A recognizance which fails to recite the amount of punishment assessed is fatally defective, and the court on appeal does not acquire jurisdiction.—Bush v. State, 151 S. W. 554.

§ 93 (Tex.Cr.App.) Under Code Cr. Proc. 1911, § 321, a bond reciting that defendant was charged with a felony held not a variance from a judgment thereon, reciting that defendant was "charged with felony, to wit, burglary."—Barrett v. State, 151 S. W. 558.

BAILMENT.

See Larceny, § 32; Pledges; Sales, § 454; Sunday, § 19.

§ 16 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where defendant was in lawful possession of property and entitled to hold it until certain payment by plaintiff, there could be no conversion until the correct amount was tendered and paid.—May v. Anthony, 151 S. W. 602.

BANKRUPTCY.

III. ASSIGNMENT, ADMINISTRATION, AND DISTRIBUTION OF BANKRUPT'S ESTATE.

(B) Assignment, and Title, Rights, and Remedies of Trustee in General.

§ 142 (Mo.) Under Bankruptcy Act, July 1, 1898, §§ 70, 70e, a trustee takes no interest, estate, or title to land fraudulently conveyed by the bankrupt which will entitle him to sue under Rev. St. 1899, § 650, as amended in 1909 (Laws 1909, p. 343), giving a right of action to ascertain and determine any person's interest in land.—Mayhew v. Todisman, 151 S. W. 436.

(E) Actions by or Against Trustee.

§ 302 (Mo.) A petition by a trustee in bankruptcy to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, under Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, §§ 70, 70e, must clearly show that the property is needed to pay claims filed against the bankrupt debtor.—Mayhew v. Todisman, 151 S. W. 436.

BANKS AND BANKING.

See Limitation of Actions, § 66.

II. BANKING CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.

(E) Insolvency and Dissolution.

§ 84 (Tex.Cr.App.) One who had complete and personal charge of the business of an unincorporated bank, and knew of its insolvent condition when money was received on deposit by its president, was an accomplice to the crime.—Brown v. State, 151 S. W. 561.

§ 85 (Tex.Cr.App.) An indictment alleging that accused unlawfully received a deposit in the "unincorporated" bank named, of which he was president, while it was insolvent to his knowledge, charged that the bank was a private bank, and was bad under Pen. Code 1911, art. 532 (Acts 25th Leg. c. 100), for not alleging that accused was its owner, agent, or manager, or the names of the owners, and that they were insolvent.—Brown v. State, 151 S. W. 561.

In a prosecution for receiving money on deposit with knowledge of the bank's insolvency, the court should charge as to the rule for determining solvency.—Id.

In a prosecution of a bank president for receiving deposits on Monday with knowledge of the bank's insolvency, evidence that on the preceding Saturday other deposits were made was not admissible.—Id.

III. FUNCTIONS AND DEALINGS.

(C) Deposits.

§ 126 (Mo.App.) Where a depositor presented a check for deposit, he and the bank could agree that payment should be deferred for a reasonable time until the bank ascertained whether there were sufficient funds of the drawer to pay it.—Pollack v. National Bank of Commerce in St. Louis, 151 S. W. 774.

A plaintiff depositing a check, knowing of the custom of the bank to give credit subject to the right to charge the amount thereof in want of funds to pay the check, held estopped from preventing the bank from charging his account with the amount of the check.—Id.

§ 134 (Tex.Civ.App.) A garnishee bank holding a balance to the credit of a debtor's general account held not entitled to credit the same against the debtor's unmatured notes to the bank as against plaintiff in garnishment.—Presnell v. Stockyards Nat. Bank, 151 S. W. 873.

§ 140 (Mo.App.) A "check" is payable on demand, and where nothing more appears on bank on which it is drawn must either pay or reject it on presentment.—Pollack v. National Bank of Commerce in St. Louis, 151 S. W. 774.

§ 154 (Ky.) In an action to recover a deposit in a bank, evidence held sufficient to support the finding that the deposit was made.—Com. Banking Co. v. Bryant, 151 S. W. 393.

I. ILLEGITIMACY IN GENERAL.

§ 1 (Mo.) Under Rev. St. 1909, § 342, providing that the issue of all marriages "decreed null in law shall be legitimate, children of a woman with whom a husband lived in a common-law relation after having left his wife held legitimate; the word "decreed" being construed as meaning "deemed."—New v. Jones, 151 S. W. 80.

§ 3 (Mo.) In absence of proof to the contrary, it is presumed that a child is legitimate.—Nelson v. Jones, 151 S. W. 80.

The presumption that a marriage once established continues must give way to the presumption in favor of the legitimacy of children thereafter born to one of the parties living in the state of common-law marriage with another person.—Id.

§ 6 (Mo.) A child will not be adjudged illegitimate unless no other conclusion can be reached.—Nelson v. Jones, 151 S. W. 80.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(D) Acceptance.

§ 66 (Tex.Civ.App.) An order by a creditor, directing his debtor to pay a portion of the account to a third person, is not binding on the debtor until after presentation and acceptance.—Gulf, T. & W. Ry. Co. v. Stark, 151 S. W. 641.

(E) Consideration.

§ 92 (Tex.Civ.App.) Extension of time held a sufficient consideration for a note executed by an abandoned wife for a community debt.—Crowder v. McLeod, 151 S. W. 1168.

(F) Validity.

§ 106 (Ky.) Note given for money advanced to pay candidate's election expenses, under an agreement that it would be void if the payee was employed as attorney by a person appointed by such candidate, held void because based on an illegal consideration.—Campbell v. Offutt, 151 S. W. 408.

Note given for money advanced to a candidate for office held void, although not mentioned in an agreement accompanying a note previously given by which such note was to be void if the payee was employed as attorney by such person when appointed to office.—Id.

III. MODIFICATION, RENEWAL, AND RESCISSION.

§ 139 (Tex.Civ.App.) A payment of part of interest due on a note is no consideration for an extension of time.—Corbett v. Sweeney, 151 S. W. 858.

V. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES ON INDORSEMENT OR TRANSFER.

(D) Bona Fide Purchasers.

§ 348 (Ky.) Where a check, regular on its face and payable on demand, is transferred within two days after it is drawn, the transferee acquires title before it is overdue.—Asbury v. Taube, 151 S. W. 372.

§ 363 (Tex.Civ.App.) The purchaser of a note before maturity, in due course of trade, for a valuable consideration, and without notice of fraud on the maker, could recover thereon.—Harlan v. Guitar, 151 S. W. 628.

VI. PRESENTMENT, DEMAND, NOTICE, AND PROTEST.

§ 396 (Mo.App.) Demand on the maker of a note, and notice to the payee thereof and of nonpayment, is not necessary for liability of the payee to one to whom he indorsed it, not only when due, but after judgment on it against the maker, so that as to him it was no longer an obligation.—Hawkins v. Wiest, 151 S. W. 789.

VII. PAYMENT AND DISCHARGE.

§ 440 (Mo.App.) Under Rev. St. 1909, §§ 9978, 10035, a note indorsed by its payee, and reissued after he has obtained judgment on it, is as to him a valid note.—Hawkins v. Wiest, 151 S. W. 789.

VIII. ACTIONS.

§ 445 (Tex.Civ.App.) Cause of action on a note due October 1st, grace having been waived, held to accrue October 2d.—Standard v. Thurmond, 151 S. W. 627.

§ 497 (Ky.) Under the express provisions of Ky. St. § 3720b, subsecs. 55, 56, and 59, the transferee of a check, obtained from the maker by fraud, has the burden of showing that he acquired title as a holder in due course.—Asbury v. Taube, 151 S. W. 372.

§ 518 (Mo.) Evidence, in an action to set aside a deed of trust given to secure notes based upon a prior note, held to sustain a finding that the prior note was without consideration.—First Nat. Bank v. Renick, 151 S. W. 421.

§ 525 (Ky.) Evidence, held sufficient to show that plaintiff was a bona fide holder in due course.—Asbury v. Taube, 151 S. W. 372.

§ 525 (Tex.Civ.App.) Evidence held to warrant a finding that plaintiff purchased the note before maturity, in due course of trade, for value, and without notice of fraud.—Harlan v. Guitar, 151 S. W. 628.

BOUNDARIES.

See Adverse Possession, § 73; Deeds, § 114; Trial, § 252; Witnesses, § 406.

I. DESCRIPTION.

§ 3 (Ky.) The rule that courses and distances give way to monuments is to establish the actual location of the lines and corners, and has little application where the lines were not run out in the original survey.—Bryant v. Strunk, 151 S. W. 381.

The lines of a patent will not be extended to reach a designated monument on the ground where the surveyor made a mistake as to its location.—Id.

§ 3 (Mo.) An unmarked line is not a natural or artificial monument, and does not when called for in a deed overcome a call for distance.—Dolphin v. Klann, 151 S. W. 956.

Where a surveyor was not the county surveyor when he made a resurvey of a platted addition, and he did not give any data from which he made the survey, the survey did not overcome the calls in the plat.—Id.

§ 10 (Mo.) A plat of an addition must be taken as a whole, and a corner will not be so changed as to cause a shifting of the position of all the lots in the addition.—Dolphin v. Klann, 151 S. W. 956.

§ 21 (Mo.) The owner of property abutting a private way reserved in conveyances in partition which do not convey the fee to the way to any of the tenants held to have no more than half the way along the boundary, unless he acquired title to the other half by limitations.—Dulce Realty Co. v. Staed Realty Co., 151 S. W. 415.

II. EVIDENCE, ASCERTAINMENT, AND ESTABLISHMENT.

§ 33 (Mo.) Under Rev. St. 1909, § 10290, relating to platting, the law presumes that a survey and marking formed the basis of the plat.—Dolphin v. Klann, 151 S. W. 956.

A plat of an addition held to show on its face that a survey was actually made before the making of the plat, and surveyor seeking to establish different lines from those designated on the plat must show good grounds therefor.—Id.

§ 35 (Mo.) Where the fact as to whether previous owners agreed on a boundary line was in issue, cross-examination of a witness to show that such boundary line as surveyed was not the true line held admissible; no one but the witness having ever heard of such agreement, and the line being an irregular one.—Hilgedick v. Gruebbel, 151 S. W. 731.

§ 36 (Mo.) Rev. St. 1909, § 11,301, does not preclude introduction in evidence of surveys by private or public surveyors other than the county surveyor, where their correctness has been first shown.—Carter v. Spracklin, 151 S. W. 451.

§ 37 (Mo.) Evidence in ejectment held to show that the prior owners of the respective tracts had not agreed upon a boundary line.—Hilgedick v. Gruebbel, 151 S. W. 731.

§ 40 (Ky.) The location of land granted by the state is for the court where there is no dispute as to the facts.—Bryant v. Strunk, 151 S. W. 381.

§ 40 (Mo.) Where the prima facie case made out by an official survey was disputed by other evidence, the issue as to the boundary was for the jury.—Carter v. Spracklin, 151 S. W. 451.

§ 41 (Mo.) Instructions given in ejectment involving a disputed boundary held to present the issue as favorably for plaintiff as he was entitled to.—Hilgedick v. Gruebbel, 151 S. W. 731.

§ 43 (Ky.) An agreed order that the chain of title to plaintiff's boundary, as set out in the petition, is deducible of record, and that the chain of title to defendant's boundary, as shown by the deed filed, is deducible of record, does not show which title is the older, and does not necessarily require a judgment for plaintiff, though his title is superior.—Dockins v. Dukes, 151 S. W. 679.

§ 46 (Ark.) The grantee of timber rights on defendant's land which had been added to by accretions cannot demand that the accretions to which he is entitled, defendant having purchased adjoining property, shall be determined according to the boundary for such adjoining property fixed by defendant and its then owner by parol at a time prior to the formation of the accretions.—Reeves v. Moore, 151 S. W. 1025.

§ 46 (Mo.) A boundary may be established by agreement of parties.—Hilgedick v. Gruebbel, 151 S. W. 731.

§ 53 (Mo.) Where a survey is illegal in a matter which the court knows about, it will not presume that it is correct in those particulars as to which it is not informed.—Dolphin v. Klann, 151 S. W. 956.

§ 54 (Mo.) A survey is not admissible as an official survey where it appears on its face or from competent evidence that it was not made as the statute directs.—Carter v. Spracklin, 151 S. W. 451.

Where plaintiff introduced on the issue of a disputed boundary, not only the official survey, but also evidence contrary thereto, the court properly refused plaintiff's requested instruction that the survey made by the county surveyor was presumptively correct.—Id.

§ 55 (Mo.) A survey which violates an act of Congress in apportioning a surplus is illegal.—Dolphin v. Klann, 151 S. W. 956.

BROKERS.

See Appeal and Error, § 1052; Counties, § 122; Limitation of Actions, § 46; Trial, §§ 244, 296.

III. EMPLOYMENT AND AUTHORITY.

§ 7 (Mo.App.) The testimony of defendant that he was not to pay a commission to plaintiff and defendant's brother previously employed to procure a purchaser jointly, but to the brother alone who would employ plaintiff and divide the commission, did not establish a joint obligation, and plaintiff could sue alone for the services rendered.—Dodge v. Childers, 151 S. W. 749.

§ 9 (Mo.App.) Where a contract employing a broker does not limit the duration of the agency, the law implies performance within a reasonable time, after the lapse of which either party may revoke the contract.—Dodge v. Childers, 151 S. W. 749.

IV. COMPENSATION AND LIEN.

§ 39 (Tex.Civ.App.) Owner held liable to real estate broker for commission on a sale to a purchaser procured by the broker's subagent; the owner having knowledge of the method of procurement of the purchaser.—Bound v. Simkins, 151 S. W. 572.

§ 44 (Ark.) A contract giving a broker the exclusive right to procure a purchaser of real estate held modified by a new contract giving the owner the right to sell and binding him to pay the broker a specified commission, and a sale made by the owner revoked the broker's authority.—Johnston-Reynolds Land Co. v. Fuqua, 151 S. W. 693.

§ 44 (Mo.App.) Where an owner mailed his notice of revocation after receiving a proposal from a purchaser procured by the broker, the revocation was in bad faith, and did not deprive the broker of his commission.—Dodge v. Childers, 151 S. W. 749.

An owner may not escape liability for commissions by revoking the agency after the broker has procured a purchaser who subsequently made his proposal to the owner, and actually purchased the property.—Id.

§ 52 (Tex.) A contract by A. to give B. exclusive sale of land for 90 days, and to execute deed either to B. or persons to whom he might sell, B. to take any land remaining after the expiration of such time, was a contract of sale, and not of agency, and a broker who brought the parties together was entitled to a commission.—Ansley Realty Co. v. Pope, 151 S. W. 525.

§ 54 (Mo.App.) A broker, employed to procure a loan on real estate, held to have earned his commissions when he procured a lender ready and willing to make a loan on one of the two conditions agreed on.—Crouch v. Bruckman, 151 S. W. 176.

§ 56 (Tex.Civ.App.) An owner is liable for the commission of a sale of land to a purchaser procured by his broker, though he does not know that the purchaser was so procured, and makes the sale himself.—Bound v. Simkins, 151 S. W. 572.

§ 56 (Tex.Civ.App.) A broker producing several persons willing to purchase, a sale being made to some of them, earned his commission.—Anderson v. Crow, 151 S. W. 1080.

§ 57 (Tex.Civ.App.) That the deed was made jointly to the purchaser procured and to a third party did not deprive a broker of his right to a commission, where the contract of sale was between the principal and the purchaser procured.—Bound v. Simkins, 151 S. W. 572.

§ 63 (Tex.Civ.App.) Right to commission may not be defeated by the fraudulent act of the owner in withdrawing the property from the broker prior to the making of a contract.—Anderson v. Crow, 151 S. W. 1080.

V. ACTIONS FOR COMPENSATION.

§ 84 (Tex.Civ.App.) Fraudulent intent of an owner in withdrawing property from a broker, to defeat the right to a commission, may be inferred from the surrounding facts.—Anderson v. Crow, 151 S. W. 1080.

§ 86 (Tex.Civ.App.) Evidence held to support a finding that a broker was the procuring cause of a sale.—Anderson v. Crow, 151 S. W. 1080.

Evidence held to support a finding that an owner fraudulently withdrew the property from the broker to defeat the right to commission earned.—Id.

§ 87 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where a broker's right to a commission was based on his agreement with a third person, who had been employed by the owner, and the third person had assigned to the broker all interest in his claim for commission, the broker could recover the entire commission.—Anderson v. Crow, 151 S. W. 1080.

§ 88 (Ark.) In an action by a broker for commissions for procuring a purchaser, instructions held to sufficiently submit the issues.—Johnston-Reynolds Land Co. v. Fuqua, 151 S. W. 693.

§ 88 (Mo.App.) In an action for commissions, an instruction that the broker, to recover, must procure a purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase on the terms fixed by the owner, held not erroneous, where plaintiff testified to a different contract than that proposed by the owner.—Gillfillan v. Schmidt, 151 S. W. 161.

§ 88 (Mo.App.) Instructions held to submit the issue of revocation of agency.—Dodge v. Childers, 151 S. W. 749.

II. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT.

§ 22 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where a building is owned in common or jointly by two or more persons, an indictment for burglary may allege ownership in either or all of them.—Whorton v. State, 151 S. W. 300.

§ 28 (Tex.Cr.App.) An indictment alleging that a store burglarized belonged to the prosecuting witness was supported by proof that it belonged to witness and his son and that witness was in charge of it.—Whorton v. State, 151 S. W. 300.

§ 34 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for burglary, evidence of the manager of the burglarized store held not objectionable, on the ground that the goods produced and alleged to have been stolen were not sufficiently identified as those stolen.—Walker v. State, 151 S. W. 922.

§ 41 (Tex.Cr.App.) Evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction.—Whorton v. State, 151 S. W. 300; Coggins v. Same, Id. 311; Bellew v. Same, Id. 542; Walker v. Same, Id. 822.

CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

See Appeal and Error, § 843.

I. RIGHT OF ACTION AND DEFENSES.

§ 4 (Ky.) Equity will set aside transactions in which influence exercised through confidential relations has been abused.—Shacklette v. Goodall, 151 S. W. 23.

§ 4 (Mo.App.) One seeking to annul an instrument, on the ground that it was obtained by fraud, must show that the representations were as to a material fact, and that they contributed to the injury.—Birch Tree State Bank v. Dowler, 151 S. W. 784.

§ 24 (Tex.Civ.App.) An administrator of a deceased grantor, who sues to set aside a deed, as procured by fraud of the grantee, need not offer to return the taxes paid by the grantee.—Chambers v. Wyatt, 151 S. W. 864.

II. PROCEEDINGS AND RELIEF.

§ 56 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where a grantee in a deed of one lot procured by fraud the insertion of a provision conveying also another lot, a recovery on the ground of fraud was limited to a cancellation of the deed as to the latter lot.—Chambers v. Wyatt, 151 S. W. 864.

§ 59 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where a grantee obtained a conveyance by fraud, and entered into possession and made improvements, he could not recover the value of the improvements on the setting aside of the deed.—Chambers v. Wyatt, 151 S. W. 864.

CARRIERS.

See Appeal and Error, § 1008; Damages, § 132; Evidence, § 407; Trial, §§ 194, 252; Witnesses, § 414.

II. CARRIAGE OF GOODS.

(A) Delivery to Carrier.

§ 40 (Ark.) The statute requiring carriers to furnish, without discrimination or delay, sufficient facilities for the carriage of freight does not make the duty an absolute one, and does not require the carrier to provide in advance for an unprecedented and unexpected rush of business.—Cumbie v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 240.

(B) Bills of Lading, Shipping Receipts, and Special Contracts.

§ 66 (Ark.) A shipper's order for a specified number of cars for a specified day, when accepted, is a contract binding the carrier to furnish the cars, and the shipper to furnish the goods, but does not render the carrier liable to parties who did not authorize the order.—Cumbie v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 240.

§ 67 (Ark.) A carrier who contracts to furnish all the cars necessary to transport the peach crop at a certain station, on failure to do so, cannot defend because of heavy and unprecedented traffic or other unavoidable casualties, nor does the contract relieve the shipper from ordering cars.—Cumbie v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 240.

(F) Loss of or Injury to Goods.

§ 123 (Tex.Civ.App.) Defendant carrier held not liable for loss sustained by plaintiffs on a car of cabbage, where the consignee's refusal to accept the cabbage was not because of the carrier's error in adding an icing charge to the expense bill.—Freeman v. Quebedeaux, 151 S. W. 643.

(H) Limitation of Liability.

§ 159 (Ark.) A provision in a bill of lading that a written notice of intention to claim damage should be presented to the carrier within 36 hours after delivery is not unreasonable.—Cumbie v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 237.

Where a carrier has examined goods at their destination and knows their condition, it is not necessary to present a written notice of "intention to claim damages," as provided in the bill of lading.—Id.

(J) Charges and Liens.

§ 197 (Tex.Civ.App.) Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 324, authorizing a carrier to store unclaimed freight, does not authorize a sale of unclaimed freight.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Patten Mfg. Co., 151 S. W. 1158.

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, arts. 327, 328, authorizing a sale of unclaimed freight, and article 324, authorizing the storage need not be construed together, and the right to sell unclaimed freight is not dependent on the use by the carrier of due diligence to notify the consignee of the arrival of the freight at destination.—Id.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 327, a carrier may sell freight unclaimed for three months, regardless of whether any charges are due thereon.—Id.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 327, the carrier may sell at a place other than the point of destination, and the owner, to avoid a sale at such other place, must show that the place selected was unreasonable and that he was probably injured.—Id.

A carrier failing to give the notice required by Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4520, may not charge for the storage of freight remaining unclaimed for three months and then sold.—Id.

III. CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK.

§ 228 (Tex.Civ.App.) Negligence in transportation of a shipment of cattle cannot be shown by evidence of another shipment about the same time having made the trip safely; it not being shown the two shipments were made under the same conditions.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Good, 151 S. W. 617.

§ 228 (Tex.Civ.App.) The presumption of negligence against the last carrier, who receives live stock in good condition and subsequently delivers it in a damaged condition can only be indulged in the absence of testimony accounting for the injury.—Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Scott & Robertson, 151 S. W. 1113.

§ 229 (Tex.Civ.App.) A shipper's measure of damages for injuries to cattle is the difference between the market value at the time they arrived at destination and what would have been their market value had they arrived without delay.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Knox, 151 S. W. 902.

IV. CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS.

(A) Relation Between Carrier and Passenger.

§ 247 (Mo.) A person in the act of getting upon a street car is a passenger.—Benjamin v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 91.

(C) Performance of Contract of Transportation.

§ 270 (Tex.Civ.App.) One railroad company which allowed another company to sell tickets over its line is bound to honor a ticket sold by the first company, where the purchaser had no notice of the limitation on the first company's authority.—Chicago, R. I. & G. Ry. Co. v. Carroll, 151 S. W. 1116.

(D) Personal Injuries.

§ 280 (Mo.) A carrier owes to a passenger the highest degree of care that a prudent person experienced in that business can practicably exercise.—Benjamin v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 91.

§ 287 (Ky.) It is negligence to move a street car at all before a passenger has reasonable opportunity to reach the platform; but, if he has such opportunity, the company is not liable unless the car is started with an unusual jerk, or unless the passenger be feeble, etc.—Samuels v. Louisville Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 37.

§ 287 (Mo.) If the conductor of a street car should have realized that a sudden starting of the car would throw down and injure a corpulent lady of 57 years who was entering the car, and she was accordingly thrown down and injured, the railroad company was liable.—Benjamin v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 91.

§ 295 (Tex.Civ.App.) Municipal ordinances fixing the speed of street cars are for the benefit of persons crossing the track and not for passengers, and a violation of such ordinances does not raise an imputation of negligence per se in favor of an injured passenger.—Walker v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 1142.

§ 305 (Mo.App.) The injury to one who, knowing a depot would not be heated or lighted at night, went to it two hours before time for his train and voluntarily got into a box car at the platform, occupied by a shipper, and in getting out fell, was not caused by any failure of the carrier to have the depot heated, lighted, and open a reasonable time before a train was due.—Sweeney v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 198.

§ 306 (Ky.) Where the trains of one railroad company were run over tracks leased from a second, and the tracks were jointly used by the lessee and a third company, all three companies are liable as principals to passengers injured by the act of a switchman of the third company in opening a switch under a train of the lessee.—Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Rowell, 151 S. W. 950.

§ 314 (Mo.) Facts constituting carrier's negligence toward a passenger must be pleaded, either by a charge of special negligence, or of general negligence, stating facts with sufficient certainty to point the adversary to the event or the occurrence in the happening of which negligence is charged.—Benjamin v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 91.

§ 315 (Ky.) Where a passenger was injured by the sudden stopping of a car on which she was riding, the fact that it was not derailed will not defeat recovery on the ground of variance, despite the allegation in the petition that her injuries were caused by the carelessness of defendants in the construction and operation of the tracks and trains, and that the coach in which she was riding was wrecked, derailed, and thrown off the track.—Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Rowell, 151 S. W. 950.

§ 317 (Ky.) Where it appeared that plaintiff, a passenger, did not tell the railroad company's servants that she was injured, evidence that they did not assist her from the coach was improperly admitted.—Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Rowell, 151 S. W. 950.

In an action against a railroad company for injuries caused plaintiff by the sudden jolt or jar of a train in stopping, evidence by other passengers that there was no such jolt or jar as would throw a person about in a seat is admissible.—Id.

§ 318 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injury to a lumber company's employé while riding on a logging train to his work, evidence held to warrant a finding that he was rightfully on the train.—Knox v. Robbins, 151 S. W. 1134.

§ 319 (Ky.) Where the servant of a railroad company turned a switch under a passenger train which was in motion, causing a derailment, punitive damages are properly allowed; the conduct of the servant showing a wanton and reckless disregard of human life.—Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Rowell, 151 S. W. 950.

§ 320 (Ky.) Whether a street car started with an unusual jerk as plaintiff was boarding it held a jury question.—Samuels v. Louisville Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 37.

Whether a street car passenger was injured as claimed while boarding the car held a jury question.—Id.

§ 320 (Ky.) Where a passenger was injured by the sudden stopping of a train, part of the cars of which were derailed by the opening of a switch, evidence on that issue of negligence held sufficient to go to the jury.—Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Rowell, 151 S. W. 950.

§ 320 (Mo.) Whether a street car was started "suddenly"—that is, without notice or unexpectedly to a boarding passenger—held, under the evidence, a question for the jury.—Benjamin v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 91.

Whether it is negligent to start a street car before a passenger has taken his seat is a question of fact for the jury.—Id.

Whether a woman of 57 years, weighing nearly 200 pounds, facing forward while entering a street car from the platform, could have been thrown forward by the sudden starting of the car, was for the jury.—Id.

Whether defendant was negligent in starting its car, so as to injure plaintiff, a woman of 57 years, weighing nearly 200 pounds, as she was making her way toward a seat, was for the jury.—Id.

It is not negligence per se to start a street car while passengers are standing either in the car or on the platform or in the vestibule.—Id.

§ 321 (Ky.) An allegation that plaintiff was not given "reasonable opportunity to fully board and enter" defendant's car did not imply a negligent starting of the car while plaintiff was boarding it, so that an instruction that plaintiff was entitled to a reasonable opportunity to board the car was not required.—Samuels v. Louisville Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 37.

§ 321 (Mo.) An instruction that, if the carrier exercised all the care and prudence that were reasonably practicable, it was not negligent, was erroneous; the word "reasonably" rendering it confusing.—Benjamin v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 91.

§ 321 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injury to a lumber company's employé while riding on a logging train, which was derailed, an instruction on the duty of defendant railway company under its contract with defendant lumber company to carry plaintiff held proper.—Knox v. Robbins, 151 S. W. 1134.

(E) Contributory Negligence of Person Injured.

§ 345 (Tex.Civ.App.) Evidence of prior or habitual acts of drunkenness was inadmissible, in an action for injuries to a passenger, on the question of his sobriety at the time of the alleged injury.—Mason v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas, 151 S. W. 350.

(F) Ejection of Passengers and Intruders.

§ 373 (Tex.Civ.App.) An initial carrier held not liable for ejection of a passenger by a connecting carrier, where its agent, who sold the ticket, had no knowledge of a rule of the connecting carrier to the effect that the ticket sold was not good on the train from which the passenger was ejected.—Chicago, R. I. & G. Ry. Co. v. Carroll, 151 S. W. 1116.

§ 381 (Tex.Civ.App.) Evidence held to show that the agent of an initial carrier selling a ticket to plaintiff had no knowledge of a rule of the connecting carrier that the ticket was not good on a particular train from which the passenger was ejected.—Chicago, R. I. & G. Ry. Co. v. Carroll, 151 S. W. 1116.

§ 382 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where plaintiff's wife, while traveling alone with three small children, was ejected from defendant's train, and forced to alight in a desolate spot, and was caused inconvenience, humiliation, and annoyance, a verdict of $1,500 was not excessive.—Chicago, R. I. & G. Ry. Co. v. Carroll, 151 S. W. 1116.

§ 383 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where, in an action against a carrier for wrongful ejection, plaintiff's ticket as well as the rules of the railroad company affecting it were in evidence, the legal effect of such written testimony and whether plaintiff was entitled to ride on a given train was for the court.—Chicago, R. I. & G. Ry. Co. v. Carroll, 151 S. W. 1116.

(G) Passengers' Effects.

§ 402 (Tex.Civ.App.) Carrier held not liable for humiliation caused passengers by having their trunks unlawfully searched by parties whose suspicions were aroused through a stench with which the trunks were impregnated from being placed in a baggage car with a corpse.—Tarvin v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 640.

CERTIORARI.

See Justices of the Peace, § 210.

I. NATURE AND GROUNDS.

§ 5 (Mo.App.) Certiorari is allowed only when no appeal or writ of error or other available mode of review is afforded.—State ex rel. Goodman & Co. v. Circuit Court of St. Francois County, 151 S. W. 178.

Where a motion in the circuit court, under Rev. St. 1909, § 7573, for rule and attachment to compel a justice of the peace to allow an appeal and return his proceedings in an action, is denied, the ruling is reviewable by appeal or writ of error, and certiorari does not lie.—Id.

§ 16 (Mo.App.) Certiorari reaches only to cases in which there are final orders or judgments.—State ex rel. Goodman & Co. v. Circuit Court of St. Francois County, 151 S. W. 178.

§ 28 (Tenn.) Where the Court of Civil Appeals erroneously assumed jurisdiction of an appeal involving a constitutional question, instead of transferring it to the Supreme Court, its error in failing to so transfer gives the Supreme Court jurisdiction to review the appeal by certiorari.—Campbell County v. Wright, 151 S. W. 411.

CHANCERY.

See Equity.

CHANGE OF VENUE.

See Venue, §§ 41, 77.

CHARITIES.

See Adverse Possession, § 4; Common Law.

I. CREATION, EXISTENCE, AND VALIDITY.

§ 10 (Mo.) Enumeration of charities in the statute of charitable uses (St. 43 Eliz. c. 4) is not exclusive, and there are other objects deemed charitable in a legal sense.—Strother v. Barrow, 151 S. W. 960.

Any gift not inconsistent with law and promotive of the amelioration of the condition of mankind or the diffusion of useful knowledge is a "charity."—Id.

§ 30 (Mo.) The evidence to establish abandonment of a charitable use created by deed must be clear and conclusive.—Strother v. Barrow, 151 S. W. 960.

Abandonment of a charitable use involves the elements of intent to abandon permanently and the physical fact of nonuser.—Id.

Evidence held to support a finding that a charitable use created by a deed conveying land in trust for religious purposes was not abandoned.—Id.

II. CONSTRUCTION, ADMINISTRATION, AND ENFORCEMENT.

§ 36 (Mo.) A charitable trust created by deed conveying land to trustees of a Presbyterian church is not violated by a transfer of the property to a Universalist Church.—Strother v. Barrow, 151 S. W. 960.

Where land conveyed to trustees of a Presbyterian church for religious purposes was conveyed by such trustees to the Universalist general convention, without describing the business character of the grantee, the presumption was that the conveyance was for religious purposes, so that the second grantee acquired title.—Id.

§ 45 (Ark.) Where a charitable organization accepted a bequest which required it to maintain an imbecile daughter of testatrix during her life, and after her death to apply the remaining property to the purposes of the organization, it could not, during the life of the daughter, recover as upon a quantum meruit for her maintenance without returning the trust moneys received.—Hare v. Sisters of Mercy, 151 S. W. 515.

CHARTER.

See Corporations, § 596; Municipal Corporations, §§ 485, 495, 564, 565.

CHattel MORTGAGES.

See Fraudulent Conveyances, § 300; Garnishment, § 29.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(A) Nature and Essentials of Transfers of Chattels as Security.

§ 5 (Tex.Civ.App.) A written transfer of money that will be due, which in its last clause states the purpose to be to secure payment of a note, no other consideration being stated, will be construed only to describe the debt to be paid and will not be held a mortgage.—A. I. Fielder Lumber Co. v. Smith, 151 S. W. 605.

IV. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES.

§ 177 (Tex.Civ.App.) One converting to his own use mortgaged chattels is only liable to the mortgagee for their market value at the time and place of conversion, and, where the value exceeds the debt, then only to the extent of the debt.—Johnson v. Oswald, 151 S. W. 1164.

The petition, in an action by a mortgagee for the conversion of mortgaged chattels, should specifically allege the time and place of conversion and the value of the chattels converted.—Id.

In an action by a mortgagee for the conversion of mortgaged property, evidence held not to show the value of the chattels at the time and place of conversion.—Id.

IX. FORECLOSURE.

§ 284 (Tex.Civ.App.) In foreclosure of a chattel mortgage on a horse sold by the mortgagor, to two partners a partner not made a party to the foreclosure action having intervened is entitled to possession as against the constable levying execution issued on the judgment.—Jones v. Lawrence, 151 S. W. 584.

CONSPIRACY.I. CIVIL LIABILITY.

See Criminal Law, § 422; Evidence, § 253.

(A) Acts Constituting Conspiracy and Liability Therefor.

§ 13 (Mo.) As a general rule, if a conspiracy exists and another joins with the conspirators, he is deemed a party to all acts done by any of the conspirators, before or afterwards, in furtherance of the common design.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

See Corporations, §§ 376, 484; Counties, §§ 18, 152; Courts, §§ 188, 198, 472; Death, § 31; Drains, § 76; Elections, § 203; Escheat, § 3; Judges, § 49; Jury, § 13; Master and Servant, § 228; Monopolies, § 3; Perpetuities, § 4; Statutes, §§ 40, 104, 107, 114, 150, 154; Telegraphs and Telephones, § 30.

II. CONSTRUCTION, OPERATION, AND ENFORCEMENT OF CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

§ 18 (Ark.) In determining the intention in framing a constitutional amendment, the court must keep in view the Constitution as before it was amended, the evil to be remedied by the amendment, and the terms of the amendment.—Ferrill v. Keel, 151 S. W. 269.

Any interpretation of a constitutional amendment which would conflict with any other provision or is not absolutely necessary to effectuate the amendment should not be indulged.—Id.

§ 19 (Tenn.) In view of the contemporaneous construction of the provision of Const. art. 6, § 15, found in the act of 1835 (Shannon's Code, § 97), held, that the provision must be understood as authorizing the division of counties into districts either according to population or territory.—Brown v. Sullivan County, 151 S. W. 50.

§ 24 (Ark.) In order that a constitutional provision may be abrogated by another provision, there must be an irreconcilable conflict between the purposes of the two provisions.—Ferrill v. Keel, 151 S. W. 269.

Repeals by implication are not favored even in case of statutes and certainly not in case of long-enacted constitutional provisions.—Id.

§ 26 (Tex.Civ.App.) Within constitutional limits the power of the Legislature in the enactment of laws is supreme.—Conley v. Daughters of the Republic of Texas, 151 S. W. 877.

III. DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENTAL POWERS AND FUNCTIONS.(B) Judicial Powers and Functions.

§ 70 (Mo.) The judgment of the Legislature, within its constitutional powers, is final; and the wisdom of its enactments cannot be questioned by the courts.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

XI. DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

§ 277 (Mo.) An equity in incumbered real estate is "property" within Const. art. 2, § 80, providing that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law.—State ex rel. Deems v. Holtcamp, 151 S. W. 153.

§ 290 (Mo.) Where notice of a hearing on assessment of benefits for a drain was published ed Feb. 16th, March 2d, 9th, and 16th, pursuant to Rev. St. 1909, § 5587, requiring notice in four issues of a weekly paper, the last insertion to be before the hearing day, it could not be said that the publication was so short as to deny due process of law in respect to an owner residing in New Jersey.—State ex rel. Coleman v. Blair, 151 S. W. 148.

A notice of drainage proceedings addressed to "the estate of B., B.'s heirs," etc., was not objectionable as not being due process of law because B.'s recorded will showed the name of the heir taking the estate.—Id.

§ 306 (Tenn.) Trial of an attorney on disbarment proceedings by a judge who had previously decided a question in issue held a violation of Const. art. 1, § 17, guaranteeing every one a remedy by due course of law.—In re Cameron, 151 S. W. 64.

§ 309 (Mo.) The probate court's order for the sale of incumbered realty in administration, without notice to the heirs, held a denial of due process of law, though Rev. St. 1909, §§ 147, 148, under which the sale was made, requires no notice.—State ex rel. Deems v. Holtcamp, 151 S. W. 153.

§ 316 (Mo.) Dismissal of an appeal to the circuit court from a probate order granting a new trial in proceedings to determine the sanity of a person held not to deprive the petitioners in such proceedings of due process of law.—State ex rel. Nolte v. McQuillin, 151 S. W. 444.

§ 316 (Tenn.) The Supreme Court held not authorized to try a case de novo, and render judgment which should have been rendered below, under Pub. Acts 1911, c. 32, where the trial judge was incompetent and the proper objection was made as this would violate Const. art. 1, § 17, providing for remedy by due course of law.—In re Cameron, 151 S. W. 64.

XII. RIGHT TO JUSTICE AND REMEDIES FOR INJURIES.

§ 321 (Tenn.) Trial of disbarment proceedings against an attorney by a judge who had already decided the question at issue held violative of Const. art. 1, § 17, guaranteeing the right to have justice administered without sale, denial, or delay.—In re Cameron, 151 S. W. 64.

CONTINUANCE.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 671, 1043; Criminal Law, §§ 589-608, 1090, 1144.

§ 7 (Ky.) In ruling on motions for continuance, the trial court is exercising a discretionary power.—Rose v. Monarch, 151 S. W. 19.

§ 26 (Tex.Civ.App.) There was no abuse of discretion in denying an application for a continuance because of failure to receive depositions, where counsel made no inquiry as to the return of the depositions from November 16, 1910, when they were returned to the clerk and filed, until the case was called for trial on April 8, 1911.—Continental Lumber & Tie Co. v. Wilroy, 151 S. W. 840.

If defendant's counsel were advised by the notary who took depositions that they had been forwarded to the clerk of court, there was no lack of diligence in failing to inquire before trial whether they were on file, so as to preclude them from moving for a continuance for their loss.—Id.

§ 26 (Tex.Civ.App.) A continuance for absence of a witness is properly denied, where no diligence is shown to procure the testimony of the witness for the trial.—Campbell v. Elliott, 151 S. W. 1180.

§ 31 (Tex.Civ.App.) Surprise justifying a continuance held not predicable on the admission of evidence in shipper's action of particular acts of delay and rough handling, where the petition contained general allegations of delay and rough handling.—St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Cartwright, 151 S. W. 630.

§ 51 (Tex.Civ.App.) It is within the sound discretion of the court to grant or refuse a second application for a continuance, which is not strictly a statutory application.—Continental Lumber & Tie Co. v. Wilroy, 151 S. W. 840.

CONTRACTS.

See Arbitration and Award, § 27; Assignments: Bills and Notes; Boundaries, § 46; Brokers: Cancellation of Instruments; Carriers, §§ 69, 67, 159, 270; Chattel Mortgages; Compromise and Settlement; Corporations, §§ 30, 300, 484, 628; Counties, §§ 113, 122, 152; Covenants; Damages, §§ 9, 62, 80, 123, 163, 189; Deeds; Dower, § 6; Evidence, §§ 60, 65, 213, 241, 407-466, 596; Frauds, Statute of; Fraudulent Conveyances; Guaranty; Highways, § 113; Husband and Wife, §§ 23, 39; Infants, §§ 47, 50; Insurance; Judgment, § 250; Landlord and Tenant; Logs and Logging, §§ 3, 15; Lost Instruments; Master and Servant, § 6; Mines and Minerals, § 62; Mortgages; Municipal Corporations, § 330; Parties, § 19; Partnership, § 53; Pleading, § 8; Principal and Agent, § 146; Reference, § 8; Sales; Set-Off and Counterclaim, § 20; Specific Performance; Stipulations; Trusts, § 240; Vendor and Purchaser; Witnesses, § 379; Work and Labor.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(A) Nature and Essentials in General.

§ 9 (Ark.) A contract fixing the time for completion of a building to be erected according to plans prepared by an architect, and which fixes damages per day for delay, and which requires the contractor to enter on the work immediately, held sufficiently definite.—Friedman v. Schleuter, 151 S. W. 696.

§ 10 (Ky.) A phosphate mining lease for 10 years, which did not give the lessor the right to terminate the lease within that time, or compel the lessee to begin operations, but permitted the lessee to begin work at any time within 10 years, and to quit when he chose, upon notice that the land did not contain paying quantities of phosphate, in his opinion, held lacking in mutuality.—Killebrew v. Murray, 151 S. W. 662.

(C) Formal Requisites.

§ 32 (Ark.) Where the terms of a contract are actually agreed on, the contract is effective, though it is expected that the contract shall be reduced to writing.—Friedman v. Schleuter, 151 S. W. 696.

Where a contract for the construction of a building was orally agreed on, including the time for completion and damages for delay, the mere fact that the contract was to be reduced to writing did not prevent it from being effective from the date of the agreement.—Id.

(D) Consideration.

§ 71 (Ark.) An agreement by a judgment creditor to subject to the judgment a less interest in land than might have been subjected on the other party refraining from bidding at a sale under the judgment held to constitute sufficient consideration to support the contract.—Lay v. Brown, 151 S. W. 1001.

A consideration such as will support a contract need not be a thing of pecuniary value or even reducible to money value; waiver of a legal right at the request of another party being sufficient consideration for a promise.—Id.

(E) Validity of Assent.

§ 99 (Ky.) Presumption of fraud, where a confidential relation exists between the parties, arises more readily in cases of gift than of contract.—Shacklette v. Goodall, 151 S. W. 23.

(F) Legality of Object and of Consideration.

§ 108 (Tex.Civ.App.) An agreement by a parent to emancipate his minor children, so as to relieve himself of their support for necessities, is contrary to public policy.—Snell v. Ham, 151 S. W. 1077.

§ 124 (Ky.) An agreement by a person seeking appointment to a public office to employ certain persons as his attorneys, if appointed, and pay them a part of the income of the office, is contrary to public policy, and void.—Campbell v. Offutt, 151 S. W. 403.

§ 130 (Ark.) An agreement by a judgment creditor to subject to her judgment a less interest in land than might have been subjected in consideration of the other party refraining from bidding at the sale under the judgment held not invalid as being against public policy.—Lay v. Brown, 151 S. W. 1001.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.(A) General Rules of Construction.

§ 147 (Ark.) The interpretation of a contract is to ascertain the intent of the parties as shown by the circumstances surrounding the subject, the relation of the parties, and the sense in which the words used would be commonly understood.—Alf Bennett Lumber Co. v. Walnut Lake Cypress Co., 151 S. W. 275.

§ 153 (Tex.) A contract susceptible of two constructions, one of which will make it illegal and the other lawful, must be so construed as to make it legal.—Foard County v. Sandifer, 151 S. W. 523.

§ 176 (Tex.Civ.App.) Evidence held to require submission to the jury of question whether a clause in an agreement to procure an extension of an option to purchase land obligated defendants to obtain proper agreements or releases from the holders of superior liens.—McPherson v. C. W. Hahl & Co., 151 S. W. 323.

(C) Subject-Matter.

§ 198 (Tex.Civ.App.) A contract to drill a "test well for water," which required the contractors to develop water-bearing strata, which, in their opinion, would afford the requisite supply of water "suitable for irrigation," did not require that the water should be suitable for irrigation.—Miller v. Layne & Bowler Co., 151 S. W. 341.

(D) Place and Time.

§ 212 (Ark.) Where a contract to erect a building does not fix the time for completion, the law implies a reasonable time.—Friedman v. Schleuter, 151 S. W. 896.

In the absence of any provision in a building contract as to the time of payment, the law presumes that payment shall be made on the completion of the work.—Id.

CONTRADICTION.

See Witnesses, §§ 406, 414.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

See Master and Servant, § 203; Negligence, §§ 66-85.

CONVERSION.

§ 15 (Ky.) Where a testator devised his entire estate to his wife for life, with directions at her death to sell and divide the proceeds among his children, the children took no title to the property of the testator as such; the direction to sell working an equitable conversion.—Cropper v. Gaar's Ex'r, 151 S. W. 913.

I. INCORPORATION AND ORGANIZATION.

§ 28 (Tex.Civ.App.) Although a private corporation may not have complied with all the statutory requirements, it is a "de facto corporation."—Conley v. Daughters of the Republic of Texas, 151 S. W. 877.

§ 29 (Tex.Civ.App.) The corporate existence of a private corporation cannot be attacked in a collateral proceeding.—Conley v. Daughters of the Republic of Texas, 151 S. W. 877.

§ 30 (Mo.App.) Where a promoter of a corporation entered into a contract which was to be assumed by it when incorporated, he was liable on such contract.—Lewis v. Fisher, 151 S. W. 172.

IV. CAPITAL, STOCK, AND DIVIDENDS.(A) Nature and Amount of Capital and Shares.

§ 67 (Tex.Civ.App.) When a corporation buys its own stock, the capital stock is not reduced by that amount, nor is the stock merged.—San Antonio Hardware Co. v. Sanger, 151 S. W. 1104.

V. MEMBERS AND STOCKHOLDERS.(A) Rights and Liabilities as to Corporation.

§ 174 (Tex.Civ.App.) Shares of stock in a corporation held to give member no right in the property of the corporation as such.—Presnell v. Stockyards Nat. Bank, 151 S. W. 873.

(D) Liability for Corporate Debts and Acts.

§ 244 (Tex.Civ.App.) The transferor of corporate stock directly to the corporation without the intervention of a trustee is not released from his liability on the stock.—San Antonio Hardware Co. v. Sanger, 151 S. W. 1104.

VII. CORPORATE POWERS AND LIABILITIES.

(A) Extent and Exercise of Powers in General.

§ 376 (Mo.) In view of Const. art. 12, §§ 7, 8, prohibiting corporations from issuing stock, except for money or its equivalent, or engaging in unauthorized business, and Rev. St. 1909, §§ 3339, 3354, providing that at least one-half of the capital of a business corporation shall consist of money, a business corporation with a capital of $20,000 cannot purchase one-half of its shares at a premium, and a deed of trust given therefor is void.—Hunter v. Garancio, 151 S. W. 741.

§ 376 (Tex.Civ.App.) In the absence of charter or statutory prohibition, a solvent corporation, with the assent of its stockholders, may purchase its own stock for the purpose of settling differences in its management and preserving its business integrity, though it pays more than the market price therefor.—San Antonio Hardware Co. v. Sanger, 151 S. W. 1104.

Acts 1907, c. 166, § 3 (Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 1152), authorizing a retirement or decrease of capital stock, does not prohibit a corporation from purchasing its own stock for the purpose of settling differences in its management, with the intention of reissuing it again; especially where the seller knew the facts.—Id.

§ 388 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where a corporation's ultra vires contract is executory, neither party is estopped to deny its validity; but, where a corporation has purchased its own stock and received the benefits of the contract, it cannot, in an action on notes given therefor, set up ultra vires.—San Antonio Hardware Co. v. Sanger, 151 S. W. 1104.

(C) Property and Conveyances.

§ 434 (Ky.) Const. § 192, prohibiting corporations from holding real estate for over five years, except such as is necessary for their business, does not deny to a corporation the right in good faith to hold real estate for a necessary future use.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 151 S. W. 934.

§ 444 (Mo.) Under Rev. St. 1909, §§ 2790, 2799, 3001, a deed executed by a corporation through the chairman of its board of trustees and its secretary held sufficiently executed.—Strother v. Barrow, 151 S. W. 960.

(D) Contracts and Indebtedness.

§ 484 (Mo.) As business corporations are forbidden by Const. art. 12, § 7, to engage in business other than that expressly authorized, such a corporation cannot become surety of its stockholder and pledge its credit for his purchase of its stock, and a deed of trust executed in pursuance of such a plan is void.—Hunter v. Garancio, 151 S. W. 741.

(E) Torts.

§ 492 (Ark.) Statements by the auditor of a packing company that there had been forgery and the clerk must settle held not in the course of the auditor's employment, so that the company was not liable.—National Packing Co. v. Boullion, 151 S. W. 244.

(F) Civil Actions.

§ 499 (Tex.Civ.App.) A private corporation, in the absence of a charter or statutory provisions to the contrary, has the same capacity to sue and be sued as a natural person, though not expressly conferred.—Conley v. Daughters of the Republic of Texas, 151 S. W. 877.

§ 507 (Mo.App.) Under Rev. St. 1909, §§ 1766, 1767, a return of service of process on a corporation held bad for failing to show that the president or other chief officer of the corporation was absent when the service was made on its agent or auditor.—Handlan-Buck Mfg. Co. v. Chester, P. & Ste. G. R. Co., 151 S. W. 171.

§ 513 (Tex.Civ.App.) It is not necessary in a suit by a private corporation to allege that the suit is authorized by the board of directors.—Conley v. Daughters of the Republic of Texas, 151 S. W. 877.

§ 519 (Tex.Civ.App.) A suit by a corporation sanctioned by its president and other officers will be presumed to have been authorized by the corporation.—Conley v. Daughters of the Republic of Texas, 151 S. W. 877.

§ 519 (Tex.Civ.App.) Evidence, in an action against a corporation upon notes given by it as part of the purchase price of its own stock, held to show that the corporation at the time of the purchase was solvent, and its stock at par.—San Antonio Hardware Co. v. Sanger, 151 S. W. 1104.

VIII. INSOLVENCY AND RECEIVERS.

§ 537 (Tex.Civ.App.) "Insolvency," as the term is ordinarily used, is not a mere failure to pay debts, but is an insufficiency of property and assets to pay debts.—San Antonio Hardware Co. v. Sanger, 151 S. W. 1104.

XI. DISSOLUTION AND FORFEITURE OF FRANCHISE.

§ 596 (Ark.) In the absence of statute, strictly private corporations may surrender their charters and dissolve voluntarily except so far as creditors have a right to object.—Freeo Valley R. Co. v. Hodges, 151 S. W. 281.

§ 628 (Ark.) Liability of dissolved corporation for damages from wrongful cancellation of a contract held a debt for which its assets were liable under Kirby's Dig. § 958, authorizing the chancery court to pay such corporation's debts and distribute its assets.—Alf Bennett Lumber Co. v. Walnut Lake Cypress Co., 151 S. W. 275.

IX. IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

§ 316 (Ark.) As Kirby's Dig. § 2446, requiring judgment for costs against one convicted, is mandatory, a judgment of conviction may after the expiration of the term at which it was rendered be amended nunc pro tunc so as to require accused to pay the costs.—Villines v. State, 151 S. W. 1023.

COUNTIES.

See Courts, § 42; Elections, § 203; Highways, §§ 7, 113; Indictment and Information, § 86; Private Roads, § 2; Venue, §§ 5, 32.

I. CREATION, ALTERATION, EXISTENCE, AND POLITICAL FUNCTIONS.

§ 18 (Tenn.) In view of Const. 1796, art. 5, § 12, and the act of 1835, found in Shannon's Code, § 97, Const. art. 6, § 15, gives the Legislature power to divide counties into districts according to population or according to territory. and Priv. Laws 1911, c. 620, dividing a county of 430 square miles into 22 districts, is valid.—Brown v. Sullivan County, 151 S. W. 50.

II. GOVERNMENT AND OFFICERS.

(B) County Seat.

§ 35 (Tex.Civ.App.) The burden was on parties contesting a decision that an election for the removal of the county seat had resulted favorably to removal to show that the old county seat town was within a radius of five miles of the center of the county, and that the voters originally voted for the county seat, as located.—Ralls v. Parish, 151 S. W. 1089.

Evidence, in a suit by citizens of a town to contest an election by which the county seat was removed to another town, held to sustain a finding that in voting the county seat of such town the voters intended to vote with reference to the actual location of the building, and not to the town plat.—Id.

III. PROPERTY, CONTRACTS, AND LIABILITIES.

(B) Contracts.

§ 113 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under the statute, the commissioners' court of a county may contract for the construction of a courthouse.—Allen v. Abernethy, 151 S. W. 348.

Under Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 1373, the commissioners' court may appoint the county judge to make a contract for it for the construction of a courthouse.—Id.

§ 122 (Tex.) A contract between a county and a broker by which the latter is authorized to sell school land "at and for the sum of $4 per acre" is not violative of the provision requiring the county to pay the cost of sale, but merely fixes the minimum price at which the land shall be sold.—Foard County v. Sandifer, 151 S. W. 523.

IV. FISCAL MANAGEMENT, PUBLIC DEBT, SECURITIES, AND TAXATION.

§ 152 (Tex.) A claim for commissions under a contract by which a county lists land with a broker for sale for a commission held not a debt within Const. art. 11, § 7, forbidding the creation of a debt, unless provision is made at the time for its payment.—Foard County v. Sandifer, 151 S. W. 523.

§ 164 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under the statute, the commissioners' court of a county contracting for the construction of a courthouse may issue interest-bearing warrants to pay therefor.—Allen v. Abernethy, 151 S. W. 348.

§ 165 (Tex.Civ.App.) Warrants issued by the commissioners' court to pay a contractor constructing a courthouse are not void because made payable at the county seat or at a point outside the state.—Allen v. Abernethy, 151 S. W. 348.

§ 167 (Tex.Civ.App.) Warrants issued by the commissioners' court to pay a contractor constructing a courthouse are nonnegotiable, and cannot be made so by a provision of the contract.—Allen v. Abernethy, 151 S. W. 348.

§ 192 (Tex.Civ.App.) A taxpayer may not complain of a tax levied by the commissioners' court for the construction of a courthouse, where the levy is for so much of 15 cents on $100 as may be necessary.—Allen v. Abernethy, 151 S. W. 348.

I. NATURE, EXTENT, AND EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION IN GENERAL.

§ 2 (Mo.) Courts possess the power to determine the general class to which a given case belongs; and, where title to property is involved, it is generally necessary that it be within the territorial jurisdiction of the court, and it must by its process or by voluntary appearance acquire jurisdiction over the persons whose rights will be affected by its decree.—State ex rel. Deems v. Holtcamp, 151 S. W. 153.

§ 24 (Mo.) Jurisdiction of the subject-matter cannot be conferred by consent of the parties.—Springfield S. W. Ry. Co. v. Schweitzer, 151 S. W. 128.

§ 35 (Ky.) Where a commissioner's deed to land recited that it was made pursuant to a judgment of the circuit court, held, that it would be presumed, the record having been burnt, to sustain the court's jurisdiction, that the construction of the will in which such land was devised was involved in the action.—Landers v. Landers, 151 S. W. 356.

§ 37 (Mo.) Jurisdiction of the subject-matter cannot be waived.—Springfield S. W. Ry. Co. v. Schweitzer, 151 S. W. 128.

II. ESTABLISHMENT, ORGANIZATION, AND PROCEDURE IN GENERAL.

(A) Creation and Constitution, and Court Officers.

§ 42 (Tex.Civ.App.) Acts 30th Leg. c. 5, creating and constituting Dallas county the Fourteenth and Forty-Fourth, and Sixty-Eighth judicial districts, are not unconstitutional on the ground that more than one district court with concurrent jurisdiction for Dallas county cannot exist.—Kruegel v. Cockrell & Gray, 151 S. W. 352.

(B) Terms, Vacations, Place and Time of Holding Court, Courthouses, and Accommodations.

§ 66 (Mo.App.) Where the judge of a court having only one judge was unable to attend a term, the sheriff, under Rev. St. 1909, § 3869, had authority only to adjourn the court until the next regular term.—Grant City v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 187.

(D) Rules of Decision, Adjudications, Opinions, and Records.

§ 90 (Tex.) The Supreme Court will generally follow the decisions of the Court of Criminal Appeals upon questions involving penal laws.—State v. Savage, 151 S. W. 530.

§ 92 (Ark.) A decision on which the case could have turned cannot be regarded as obiter dictum merely because, owing to the disposal of that contention, it was necessary to consider another question.—Galloway v. Darby, 151 S. W. 1014.

§ 93 (Mo.) The Supreme Court is not bound to follow its prior decisions if they be erroneous, though it usually follows them when to do otherwise would disturb a large number of titles.—State ex rel. Coleman v. Blair, 151 S. W. 148.

§ 93 (Mo.App.) A decision of the Supreme Court that the lien of special tax bills is superior to prior incumbrances is a rule of property.—Granite Bituminous Paving Co. v. Parkview Realty & Improvement Co., 151 S. W. 479.

§ 116 (Tex.Civ.App.) An order of the judge, made in vacation, after trial and adjournment, incorporating certain depositions in the record, was without authority and ineffectual for that purpose.—Continental Lumber & Tie Co. v. Wilroy, 151 S. W. 840.

III. COURTS OF GENERAL ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.

(A) Grounds of Jurisdiction in General.

§ 120 (Tex.Civ.App.) The district court was without jurisdiction to restrain the enforcement of a justice's judgment where the amount in controversy was less than $20.—Pye v. Wyatt, 151 S. W. 1086.

§ 122 (Tex.Civ.App.) A petition for mandamus in the district court to compel an officer to accept a replevy bond and deliver property to the principal therein which did not show that the property was within the jurisdictional value of such court was insufficient.—Keasler Lumber Co. v. Clark, 151 S. W. 345.

§ 122 (Tex.Civ.App.) A petition for the dissolution of a firm and the appointment of a receiver, which contains no allegation of the value of the business or of plaintiff's interest therein, fails to show value sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the district court.—Childs v. Brown, 151 S. W. 1154.

IV. COURTS OF LIMITED OR INFERIOR JURISDICTION.

§ 188 (Mo.) Kansas City Charter art. 6, conferring jurisdiction on the municipal court in eminent domain proceedings for street purposes, is valid under Const. art. 9, § 16, and article 6, § 1.—State ex rel. Graham v. Seehorn, 151 S. W. 716.

V. COURTS OF PROBATE JURISDICTION.

§ 198 (Mo.) Under the express provision of Const. art. 6, § 34, a probate court has jurisdiction over the sale of land by administrators within its territorial jurisdiction.—State ex rel. Deems v. Holtcamp, 151 S. W. 153.

VI. COURTS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION.

(B) Courts of Particular States.

§ 231 (Mo.) An appeal from a judgment sustaining exceptions to the referee's report, awarding defendant judgment in a specified amount, and substituting for it a judgment for plaintiff in a larger amount is within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, where the two amounts are more than the jurisdictional limit.—State ex rel. Federal Lead Co. v. Reynolds, 151 S. W. 85.

§ 231 (Mo.) Title to real estate must be involved directly, and not as a mere incident, in order to confer jurisdiction on the Supreme Court, under the Constitution.—Springfield S. W. Ry. Co. v. Schweitzer, 151 S. W. 128.

The Supreme Court may review judgments in condemnation proceedings which involve title to land.—Id.

An unexpired three-year lease on premises condemned was personal property, and not real estate, within the constitutional provision conferring appellate jurisdiction on the Supreme Court in cases involving title to real estate.—Id.

§ 246 (Tenn.) The complainants' appeal is not taken out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Civil Appeals because their bill charged unconstitutionality of the statute under which defendant was created; such question appearing to be abandoned, and not being referred to in complainant's brief.—Denton v. Miller, 151 S. W. 50.

§ 246 (Tenn.) Under Acts 1907, c. 82, § 7, Court of Civil Appeals held to have no jurisdiction to determine constitutional questions, whether they arise on appeals from the circuit courts or courts of equity.—Campbell County v. Wright, 151 S. W. 411.

Under Acts 1907, c. 82, § 7, and Acts 1909, c. 192, the only jurisdiction of the Court of Civil Appeals over an appeal involving a constitutional question is to transfer the case to the Supreme Court.—Id.

VIII. CONCURRENT AND CONFLICTING JURISDICTION, AND COMITY.

(A) Courts of Same State, and Transfer of Causes.

§ 472 (Mo.) Const. art. 6, § 22, held not to confer exclusive original jurisdiction on circuit courts of proceedings to acquire property for street purposes in Kansas City in view of Kansas City Charter, art. 6.—State ex rel. Graham v. Seehorn, 151 S. W. 716.

§ 488 (Mo.App.) Where the Supreme Court transfers a case to the Court of Appeals, constitutional questions are eliminated.—Scientific American Club v. Horchitz, 151 S. W. 475.

COVENANTS.

See Limitation of Actions, § 47.

III. PERFORMANCE OR BREACH.

§ 96 (Tex.Civ.App.) A paramount outstanding title is an "incumbrance" within the meaning of a covenant against incumbrances.—Morris v. Short, 151 S. W. 633.

CREDIBILITY.

See Witnesses, §§ 311-414.

CRIMINAL LAW.

See Abortion; Adultery, § 11; Arrest, § 63; Assault and Battery, §§ 54-96; Bail, §§ 57-93; Banks and Banking, §§ 84, 85; Bastards; Burglary; Costs, § 316; Disorderly House; False Pretenses; Gaming; Grand Jury; Homicide; Husband and Wife, §§ 304, 313; Incest; Indictment and Information; Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 146-239; Larceny; Libel and Slander, §§ 141-155; Malicious Mischief; Municipal Corporations, §§ 635-642; Obstructing Justice, § 11; Pardon; Rape; Seduction.

IV. JURISDICTION.

§ 101 (Tex.Cr.App.) A transfer of a prosecution under an indictment returned in the district court for pursuing the occupation of selling intoxicating liquors in local option territory to the county court is properly denied.—Byrd v. State, 151 S. W. 1068.

VIII. PRELIMINARY COMPLAINT, AFFIDAVIT, WARRANT, EXAMINATION, COMMITMENT, AND SUMMARY TRIAL.

§ 214 (Tex.Cr.App.) A jurat affixed to a complaint held properly amended by permitting the officer to affix the proper date before trial.—Cubine v. State, 151 S. W. 301.

X. EVIDENCE.

(B) Facts in Issue and Relevant to Issues, and Res Gestæ.

§ 338 (Tex.Cr.App.) Testimony of accused's witness in an incest case, that she had stopped visiting at accused's home because she believed a third person and accused's wife were criminally intimate, was properly excluded, where neither the wife nor the third party were witnesses.—Drake v. State, 151 S. W. 315.

§ 338 (Tex.Cr.App.) Defendant's testimony that he had been in jail several months before trial and had but a few days to engage counsel was properly excluded.—Shaffer v. State, 151 S. W. 1061.

Evidence as to the fee paid attorneys who assisted in the prosecution was properly excluded.—Id.

§ 364 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a trial for a burglary followed by defendant's attempt to cut his throat, the court properly permitted the chief of police to testify about defendant's condition and about his writing of statements concerning the offense upon scraps of paper soon after his arrest.—Shaffer v. State, 151 S. W. 1061.

(C) Other Offenses, and Character of Accused.

§ 369 (Ky.) Where two persons were killed at the same instant by the same persons, and possibly by the same shot, the court, on the trial of accused for the murder of one, properly admitted in evidence the murder of the other.—Gross v. Commonwealth, 151 S. W. 36.

§ 369 (Ky.) On a trial for rape on a female 14 years old, the admission of testimony that accused had committed a second offense a few weeks after the offense for which he was tried, and that prosecutrix had complained after the second offense, held not erroneous.—Gamble v. Commonwealth, 151 S. W. 924.

§ 369 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for burglary, evidence that G., from whom defendant claimed he purchased goods stolen from the burglarized store, had committed other burglaries in the same town, with which defendant had nothing to do, held inadmissible.—Walker v. State, 151 S. W. 822.

§ 372 (Tex.Cr.App.) Under an indictment alleging that accused pursued the business of selling liquor in local option territory, the state may prove sales of liquor on other dates.—Byrd v. State, 151 S. W. 1068.

(E) Best and Secondary and Demonstrative Evidence.

§ 404 (Tex.Cr.App.) There was no error in admitting in evidence a bullet found on the ground where the killing occurred, where the position of deceased when shot was an issue on which the finding of the bullet would have a bearing, and the bullet was of a size fitting defendant's pistol, and was in a pool of blood that must have come from deceased.—Kelly v. State, 151 S. W. 304.

(F) Admissions, Declarations, and Hearsay.

§ 406 (Mo.) Testimony that person accused of defiling female child admitted visiting the house of woman of ill repute held competent as an admission on the issue of impotency raised by him.—State v. Donnington, 151 S. W. 975.

§ 406 (Tex.Cr.App.) Accused on trial for rape of a girl under 15 years of age may admit that prosecutrix was not 15 years of age at the time of the alleged offense, and be bound by such admission.—Kearse v. State, 151 S. W. 327.

§ 413 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a trial for burglary followed by an attempt to suicide, evidence that defendant told his foster mother the day after the crime that he did not know how the wound in his throat was inflicted and that it was not self-inflicted, being self-serving, was properly excluded.—Shaffer v. State, 151 S. W. 1061.

§ 413 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where accused did not testify, declarations made to third persons could not be proved because self-serving.—Byrd v. State, 151 S. W. 1068.

§ 417 (Tex.Cr.App.) An entry of date of birth made in a family Bible at or about the time of birth, is admissible to prove the date of birth, when the father who made the entry testifies that it was made contemporaneous with the event.—Bigliben v. State, 151 S. W. 1044.

§§ 419, 420 (Tex.Cr.App.) It was not error to refuse to permit defendant to testify that C. told him that he had seen two cattle of S.'s brand, and not the brand of deceased, in a certain pasture, it appearing that deceased had told cattle to the man who placed the cattle in the pasture, the testimony being hearsay.—Kelly v. State, 151 S. W. 304.

§§ 419, 420 (Tex.Cr.App.) The owner of the store burglarized was not entitled to testify to what he had been told by his clerk, who first discovered the burglary.—Walker v. State, 151 S. W. 822.

§§ 419, 420 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for slander, evidence of a witness as to what he had been told by an unidentified boy held inadmissible as hearsay.—Elder v. State, 151 S. W. 1052.

§§ 419, 420 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a trial for burglary accompanied by an assault upon a young woman, evidence that defendant told his foster mother of his engagement to the young woman soon after it occurred and some months before the offense was hearsay.—Shaffer v. State, 151 S. W. 1061.

In a trial for burglary followed by an attempt to suicide, evidence that defendant told his foster mother the day after the crime that he did not know how the wound on his throat was inflicted, and that it was not self-inflicted, being hearsay, was properly excluded.—Id.

Evidence of conversations between defendant's foster mother and the officers about their finding blood and a handkerchief saturated with blood held properly excluded in a prosecution for burglary followed by assault and attempt to suicide.—Id.

Defendant's testimony as to what the newspapers had published regarding the crime was properly excluded where he stated that all his information was hearsay.—Id.

§ 421 (Tex.Cr.App.) On the issue of insanity, a witness was not entitled to testify over objection to what third persons had told him respecting the defendant's acts or conduct.—Montgomery v. State, 151 S. W. 813.

(G) Acts and Declarations of Conspirators and Codefendants.

§ 422 (Mo.) It is not necessary that coconspirators be indicted and tried together, in order to render the acts and declarations of one admissible against the others.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage, & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

(H) Documentary Evidence and Exclusion of Parol Evidence Thereby.

§ 439 (Tex.Cr.App.) On an issue of defendant's insanity he was not entitled to introduce in evidence a chapter in a standard medical work on mental and nervous diseases.—Montgomery v. State, 151 S. W. 813.

§ 442 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for seduction, evidence by the prosecutrix that certain letters were written by defendant to her rendered them admissible.—Bishop v. State, 151 S. W. 821.

§ 444 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where an entry of date of birth made in a family Bible at or about the time of birth is offered to prove the date of birth, and the father is in court, and the entry is shown to be in his handwriting, he must be called to testify that it was made contemporaneous with the event.—Bigliben v. State, 151 S. W. 1044.

§ 447 (Ark.) Testimony of justice of the peace that a judgment entry, offered to show conviction of a witness for petit larceny, was intended by him as such a conviction held properly excluded, where the entry did not show such conviction.—Wilkerson v. State, 151 S. W. 518.

(I) Opinion Evidence.

§ 472 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a homicide case, where defendant contended that deceased had cut him immediately before the shooting, an answer by a qualified physician to the question, "If a man so cut should get up and walk 15 feet and turn around, would the presence of blood have appeared on his face?" was admissible.—Kelly v. State, 151 S. W. 304.

§ 474 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the defense was insanity resulting from a blow, the court properly permitted a doctor who treated defendant to testify that there was no evidence of concussion.—Shaffer v. State, 151 S. W. 1061.

§ 480 (Mo.) The sustaining of an objection, unless the witness further qualified himself, to a question asked a doctor as to whether in his opinion accused could have had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix, was proper where the witness had stated that he had paid but little attention to the girl and was hardly qualified to answer.—State v. Donnington, 151 S. W. 975.

§ 485 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the defense was insanity, a hypothetical question asked by the state properly included the substance of testimony given by the chief of police as to defendant's condition, and statements made by him after his arrest.—Shaffer v. State, 151 S. W. 1061.

§ 489 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where, in an incest case, a doctor testified, on cross-examination by accused that penetration to a certain depth would injure the hymen, it was not improper for the state to adduce, on redirect examination, that women had become impregnated without destroying the hymen.—Drake v. State, 151 S. W. 315.

§ 494 (Mo.) The jury had a right to find that an abortion four weeks after the use of instruments on the womb of prosecutrix was caused thereby, notwithstanding uncontradicted expert testimony that it could not have been so caused.—State v. Stapp, 151 S. W. 971.

(J) Testimony of Accomplices and Codefendants.

§ 507 (Tex.Cr.App.) On a trial for incest, prosecutrix held an accomplice as a matter of law, so that her testimony, to support a conviction, must be corroborated by connecting accused with the offense on the occasion alleged.—Burford v. State, 151 S. W. 538.

§ 507 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where one receives money from an officer to bring about the commission of a crime, and he does so, he is an accomplice within the rule requiring corroboration; but, where he believes that a crime is in contemplation and he takes steps to detect the crime, he is not an accomplice.—Bush v. State, 151 S. W. 554.

(K) Confessions.

§ 518 (Tex.Cr.App.) The fact that defendant by request takes persons to the place where they find the dead body is admissible in evidence, although he was under arrest and unwarned.—Ortiz v. State, 151 S. W. 1056.

Evidence that the defendant, while under arrest and unwarned, gave information from which the officers found decedent's watch, a fruit of the crime, was properly admitted.—Id.

§ 532 (Tex.Cr.App.) As preliminary to proof of a confession, and as fixing its time, it was proper to ask the prosecuting witness when he heard that his store was burglarized.—Whorton v. State, 151 S. W. 300.

(M) Weight and Sufficiency.

§ 552 (Tex.Cr.App.) To support a conviction on circumstantial evidence, each fact necessary to establish guilt must be proven, and the facts must be consistent with guilt and inconsistent with any other reasonable hypothesis.—Yarborough v. State, 151 S. W. 545.

Suspicious circumstances alone are not sufficient upon which to base a conviction.—Id.

XI. TIME OF TRIAL AND CONTINUANCE.

§ 589 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where it appeared that an appeal was pending from defendant's conviction upon the same facts as an accessory, his motion for a postponement until the final disposition of such former case should have been granted.—Harrison v. State, 151 S. W. 552.

§ 594 (Ark.) A continuance for absent witnesses is properly refused, where the court was warranted in finding that the attendance of such witnesses could not be procured.—Williams v. State, 151 S. W. 1011.

§ 594 (Tex.Cr.App.) Defendant's motion for a continuance until his fugitive partner in the crime who had been jointly indicted with him should be apprehended until they could agree upon the severance of the case was properly refused.—Ortiz v. State, 151 S. W. 1056.

§ 594 (Tex.Cr.App.) It was not error to refuse a continuance sought because of the absence of defendant's fugitive partner in the crime.—Ortiz v. State, 151 S. W. 1059.

§ 595 (Ky.) Testimony expected from defendant's absent witnesses on his prosecution for shooting with intent to kill, that the person shot had his hand in his pocket when defendant fired, and that he had threatened to kill defendant on sight, which threat was known to defendant, held material.—Breedon v. Commonwealth, 151 S. W. 407.

§ 595 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for being an accomplice to arson, a continuance held improperly refused, where a witness who would contradict the testimony of the principal on a material fact had not been summoned.—Baggett v. State, 151 S. W. 560.

§ 595 (Tex.Cr.App.) An application for a continuance for absence of a witness, concerning whose testimony accused was not advised until the morning the application was filed, when the case was called for trial, held properly denied, where the evidence was immaterial.—Stanton v. State, 151 S. W. 808.

§ 596 (Ark.) The refusal of a continuance on account of the absence of a witness who would have testified as to threats made by deceased was not improper, where there was other evidence to that effect.—Williams v. State, 151 S. W. 1011.

§ 598 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where accused did not obtain process for witnesses or place the same in the hands of the officers until over a month after the finding of the indictment, a continuance on the ground of the absence of witnesses was properly denied.—Hogue v. State, 151 S. W. 805.

§ 598 (Tex.Cr.App.) A continuance for an absent witness held properly denied because of absence of diligence on the part of accused to procure his attendance.—Ward v. State, 151 S. W. 1073.

§ 600 (Ky.) Under Cr. Code Prac. § 189, providing for a continuance for the absence of a material witness, unless the commonwealth's attorney admits the facts sought to be proved where the commonwealth's attorney refused to admit the facts offered the refusal of a continuance was error.—Breedon v. Commonwealth, 151 S. W. 407.

§ 600 (Tex.Cr.App.) The state, to avoid a continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness for accused, must admit that the testimony of the absent witness is true.—Burford v. State, 151 S. W. 538.

§ 608 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the defendant filed an application for a continuance, naming a number of witnesses, which the court overruled, it was proper to allow the state to show the presence of the witnesses in court.—Kelly v. State, 151 S. W. 804.

XII. TRIAL.

(B) Course and Conduct of Trial in General.

§ 650 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for burglary, the owner of the store held entitled to illustrate with a stick the condition of the bar of the door that had been entered, and the door.—Walker v. State, 151 S. W. 822.

§ 655 (Tex.Cr.App.) It was proper for the court to admonish counsel for accused before the jury for an improper statement.—Drake v. State, 151 S. W. 315.

§ 657 (Tex.Cr.App.) It was not error in the absence of a jury to punish counsel for contempt in refusing to obey the court's rulings in excluding questions of a certain nature.—Shaffer v. State, 151 S. W. 1061.

(C) Reception of Evidence.

§ 665 (Tex.Cr.App.) It is within the discretion of the trial court to permit a witness who was placed under the rule and who heard the testimony to testify.—Woods v. State, 151 S. W. 296.

§ 666 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where defendant relied on eyewitnesses of the killing to prove self-defense, the state was not required to call and vouch for such witnesses.—Pugh v. State, 151 S. W. 546.

§ 673 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where defendant's testimony, introduced without objection, tended strongly to show his motive in killing deceased, a refusal to limit such testimony to the question of his credit as a witness was proper.—Brock v. State, 151 S. W. 801.

§ 675 (Tex.Cr.App.) Exclusion of cumulative evidence of accused's good character held not error.—Drake v. State, 151 S. W. 315.

§ 683 (Tex.Cr.App.) Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 698, the court, after defendant had rested, properly allowed the state to introduce eyewitnesses of the killing, and examine them generally.—Montgomery v. State, 151 S. W. 813.

(E) Arguments and Conduct of Counsel.

§ 717 (Tex.Cr.App.) Whether the state's counsel shall be permitted to read cases and discuss law to the trial court is within the court's sound discretion.—Davis v. State, 151 S. W. 313.

§ 721½ (Tex.Cr.App.) The state's attorney may in his argument to the jury comment on the absence of a witness for accused.—Ward v. State, 151 S. W. 1073.

§ 722½ (Tex.Cr.App.) In a criminal prosecution, questions by the state's attorney on cross-examination of witnesses held improper because of references to defendant's former conviction.—Bishop v. State, 151 S. W. 821.

§ 728 (Tex.Cr.App.) In the absence of a requested charge, remarks of the counsel for the state excepted to present no error.—Kelly v. State, 151 S. W. 304.

§ 730 (Tex.Cr.App.) Side remarks of the state's attorney did not constitute error where the court instructed the jury to disregard them.—Shaffer v. State, 151 S. W. 1061.

§ 730 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where accused objected to the remarks of the district attorney, and the court at once reprimanded him and directed the jury not to consider the remarks, and also gave the charge requested by accused, the remarks did not call for a reversal.—Byrd v. State, 151 S. W. 1068.

(F) Province of Court and Jury in General.

§ 736 (Tex.Cr.App.) A confession alleging that it was voluntarily made after due warning was not inadmissible, though accused's evidence raised an issue as to its voluntary character and his knowledge of its contents; that issue being for the jury.—Drake v. State, 151 S. W. 315.

§ 736 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the evidence in no way connected a witness with the crime charged, he was not an accomplice, so as to require the submission of the question whether he was an accomplice.—Tate v. State, 151 S. W. 825.

§ 761 (Mo.) In a prosecution for obtaining property by false pretenses, an instruction held not improper as invading the province of the jury.—State v. Lovan, 151 S. W. 141.

§ 761 (Tex.Cr.App.) A criticism of an instruction on self-defense, in that it "required the jury to believe the threats were made," is without merit, where it was not disputed that threats were made.—Kelly v. State, 151 S. W. 304.

§ 761 (Tex.Cr.App.) A charge assuming as a fact that defendants or one of them was in the wrong from the beginning, and had assaulted the prosecuting witness with unlawful intent, when such conduct of defendants was a disputed issue, was erroneous.—Young v. State, 151 S. W. 1048.

§ 763, 764 (Tex.Cr.App.) A charge on defendant's explanation of his possession of the alleged stolen articles held not improper as a comment on the evidence.—Coggins v. State, 151 S. W. 311.

§ 763, 764 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the state introduced threats by accused to kill deceased, the refusal of defendant's requested instruction that if such threats were made with no intention of taking the life of deceased, or were made in a jocular manner, they should not be considered, was properly refused, as invading the province of the jury to judge of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of the evidence.—Brock v. State, 151 S. W. 801.

(G) Necessity, Requisites, and Sufficiency of Instructions.

§ 772 (Tex.Cr.App.) An instruction to convict if the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the offense charged at the time stated was not misleading, in that it did not require the jury to find that the offense was committed in the town and precinct charged in the information.—Walker v. State, 151 S. W. 318.

§ 773 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the defense was insanity produced by a blow, giving of instructions that insanity is a disease, and refusal of defendant's requested instruction on insanity, held not error.—Shaffer v. State, 151 S. W. 1061.

§ 783 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the state on the cross-examination of a witness sought to impeach him by proof of contradictory statements based on his testimony before the grand jury, an instruction that the testimony before the grand jury could only be used to impeach the witness was proper.—Kearse v. State, 151 S. W. 827.

§ 784 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where a witness testified that defendant admitted to him that he was guilty, it was not necessary to charge on circumstantial evidence.—Whorton v. State, 151 S. W. 300.

§ 785 (Mo.) It was not error to refuse a requested instruction that the fact that prosecutrix, on a prosecution for abortion, was implicated, might be taken into consideration in determining credibility; the instruction not being a legal proposition, but merely a comment on the evidence.—State v. Stapp, 151 S. W. 971.

§ 785 (Tex.Cr.App.) Evidence which merely laid a predicate for the impeachment of certain witnesses held insufficient to require an instruction that it could be considered only for impeachment.—Pugh v. State, 151 S. W. 546.

§ 789 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for slander, defendant held entitled to an instruction that, before he could be convicted, the jury must find beyond a reasonable doubt that the statements were false, and were maliciously and wantonly made.—Elder v. State, 151 S. W. 1052.

§ 792 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the evidence showed that two persons participated in the offense, a charge on the law of principals was applicable.—Coggins v. State, 151 S. W. 311.

§ 792 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for burglary, evidence held to authorize an instruction on principals.—Walker v. State, 151 S. W. 822.

§ 800 (Tex.Cr.App.) An instruction on insanity in a prosecution for homicide was not objectionable for failure to define the words "lucid interval."—Montgomery v. State, 151 S. W. 813.

§ 806 (Tex.Cr.App.) The law as to insanity having been fully charged in a prosecution for homicide, the court was not bound to qualify paragraphs dealing with murder in the first and second degrees by referring to the charge on insanity.—Montgomery v. State, 151 S. W. 813.

§ 814 (Ky.) The court should not give an instruction on a theory of the case that is without evidence to sustain it.—Gamble v. Commonwealth, 151 S. W. 924.

§ 814 (Tex.Cr.App.) Instruction on a trial for manslaughter as to what would constitute adequate cause held improper, because inapplicable to the evidence.—Edwards v. State, 151 S. W. 294.

§ 814 (Tex.Cr.App.) An instruction, not called for by the evidence, was properly refused.—Davis v. State, 151 S. W. 313.

§ 814 (Tex.Cr.App.) Instruction in a prosecution for a gift of intoxicating liquors on election day held not erroneous for failure to state the purpose of the election, where the information stated the purpose, and the evidence did not put in issue its legality.—Walker v. State, 151 S. W. 318.

§ 814 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the evidence clearly showed nighttime burglary, and the court instructed to acquit if it was a nighttime burglary, the submission of the issue of nighttime burglary alone was not error, though daytime burglary was also charged in the indictment.—Shaffer v. State, 151 S. W. 1061.

§ 822 (Tex.Cr.App.) It is not necessary that all the law be embodied in a single paragraph in the charge; but all objections to separate paragraphs are to be considered with reference to the charge as a whole.—Pinson v. State, 151 S. W. 556.

§ 823 (Ky.) Error in an instruction defining murder and aiding and abetting, arising from the failure to give defendant actually firing the fatal shot the benefit of the plea of self-defense, is cured by an instruction defining the right of self-defense and giving each of the defendants the full benefit thereof.—Gross v. Commonwealth, 151 S. W. 36.

(H) Requests for Instructions.

§ 824 (Tex.Cr.App.) The words "mitigate, excuse, or justify," used in a charge defining murder of the second degree, have a well-understood meaning, and, in the absence of a request, it was not necessary for the court to define them.—Kelly v. State, 151 S. W. 304.

§ 824 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for burglary, an instruction on the issue of whether defendant was under arrest at the time he made explanations as to his possession of the alleged stolen property held unnecessary; no special charge having been requested.—Coggins v. State, 151 S. W. 311.

§ 824 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for homicide, the court, in the absence of a request, was not bound to limit the purpose and effect of certain evidence introduced by defendant on the issue of insanity.—Montgomery v. State, 151 S. W. 813.

§ 824 (Tex.Cr.App.) Failure of the court to define the words "carnal knowledge" and "carnally know," as used in an instruction in an incest case, held not error, in the absence of a request therefor.—Drake v. State, 151 S. W. 315.

§ 829 (Tex.Cr.App.) Instruction that, if deceased attacked accused with a weapon calculated to produce murder, maiming, etc., it would be presumed that he intended to murder accused, held not covered by an instruction that, if accused believed his life was in danger, the jury should acquit; there being a legal presumption, under White's Ann. Pen. Code 1911, art. 676, that his life was in danger.—Edwards v. State, 151 S. W. 294.

§ 829 (Tex.Cr.App.) Charges fully covered by the main charge are properly refused.—Whorton v. State, 151 S. W. 300.

§ 829 (Tex.Cr.App.) It is not error to refuse requested charges, the substance of which is covered by instructions given.—Pugh v. State, 151 S. W. 546.

§ 829 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where, in a prosecution for being an accomplice to arson, a court charged generally on corroborative testimony, a refusal to instruct that the testimony of the principal must be corroborated on the point as to his hiring by the defendant held improper.—Baggett v. State, 151 S. W. 560.

§ 829 (Tex.Cr.App.) The refusal of instructions was not erroneous where the court charged in practically the same language, or sufficiently presented the issue in the general charge.—Washington v. State, 151 S. W. 818.

§ 830 (Mo.App.) In an action in which defendant's guilt is required to be established beyond a reasonable doubt, the court must give a proper instruction on the question of reasonable doubt although the one requested is faulty.—Grant City v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 187.

(I) Objections to Instructions or Refusal Thereof, and Exceptions.

(K) Verdict.

§ 871 (Tex.Cr.App.) The verdict need not be signed by the foreman or any others of the jury, even in a felony case.—Mackey v. State, 151 S. W. 802.

XIII. MOTIONS FOR NEW TRIAL AND IN ARREST.

§ 942 (Tex.Cr.App.) A new trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence which is solely impeaching in character.—Pinson v. State, 151 S. W. 556.

§ 945 (Tex.Cr.App.) Discrepancy between the testimony of a doctor on motion for new trial and his testimony at an incest trial held not ground for a new trial, where the first testimony was corroborated by other evidence and accused's confession.—Drake v. State, 151 S. W. 315.

§ 949 (Tex.Cr.App.) A conviction will not be set aside because accused, as shown by his verification alone, was taken by surprise, in that his attorneys refused to go into the case at the last moment, and before he had opportunity to employ other counsel.—Giles v. State, 151 S. W. 1043.

§ 954 (Tex.Cr.App.) Objections, in a motion for a new trial, to paragraphs of the charge are unavailable, where they do not point out the specific defect objected to.—Pinson v. State, 151 S. W. 556.

§ 954 (Tex.Cr.App.) Objections to the charge in a motion for new trial, which do not set out the specific error, are insufficient.—Gage v. State, 151 S. W. 565.

§ 956 (Tex.Cr.App.) A motion for new trial on the ground that a witness would testify as claimed by accused, unsupported by affidavit of accused or of the witness, or of any excuse for failure to have him so testify on the trial held properly denied.—Bellew v. State, 151 S. W. 542.

58 (Tex.Cr.App.) A new trial for newly overed evidence was properly denied, where affidavits accompanying it indicated a lack diligence.—Pinson v. State, 151 S. W. 556.

70 (Tex.Cr.App.) An information charge a gift of intoxicating liquor on election was not ground for arrest of judgment, but it also charged that defendant informed the donee of the whereabouts of the liquor. —Walker v. State, 151 S. W. 318.

IV. APPEAL AND ERROR, AND CERTIORARI

Presentation and Reservation in Lower Court of Grounds of Review.

028 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where a motion to have an indictment was verbal, and not by the defendant's attorney and the court in open court, and ruled on by the court in open court, no question of its insufficiency is presented for review.—Simpson v. State, 151 S. W. 308.

036 (Ark.) Where accused neither objected to the testimony of a witness, nor moved it be excluded, he could not complain of error on appeal, though the court erred in admitting the evidence.—Wilkerson v. State, 151 S. W. 518.

037 (Tex.Cr.App.) Statements of state's counsel are not presented for review in the absence of an objection at the time or a request for an instruction thereon.—Wagoner v. State, 151 S. W. 313.

059 (Tex. Cr. App.) Under Code Cr. Proc., art. 743, an exception to a charge in a criminal case must specifically point out the error.—Byrd v. State, 151 S. W. 1068.

059 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where a special charge refused and accused excepts thereto, taking bill of exceptions, not giving any reason why could have been given, and in the motion for new trial merely complains of the refusal to give the charge, the court will not consider the question.—Ward v. State, 151 S. W. 1073. In a misdemeanor case, the charge of the offense can only be attacked by specially excepting to any omission therein at the time of the giving of the charge and requesting a written charge covering the point, and specially excepting to its refusal assigning the reasons therefor.—Id.

064 (Tex.Cr.App.) A motion for new trial on the ground that the court erred in sustaining an objection to evidence and in refusing admission to accused's attorney to state the facts on which the evidence was admissible is not to raise the question that court erred in refusing to permit accused's attorney to state the time what he expected to prove.—Kearse v. State, 151 S. W. 827.

Proceedings for Transfer of Cause, and Effect Thereof.

076 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where an appeal bond, filed in the record, is not in compliance with Cr. Proc. 1895, arts. 903 and 904, relating to terms thereof, the appeal will be dismissed.—Kearse v. State, 151 S. W. 1053.

081 (Tex.Cr.App.) A recitation, at the end of a sentence, that as defendant had given exception of appeal the judgment would be reversed, was not a sufficient entry of notice of appeal.—Raines v. State, 151 S. W. 811.

Record and Proceedings Not in Record.

086 (Tex.Cr.App.) Alleged error in the admission of evidence cannot be considered, where the record does not show that it was objected to at the time of its introduction, or that it was any motion made to exclude it.—Kearse v. State, 151 S. W. 801.

088 (Tex.Cr.App.) The bill of exceptions containing the argument of the state's attorney must show the circumstances under which the argument was made, and that accused requested a charge directing the jury to disregard the argument and the refusal of the court to give any charge.—Ward v. State, 151 S. W. 1073.

§ 1090 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the record contains no bills of exception to the admission of testimony, the error in its admission cannot be reviewed.—Coggins v. State, 151 S. W. 311.

§ 1090 (Tex.Cr.App.) Denial of a motion to strike all the testimony down to the close of the state's case could not be reviewed, in the absence of a bill of exceptions.—Pugh v. State, 151 S. W. 546.

§ 1090 (Tex.Cr.App.) That the court required accused in a homicide case to go to trial without a special venire could not be reviewed, in the absence of a bill of exceptions.—Pinson v. State, 151 S. W. 556.

§ 1090 (Tex.Cr.App.) Unless defendants, in a misdemeanor case, take a bill of exceptions to the admission of evidence, the question of its admissibility cannot be held reversible.—Mackey v. State, 151 S. W. 802.

§ 1090 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where no bills of exceptions are reserved, matters complaining of the admission of certain testimony cannot be considered.—Alexander v. State, 151 S. W. 807.

§ 1090 (Tex.Cr.App.) Grounds of a motion for new trial relating to the admission and exclusion of evidence cannot be reviewed, in the absence of bills of exception.—Stone v. State, 151 S. W. 811.

§ 1090 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where there is neither a statement of facts nor bill of exceptions in the record, assignments in the motion for new trial are not reviewable.—Lodge v. State, 151 S. W. 812.

§ 1090 (Tex.Cr.App.) The denial of an application for a continuance will not be reviewed in the absence of a bill of exceptions, especially where other errors necessitate a new trial at which the attendance of the absent witness may be obtained.—Washington v. State, 151 S. W. 818.

§ 1090 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where there is neither statement of facts nor bills of exceptions no question is raised on appeal.—Gaston v. State, 151 S. W. 1048.

§ 1090 (Tex.Cr.App.) The sufficiency of the evidence to support a conviction cannot be reviewed, where the record contains no statement of facts or bills of exception.—Gerron v. State, 151 S. W. 1048.

Rulings on the admission of evidence cannot be reviewed, where the bills of exception thereto are not contained in the record.—Id.

§ 1090 (Tex.Cr.App.) Questions raised in a motion for new trial cannot be considered, where there is neither statement of facts nor bill of exceptions in the record.—Corbin v. State, 151 S. W. 1051.

§ 1090 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the record does not contain any bills of exception, failure of the court to charge on a plea of temporary insanity cannot be reviewed.—Featherstone v. State, 151 S. W. 1055.

Nor can the exclusion of evidence be reviewed.—Id.

§ 1090 (Tex.Cr.App.) The refusal of a continuance cannot be reviewed where there is no bill of exceptions to the point.—Ortiz v. State, 151 S. W. 1059.

Error in the admission of evidence cannot be considered where it was not shown by a bill of exceptions.—Id.

§ 1091 (Tex.Cr.App.) On appeal from a conviction of violating the intoxicating liquor laws, bills of exception held insufficient to require consideration.—Woods v. State, 151 S. W. 296.

A bill of exceptions reserved to the reading of an entry in a stub book relating to liquor license held not to show error because not showing that the entry was introduced in evidence.—Id.

In a prosecution for sales of intoxicating liquor on Sunday, a bill of exceptions complaining of the admission of testimony by a witness that he got a pint of whisky for a sick man, taken by itself, shows no error.—Id.

§ 1091 (Tex.Cr.App.) On appeal from conviction for unlawfully carrying a pistol, a bill of exceptions held not to sufficiently state the status of the case to show that the admission of evidence was erroneous.—McCrary v. State, 151 S. W. 812.

§ 1091 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the bill of exceptions included evidence, some of which was clearly admissible, and none of which was clearly inadmissible, it was too general for consideration.—Ortiz v. State, 151 S. W. 1066.

The bill of exceptions should be sufficiently full as to disclose the error and prejudice therefrom and to overcome the legal presumption of the correctness of the trial court's rulings.—Id.

§ 1091 (Tex.Cr.App.) Error held not presented by a bill complaining of witnesses' violation of rule where the court qualified the bill by stating that the witnesses were out of sight and hearing of the witness on the stand.—Shaffer v. State, 151 S. W. 1061.

A bill showing the exclusion of questions whether defendant had fights when he was a boy did not show error where it did not state what the witness would have testified.—Id.

A bill complaining of the exclusion of evidence presented no error where it failed to give such a statement of the case or questions as to show that defendant was injured by the exclusion.—Id.

§ 1091 (Tex.Cr.App.) A bill of exceptions complaining of the refusal to require the state to indorse on the indictment the names of its witnesses does not present error where the court states that the indictment contained the indorsement of all the main witnesses.—Byrd v. State, 151 S. W. 1068.

§ 1092 (Mo.App.) Extension of time to file bill of exceptions to the last day of the next term held to give defendant until the last day of the second term thereafter where the first term was not held owing to the absence of the judge.—Grant City v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 187.

§ 1092 (Tex.Cr.App.) The court's approval of a bill of exceptions reciting the objection is not a certificate of the fact on which the objection was based, but merely of the exception.—Woods v. State, 151 S. W. 296.

§ 1092 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where defendant presented his bill of exceptions, which the court refused to sign because not full and correct, and defendant did not have his bills proved by bystanders, they will not be considered.—Kelly v. State, 151 S. W. 304.

§ 1092 (Tex.Cr.App.) Under Code Cr. Proc. 1911, art. 744 (Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 2058 et seq.), the judge may prepare a bill of exceptions where the bill presented by accused is incorrect, and, where the bill as prepared by the judge is not questioned, the court on appeal is bound thereby.—Kearse v. State, 151 S. W. 827.

§ 1093 (Tex.Cr.App.) A bill of exceptions stating that certain testimony was "leading, too general, and prejudicial," but which failed to show in what connection the evidence was offered, is too vague to present a question for review.—Black v. State, 151 S. W. 1053.

§ 1097 (Tex.Cr.App.) In the absence of a statement of facts, a question, raised by motion for new trial, that the verdict and judgment were contrary to the law and evidence, cannot be reviewed.—Quentes v. State, 151 S. W. 301.

§ 1097 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the motion for a new trial raised questions which could only be considered in connection with a statement of facts, the conviction must be affirmed in its absence.—Serson v. State, 151 S. W. 541.

§ 1097 (Tex.Cr.App.) Questions presented in the motion for new trial are not reviewable, where there is no statement of facts in the record.—Kincaid v. State, 151 S. W. 541.

§ 1097 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where there is no statement of facts in the record, the refusal of a requested charge is not reviewable.—Williams v. State, 151 S. W. 542.

§ 1097 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the record on appeal from a conviction of murder in the first degree contains no statement of facts, the refusal to submit a lesser degree cannot be reviewed on appeal.—Morgan v. State, 151 S. W. 1048.

§ 1097 (Tex.Cr.App.) Questions attempted to be raised by motion for new trial cannot be considered without a statement of facts.—Chester v. State, 151 S. W. 1051.

§ 1099 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the testimony relied upon as a ground for a new trial was not filed until after adjournment of the term, such ground could not be reviewed.—Drake v. State, 151 S. W. 315.

§ 1101 (Tex. Cr. App.) Where an appellant was deprived of a statement of facts without his fault, a reversal is warranted.—Lyster v. State, 151 S. W. 302.

§ 1109 (Tex.Cr.App.) An appellant who accepts a bill of exceptions as qualified is bound by its qualification.—Coggins v. State, 151 S. W. 311.

§ 1114 (Tex.Cr.App.) The court on appeal may only look to the authenticated record in considering the case on appeal, or any question raised or presented therein.—Kearse v. State, 151 S. W. 827.

§ 1114 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the record on appeal does not contain the testimony or bills of exceptions, the questions whether an issue was material and whether accused was entitled to have the jury pass on certain testimony will not be considered.—Giles v. State, 151 S. W. 1043.

§ 1120 (Tex.Cr.App.) The sustaining of objections to questions propounded is not reviewable, where the answers to the questions are not stated in the record and the record does not state what could have been proven.—Bigliben v. State, 151 S. W. 1044.

§ 1120 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the record on appeal shows questions to a witness, but no answer, it presents no question for review.—Black v. State, 151 S. W. 1053.

§ 1120 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the record does not contain the evidence, the exclusion of evidence cannot be reviewed.—Featherstone v. State, 151 S. W. 1055.

§ 1120 (Tex.Cr.App.) Bill held not to show question asked of witness to be leading and suggestive where the witness' answer was not given.—Shaffer v. State, 151 S. W. 1061.

§ 1121 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the record does not contain the evidence, its sufficiency to support a conviction cannot be reviewed.—Featherstone v. State, 151 S. W. 1055.

§ 1122 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the record does not contain the evidence, the failure of the court to charge on a plea of temporary insanity cannot be reviewed.—Featherstone v. State, 151 S. W. 1055.

(E) Assignment of Errors and Briefs.

§ 1129 (Tex.Cr.App.) An assignment of error, on the ground that "the court erred in its charge to the jury in defining manslaughter" is too general to require attention.—Alexander v. State, 151 S. W. 807.

(F) Dismissal, Hearing, and Rehearing.

§ 1131 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where defendant, after appealing from a conviction and filing the transcript, escaped, the appeal will be dismissed.—Tate v. State, 151 S. W. 541.

§ 1131 (Tex.Cr.App.) An appeal dismissed because of an insufficient recognizance will be reinstated on motion on the filing of a proper recognizance.—White v. State, 151 S. W. 826.

§ 1131 (Tex.Cr.App.) The rules of the Court of Criminal Appeals require that a request to withdraw accused's appeal must be signed in person and sworn to by accused.—Jennings v. State, 151 S. W. 1050.

(G) Review.

§ 1137 (Ky.) Accused may not complain of evidence brought out on the cross-examination of a state's witness.—Gamble v. Commonwealth, 151 S. W. 924.

§ 1144 (Tex.Cr.App.) The court reviewing the denial of a continuance for absence of witnesses will, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, presume that accused was arrested on the day the indictment was found or a day or two thereafter, and, to establish diligence, he must show that he procured process for the witnesses at once, or within a few days.—Hogue v. State, 151 S. W. 805.

§ 1144 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where there was no evidence to show the age of accused charged with aggravated assault on a female, it cannot be presumed that he was over the age of 21 years.—White v. State, 151 S. W. 826.

§ 1159 (Mo.) While it is the province of the jury to weigh the testimony and determine the facts, when the question of the sufficiency of the evidence is properly presented, an appellate court must determine it.—State v. Donnington, 151 S. W. 975.

§ 1159 (Tex.Cr.App.) The jury are the exclusive judges of the facts proved, and of the weight of the testimony, and the court on appeal may only determine whether there is sufficient evidence, if believed, to sustain the verdict.—Kearse v. State, 151 S. W. 827.

§ 1159 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the testimony is unsatisfactory, yet, if true, would with the facts support the verdict, it will not be disturbed.—Black v. State, 151 S. W. 1053.

§ 1159 (Tex.Cr.App.) The jury are the exclusive judges of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of their testimony, and the court on appeal will consider only whether the evidence is sufficient as a matter of law, if believed, to sustain a conviction.—Hogue v. State, 151 S. W. 805.

§ 1165 (Tex.Cr.App.) An erroneous ruling which actually or probably led to a higher punishment than the minimum is reversible error.—Washington v. State, 151 S. W. 818.

§ 1166½ (Tex.Cr.App.) Denial of an objection to jurors summoned in a prosecution for perjury, because they had heard remarks by a court concerning perjury and sentencing a person previously convicted of a different crime, held not error in the absence of prejudice shown.—Craig v. State, 151 S. W. 804.

§ 1166½ (Tex.Cr.App.) The refusal to sustain the trial to prepare, sign and approve a bill of exceptions is not reversible error, where the party complaining is subsequently given a bill in full.—Kearse v. State, 151 S. W. 827.

§ 1166½ (Tex.Cr.App.) Where no objection was made by a juror served in the case, accused could not complain of rulings on challenges to jurors.—Byrd v. State, 151 S. W. 1068.

§ 1168 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where a witness who was improperly permitted to testify was unable to answer the question propounded, the error was harmless.—Woods v. State, 151 S. W. 296.

§ 1169 (Mo.) In a prosecution for false pretenses, a prosecutor's reference to and evidence of another fraudulent transaction involving defendant held prejudicial, though the court afterward withdrew such testimony.—State v. Lovan, 151 S. W. 141.

§ 1169 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for illegal sales of intoxicating liquors, where accused's own witness stated that he owned the saloon, the improper allowance of evidence showing that he was engaged in the saloon business was harmless.—Woods v. State, 151 S. W. 296.

§ 1169 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for burglary, error, if any, in permitting evidence that defendant was 20 years of age, and that his companion was only 18, was harmless, where the jury assessed the minimum punishment.—Whorton v. State, 151 S. W. 300.

§ 1169 (Tex.Cr.App.) Error in permitting a witness to testify to defendant's habits, held harmless, where the jury fixed the minimum punishment.—Davis v. State, 151 S. W. 313.

§ 1169 (Tex.Cr.App.) Admission, in trial for bribing a witness to leave, of details of crimes to which the witness could testify but with which it was not claimed defendant had any connection, held prejudicial.—Harrison v. State, 151 S. W. 552.

§ 1169 (Tex.Cr.App.) The error, if any, in permitting the state on a trial for statutory rape to prove that the mother of prosecutrix was dead at the time of the alleged offense, held not prejudicial, in the absence of any improper use of the testimony.—Kearse v. State, 151 S. W. 827.

§ 1169 (Tex.Cr.App.) The age of a state's witness is immaterial, and the mere fact that a witness is permitted to state his age presents no error.—Byrd v. State, 151 S. W. 1068.

§ 1170 (Tex.Cr.App.) Error in excluding on a trial for statutory rape evidence of the bad reputation of prosecutrix for virtue and chastity is harmless, where it is conceded that she was a lewd woman at the time of the alleged offense.—Kearse v. State, 151 S. W. 827.

§ 1170 (Tex.Cr.App.) It was not error to sustain objection to question as to defendant's general character, conduct, and acts during his lifetime, where the same witness had testified that his reputation as a peaceable, quiet, and law-abiding citizen was good.—Shaffer v. State, 151 S. W. 1061.

Where the defense was insanity, it was not reversible error to refuse to permit a witness who had testified to defendant's appearance after the offense to state whether he looked like an insane man.—Id.

§ 1170½ (Tex.Cr.App.) A bill of exceptions complaining of the allowance of a question whether the witness remembered when the grand jury was summoned and how long before this it was that accused's saloon was open shows no error, where it appears that his answer was in the negative.—Woods v. State, 151 S. W. 296.

§ 1172 (Mo.) Erroneous submission of issue held prejudicial, where evidence to support another issue made it probable that the conviction was on the first issue.—State v. Stapp, 151 S. W. 971.

§ 1172 (Tex.Cr.App.) On a trial for carrying a concealed weapon, the error in a charge held not prejudicial, in view of the evidence and other instructions, where no other verdict than that of guilty could have been rendered.—Carpenter v. State, 151 S. W. 539.

§ 1172 (Tex.Cr.App.) Instruction on a prosecution for unlawfully carrying a pistol did not prejudice accused, though the court used the word "have," instead of "carry."—McCrary v. State, 151 S. W. 812.

§ 1172 (Tex. Cr. App.) An erroneous charge which actually or probably led to a higher punishment than the minimum is reversible error.—Washington v. State, 151 S. W. 818.

§ 1172 (Tex. Cr. App.) An instruction erroneously permitting the jury to consider the testimony of a witness before the grand jury to impeach a witness for the state impeached by such character of testimony was in accused's favor, and he could not complain thereof.—Kearse v. State, 151 S. W. 827.

§ 1173 (Ky.) Under Cr. Code Prac. § 239, which provides that if there be a reasonable doubt of the degree of the offense committed defendant shall only be convicted of the lower degree, the failure to so instruct, when the evidence is calculated to raise such a reasonable doubt, is reversible error.—Breeden v. Commonwealth, 151 S. W. 407.

§ 1173 (Ky.) Accused, convicted of assault on a female under the age of 14 years and sentenced to the penitentiary from 10 to 20 years, held not entitled to complain of the refusal of an instruction submitting a lesser offense, and authorizing on his conviction thereof a penitentiary sentence.—Gamble v. Commonwealth, 151 S. W. 924.

§ 1173 (Tex. Cr. App.) Failure to charge on an issue raised by the testimony introduced by the state held harmless, where the entire evidence showed the guilt of accused.—Coggins v. State, 151 S. W. 311.

II. NOMINAL DAMAGES.

§ 9 (Mo. App.) The breach of a contract gives an absolute right to at least nominal damages; and hence an instruction that, unless defendant's breach caused plaintiff substantial damage, the jury should find for defendant, was erroneous.—Tracy v. Buchanan, 151 S. W. 747.

III. GROUNDS AND SUBJECTS OF COMPENSATORY DAMAGES.

(A) Direct or Remote, Contingent, or Prospective Consequences or Losses.

§ 40 (Ark.) A party agreeing to perform work for another and prevented from so doing by the other may recover the profits which he reasonably would have made if permitted to carry out the contract.—Alf Bennett Lumber Co. v. Walnut Lake Cypress Co., 151 S. W. 275.

(B) Aggravation, Mitigation, and Reduction of Loss.

§ 62 (Mo. App.) In an action for breach of a contract to float logs, where the defendant misled the plaintiff as to his intention to perform, telling him that the water was not yet high enough, until the logs rotted, plaintiff's damages cannot be diminished for his failure to float the logs himself.—Cronan v. Stutsman, 151 S. W. 166.

§ 62 (Tex. Civ. App.) The owner through whose land a railroad company maintains tracks need not minimize the damages caused by trespassing animals by fixing cattle guards and the company's right of way fence.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Lee, 151 S. W. 331.

IV. LIQUIDATED DAMAGES AND PENALTIES.

§ 80 (Mo. App.) Provision in a one-year employment contract for personal services, that the employé should forfeit $250 for breach of same, held a provision for liquidated damages, and not for a penalty.—Myers-Goldberg Neckwear Co. v. Grossman, 151 S. W. 163.

VI. MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

(B) Injuries to Property.

§ 105 (Ky.) The fair "market price" of an article is the usual standard for measuring its value; it being worth what it may be reasonably sold for.—Burke Hollow Coal Co. v. Lawson, 151 S. W. 657.

(C) Breach of Contract.

§ 123 (Ark.) Where work has been done substantially in compliance with the contract, or where there has been an acceptance of the work by the contractee, a contractor may, notwithstanding defects therein, recover the contract price, less the cost of correcting such defects.—Thomas v. Jackson, 151 S. W. 521.

VII. INADEQUATE AND EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

§ 132 (Ark.) A verdict of $1,500 for injury to the ankle of a log scaler was not excessive: he having been confined to his room a month, and at the trial, four months later, testifying his ankle was still stiff, and that he suffered great pains; and there being evidence that the injury was permanent.—Oak Leaf Mill Co. v. Littleton, 151 S. W. 262.

§ 132 (Ark.) Verdict for $25,000 for injury to fireman, necessitating amputation of one leg and resulting in a broken shoulder and permanently incapacitating him for his vocation, held not excessive.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Brogan, 151 S. W. 699.

§ 132 (Ky.) A verdict for $5,500 for injuries to a man's head, hand, and leg held not excessive.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Meyers, 151 S. W. 19.

§ 132 (Ky.) Verdict of $5,000 for personal injuries held not so excessive as to show passion or prejudice.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Goodwin, 151 S. W. 376.

§ 132 (Ky.) Where a female passenger was injured by the jar in the sudden stopping of a train, an award of $7,500 is excessive; it appearing that her present condition might be caused by previous derangements.—Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Rowell, 151 S. W. 950.

§ 132 (Tex.Civ.App.) Ten thousand dollars is not excessive recovery for the crushing of a foot of a child five years and eight months old, which necessitated amputation about halfway between the foot and the knee.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Wininger, 151 S. W. 586.

§ 132 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injuries resulting in the loss of plaintiff's left hand, a verdict allowing him $8,000 held not excessive.—Continental Oil & Cotton Co. v. Gilliam, 151 S. W. 890.

§ 132 (Tex.Civ.App.) Seven thousand five hundred dollars is not excessive recovery for injuries to a logging employé in derailment of a logging train, where he became insane as a result.—Knox v. Robbins, 151 S. W. 1134.

VIII. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, AND ASSESSMENT.

(A) Pleading.

§ 158 (Mo.App.) A petition in an action for personal injuries held to charge internal injury other than to the nervous system, so that proof thereof is admissible.—Haywood v. Kuhn, 151 S. W. 204.

§ 159 (Tex.Civ.App.) A prayer for damages for the operation of a slaughterhouse, etc., for two years next preceding the filing of the petition would not warrant a recovery of damages to the time of trial.—Nations v. Harris, 151 S. W. 334.

(B) Evidence.

§ 163 (Ark.) The party suing to recover profits lost through defendant's breach of a contract has the burden of proving the amount of its damages therefrom.—Alf Bennett Lumber Co. v. Walnut Lake Cypress Co., 151 S. W. 275.

§ 163 (Mo.App.) One who proves damage, but does not give any evidence to prove the amount thereof, can recover only nominal damages.—Cronan v. Stutsman, 151 S. W. 166.

§ 181 (Ky.) Defendant could be examined as to his financial condition, where, under the pleadings, punitive damages might be given, even though the court instructed that no punitive damages were authorized.—Shields' Adm'rs v. Rowland, 151 S. W. 408.

§ 187 (Ark.) Where there was evidence of plaintiff's age, good health, and occupation, the jury could estimate his life expectancy, though no mortuary tables were in evidence.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Brogan, 151 S. W. 699.

§ 189 (Mo.App.) In an action for breach of a contract to float logs, evidence held to warrant a finding that plaintiff had no notice of defendant's abandonment of the contract, so that he was not called upon to perform to lighten the damages.—Cronan v. Stutsman, 151 S. W. 166.

(C) Proceedings for Assessment.

§ 210 (Ark.) An instruction authorizing the jury to find such sum as "in your opinion and judgment will compensate him," is erroneous in not limiting their judgment and opinion to the evidence.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Steed, 151 S. W. 257.

§ 216 (Ark.) Instruction that the jury, in arriving at plaintiff's damages, could consider his expense, held not erroneous, where the evidence definitely limited such expense to a certain sum.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Brogan, 151 S. W. 699.

§ 216 (Mo.App.) An instruction, in an action for personal injuries, held to correctly define the measure of damages.—Haywood v. Kuhn, 151 S. W. 204.

§ 216 (Mo.App.) An instruction, in an action for personal injuries, on the measure of damages is not erroneous because it states the maximum damages the jury may assess if finding a verdict for plaintiff.—Madden v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 489.

§ 216 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for the loss of a foot a charge on loss of earning capacity held proper where the child injured was sound, healthy, and well developed, though there was no specific evidence thereon.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Wininger, 151 S. W. 586.

In an action for injuries to a child, necessitating the amputating of her foot, received while crossing railway tracks, an instruction on an issue of physical and mental suffering held warranted.—Id.

§ 216 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injuries to a servant, an instruction on the measure of damages held not erroneous as authorizing the jury to calculate the amount plaintiff would lose annually for life, and to allow him in such sum.—Continental Oil & Cotton Co. v. Gilliam, 151 S. W. 890.

§ 216 (Tex.Civ.App.) In a personal injury action, an instruction held not erroneous as authorizing double damages.—Knox v. Robbins, 151 S. W. 1134.

(D) Computation and Amount, Double and Treble Damages, and Remission.

§ 228 (Ky.) In an action for damages for personal injuries, the court on motion of plaintiff held authorized to remit an item of damages awarded.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Meyers, 151 S. W. 19.

§ 228 (Tex.Civ.App.) Errors in instructions as to damages are cured by a remittitur of the entire amount of damages.—Nations v. Harris, 151 S. W. 334.

DEATH.

See Abatement and Revival, § 69; Appeal and Error, § 1109; Evidence, § 314; Executors and Administrators, § 87; Landlord and Tenant, § 79; Master and Servant, §§ 278, 279, 286, 291, 295; Municipal Corporations, §§ 803, 816; Negligence, § 122; Pleading, § 433; Railroads, § 398; Trial, § 252.

I. EVIDENCE OF DEATH AND OF SURVIVORSHIP.

§ 4 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action to recover land which plaintiff claimed by devise, where there was testimony that the witness knew the testator in 1862 and understood that he died during the war, such being the report, the word "war" must be understood as the war between the states, and "report" as meaning common rumor.—McDoel v. Jordan, 151 S. W. 1178.

II. ACTIONS FOR CAUSING DEATH.

(A) Right of Action and Defenses.

§ 14 (Mo.App.) The cause of action accruing to the wife for the husband's death while in defendant's employment must be grounded on defendant's negligence in performing or omitting some duty it owed to decedent.—Goode v. Central Coal & Coke Co., 151 S. W. 508.

§ 14 (Tex.Civ.App.) An action against an employer for the death of an employé, caused by the negligence of a coemployé, not occupying the position of a vice principal, is not maintainable under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3017, subd. 2, authorizing an action for death caused by the negligence of another.—Bledsoe v. Thompson Bros. Lumber Co., 151 S. W. 910.

§ 31 (Ky.) Under Const. § 241, vesting an action for death in the personal representative, the distributees have no authority to contract with an attorney in relation thereto.—Slusher v. Weller, 151 S. W. 684.

§ 31 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where plaintiff's father rendered pecuniary assistance to plaintiff's family, and it is reasonably probable that he would have continued to do so, plaintiff may recover for his father's wrongful death.—Freeman v. Morales, 151 S. W. 644.

(B) Jurisdiction, Venue, and Limitations.

§ 35 (Mo.App.) No action for wrongful death occurring in a foreign state can be maintained in the domestic forum, unless the action is allowed by the laws of the foreign state.—Shelton v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 493.

(D) Pleading and Evidence.

§ 52 (Tex.Civ.App.) An allegation that decedent would have continued to render pecuniary aid to plaintiff was not objectionable as alleging remote, argumentative, and speculative damages.—Freeman v. Morales, 151 S. W. 644.

Where the petition, after alleging that plaintiff's decedent earned a certain amount, of which plaintiff received a large part, also alleged that plaintiff was damaged in a certain total sum, an objection to the former allegation as too uncertain was properly overruled.—Id.

§ 72 (Ark.) In an action for negligent death of an infant, brought for the benefit of his parents, evidence of the father's deafness and inability to obtain work was admissible, to show why the father was unemployed and needed his son's assistance.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Jacks, 151 S. W. 706.

§ 76 (Ky.) Evidence held not to show that polluted water from defendant's distillery caused intestate's death.—Thomas' Adm'r v. Eminence Distilling Co., 151 S. W. 47.

It must appear, beyond a mere possibility or a bare probability, that the alleged negligence caused decedent's death in order to recover.—Id.

(E) Damages, Forfeiture, or Fine.

§ 93 (Mo.App.) Rev. St. 1909, § 5427, authorizing a consideration of mitigating or aggravating circumstances in awarding damages in death actions, does not authorize the award of punitive damages, unless there is wantonness or recklessness.—Goode v. Central Coal & Coke Co., 151 S. W. 508.

§ 99 (Ark.) A verdict for $5,000 for the death of a boy 16 years old held not excessive.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Jacks, 151 S. W. 706.

§ 99 (Mo.) An award of $10,000 damages held not excessive for death of a section hand earning $1.25 a day, in absence of showing by defendant that such earning capacity would not have increased.—Ilonea v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 119.

(F) Trial, Judgment, and Review.

§ 103 (Tex.Civ.App.) The question whether pecuniary aid rendered by plaintiff's deceased father to plaintiff's family was primarily in aid of plaintiff, or as a gift to his family, was for the jury.—Freeman v. Morales, 151 S. W. 644.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(D) Delivery.

§ 56 (Tex.) The question of delivery depends on the intention of the grantor; and an actual delivery by him in person is not essential.—Henry v. Phillips, 151 S. W. 533.

Where the intention to deliver is clear, title passes to the grantee, though the grantor retains control of the deed during his lifetime.—Id.

§ 61 (Tex.) A grantor who executed a deed to his stepdaughters, whom he regarded as his own children, and who delivered it to the cashier of a bank for safe-keeping, with instructions to deliver to the grantees after his death, delivered the deed in escrow, and title passed to the grantees.—Henry v. Phillips, 151 S. W. 533.

§ 66 (Tex.) What constitutes a delivery essential to pass title is one of law, but whether there has been in fact a delivery is for the jury.—Henry v. Phillips, 151 S. W. 533.

(E) Validity.

§ 70 (Ky.) The rule that a voluntary conveyance made between parties standing in a confidential relation will be set aside extends to cases where the consideration is so grossly inadequate as to indicate fraud.—Shacklette v. Goodall, 151 S. W. 23.

§ 70 (Tex.Civ.App.) The rule that the failure of a grantee to perform his promises, in consideration of which a deed was executed, is not fraud justifying cancellation of the deed does not apply where the promises are made to defraud, and without any intent at the time of performing them.—Chambers v. Wyatt, 151 S. W. 864.

III. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

(A) General Rules of Construction.

§ 95 (Tex.Civ.App.) A deed which is not attacked for fraud, accident, or mistake should be construed according to its terms.—Morris v. Short, 151 S. W. 633.

§ 96 (Tex.Civ.App.) All citizens in a town were privies to a deed dedicating a section as the site of a town for use as streets, etc., whether the deed was formally accepted or not, so that recitals that a town had been built on the section were admissible in a suit by its citizens to retain the county seat at such place, especially where they themselves put the deed in evidence without limitations.—Ralls v. Parish, 151 S. W. 1080.

A recital in a deed as to its consideration is prima facie evidence on the question.—Id.

(B) Property Conveyed.

§ 114 (Ky.) A deed giving boundaries, which excluded 20 acres of a farm, having concluded said "boundary being known as the N. farm, except one-fourth acre, it being a graveyard with the right to go to and from the same," will be held to include the 20 acres, excepting the quarter acre, which was within the same.—Howard v. Cornett, 151 S. W. 370.

§ 114 (Tex.Civ.App.) A description in a deed as 1,000 acres undivided and part of a larger tract held sufficient to convey the quantity mentioned in whatever portion of the larger tract belonged to the grantor.—Morris v. Short, 151 S. W. 633.

(C) Estates and Interests Created.

§ 120 (Mo.) Evidence held to support a finding that the grantee in a warranty deed conveying the entire legal title acquired the entire beneficial interest, though the grantor had only a one-third beneficial interest.—Daman v. Remme, 151 S. W. 429.

§ 120 (Tex.Civ.App.) A deed absolute on its face cannot be construed as a contract for a contingent interest in the land, in the absence of evidence of a contract different from that imported by the terms of the deed.—Morris v. Short, 151 S. W. 633.

§ 125 (Ky.) Grantees under a deed subject to a life estate, and providing that, on the death of either without bodily heirs, her share should become the absolute property of the survivor, held to take a fee subject to defeasance upon their death within the lifetime of the grantor, but that on surviving the grantor the defeasible estate ripened into a fee simple.—Violet v. Purdy, 151 S. W. 920; Marple v. Banister, Id. 921.

(E) Conditions and Restrictions.

§ 165 (Tex. Civ. App.) Where a deed is absolute on its face, agreements by the grantee to support the grantor for life and pay her a specified sum are covenants only, and a failure to perform them will not alone authorize the cancellation of the deed.—Chambers v. Wyatt, 151 S. W. 864.

IV. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.

§ 196 (Ky.) The mere fact that a grantor was 75 years old when executing deeds to collateral heirs does not raise a presumption of incapacity or undue influence.—Shacklette v. Goodall, 151 S. W. 23.

A conveyance in trust to the grantor's nephew, reciting a money consideration, but in fact given as a reward for services of greater value than the land conveyed, where a confidential relation does not exist, the burden of proving fraud is on the heirs of the grantor seeking to set aside the deed.—Id.

§ 196 (Mo.) Deeds by a grantor, 93 years old, of all his property to a son with whom he was living, for a nominal consideration, created a presumption of undue influence which the son must overcome.—Kincer v. Kincer, 151 S. W. 424.

§ 203 (Tex.) In a suit by the executor to set aside a deed executed by testatrix to her daughter-in-law on the ground of fraud and undue influence, evidence that defendant's attorney had offered to give an heir his share if he would have nothing to do with the case was inadmissible.—Rankin v. Rankin, 151 S. W. 527.

Evidence that her son, grantee's wife did not object to the placing of the land in the inventory of her estate was not error, as it might be pertinent in a chain of circumstantial evidence.—Id.

Where a son procured his mother to make a deed of her land to his wife that he might have the control over it as his own, all evidence which would be admissible if the deed had been made to the son was admissible in a suit by the mother's executrix to set aside the deed.—Id.

§ 203 (Tex.) In an action to set aside deeds executed by a married woman, the certificate of the notary to her acknowledgment is not competent as testimony to show that she knew what land was covered by the deed.—Oar v. Davis, 151 S. W. 794.

§ 211 (Mo.) Where the grantor in a warranty deed delayed more than 20 years before claiming that the deed was secured through fraud, his testimony alone was insufficient to establish such fraud.—Marshall v. Hill, 151 S. W. 131.

§ 211 (Mo.) Evidence held to require a finding that deeds executed by a father to his son were the result of undue influence and invalid.—Kincer v. Kincer, 151 S. W. 424.

I. NATURE AND COURSE IN GENERAL.

§ 9 (Ky.) Under the statute, and independent thereof, the proceeds on the sale of real estate of a lunatic, pursuant to order of court, to satisfy mortgages in which the wife joined are real estate, and on his death the wife is entitled only to dower in the surplus, and not to one-half absolutely.—*McClain v. I. VOLUNTARY.

§ 19 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 1955, the court erred in dismissing an action for the price of land after defendant filed a plea in reconvention for the cancellation of the contract for fraud, and for damages, to the prejudice of defendant to be heard on the plea in reconvention.—Leverette v. Rice, 151 S. W. 594.

DISORDERLY HOUSE.

See Injunction, § 219; Nuisance, §§ 60, 75.

§ 2 (Tenn.) The keeping of a disorderly house is a nuisance, both at common law and under the statute, and the offense is a misdemeanor, for which the ordinary remedy is by criminal proceedings.—Weldner v. Friedman, 151 S. W. 56.

Renting or conducting or being an inmate of a disorderly house is a criminal offense.—Id.

II. GROUNDS.

§ 37 (Mo.App.) Where a husband wrongfully abandoned his wife, she is not guilty of desertion in living apart from him unless he makes a bona fide effort to effect a reconciliation and she refuses and continues to live apart for the statutory period.—Creasey v. Creasey, 151 S. W. 219.

Where a husband abandoned his wife, insincere efforts to return and effect a reconciliation do not militate against a subsequent bona fide effort so as to render her acts a desertion.—Id.

Where a wife offers to return to her husband, who had abandoned her, but who had made numerous efforts to effect a reconciliation, held, that he was entitled to require that she promise to dismiss her action for separate maintenance without losing the benefit of his offers.—Id.

Offers of a deserted wife in her motions for attorney's fees in her action for separate maintenance, to resume marital relations, are not such bona fide offers as to render the husband guilty of desertion.—Id.

Abandonment by the husband does not constitute desertion, if, within one year thereafter, the wife acquiesced in the separation.—Id.

Where a deserted wife refused to return to the husband for more than a year, although he in good faith requested her return, the separation does not entitle her to a divorce.—Id.

III. DEFENSES.

§ 55 (Mo.App.) Rev. St. 1909, §§ 2370, 2372, allowing a divorce to the "injured party," are given the same construction as Rev. St. 1845, c. 53, allowing the "innocent and injured party" a divorce; and where both parties are in fault the court will not attempt to find which is the most in fault, but will award neither the relief sought.—Barth v. Barth, 151 S. W. 769.

IV. JURISDICTION, PROCEEDINGS, AND RELIEF.

(A) Jurisdiction, Venue, and Limitations.

§ 62 (Mo.App.) Under Rev. St. 1909, §§ 2371, 2373, the court has no jurisdiction of a suit for divorce by a nonresident husband for his wife's adultery committed in the state while she resided therein.—McConnell v. McConnell, 151 S. W. 175.

(D) Evidence.

§ 130 (Mo.App.) In an action by a husband for divorce on the ground of indignities rendering his condition intolerable, evidence held to show that he was not an "injured party," within Rev. St. 1909, §§ 2370, 2372, having himself been guilty of improper conduct.—Barth v. Barth, 151 S. W. 769.

§ 133 (Mo.App.) Evidence held to show that a husband's first efforts at reconciliation were not in good faith, but that subsequent efforts and attempts were in good faith.—Creasey v. Creasey, 151 S. W. 219.

Evidence held to establish that a wife consented to her husband's living apart.—Id.

(G) Appeal.

§ 184 (Mo.App.) The Supreme Court in divorce cases will review the evidence and come to its own conclusion as to the facts, to see that a union was not dissolved on slight testimony or for trivial cause.—Barth v. Barth, 151 S. W. 769.

(H) Fees and Costs.

§ 194 (Ky.) Where a wife, appealing from the judgment in her action for divorce, has no means of her own, the costs of the appeal, upon dismissal after the husband's death, must be paid out of his estate.—Barger v. Barger, 151 S. W. 406.

V. ALIMONY, ALLOWANCES, AND DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY.

§ 245 (Mo.App.) Under Rev. St. 1909, § 2351, the court granting a divorce retains jurisdiction as to the modification of the judgment touching the maintenance of the wife.—Wald v. Wald, 151 S. W. 786.

VI. CUSTODY AND SUPPORT OF CHILDREN.

§ 300 (Mo.App.) Where the custody of a child is awarded, the child becomes a ward of the court, and it should not permit its removal into another jurisdiction, unless its best interests require it.—Wald v. Wald, 151 S. W. 786.

§ 303 (Mo.App.) Under Rev. St. 1909, § 2351, the court granting a divorce retains jurisdiction as to the modification of the judgment touching the custody of the child.—Wald v. Wald, 151 S. W. 786.

Where a wife, obtaining a divorce and the custody of the child, is about to remove it from the jurisdiction of the court, the husband is entitled to a hearing to determine whether the best interests of the child require its retention within the jurisdiction of the court.—Id.

See Adverse Possession, § 62; Appeal and Error, §§ 77, 198, 266, 274; Curtesy; Descent and Distribution, § 9; Partition, § 12; Wills, § 782.

I. NATURE AND REQUISITES.

§ 6 (Mo.) A marriage contract, invalid for want of sufficient consideration, could not entitle the widow to any interest in the property of her deceased husband.—Moran v. Stewart, 151 S. W. 439.

§ 13 (Ky.) A widow is entitled to dower in land in which her husband owns a defeasible fee.—Landers v. Landers, 151 S. W. 386.

III. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF WIDOW.

§ 81 (Mo.) Where defendant owned the remainder in two tracts of land subject to the widow's quarantine, dower, and homestead rights, the court properly ordered her dower assigned in both tracts at the same time to avoid multiplicity of suits.—Moran v. Stewart, 151 S. W. 439.

§ 82 (Mo.) The court need not, in a widow's action for dower, give written directions to the valuation commissioners.—Moran v. Stewart, 151 S. W. 439.

§ 99 (Mo.) Since Rev. St. 1909, §§ 374, 6713, do not require written exceptions to the report of commissioners appointed to assign dower, the court may, when written objections are filed, determine the correctness of the report on grounds not mentioned in such objections.—Moran v. Stewart, 151 S. W. 439.

That the court made a preliminary finding that plaintiff was entitled to dower in certain land did not show that the court's approval of the report of the commissioners, by which she was given no part in such land, was erroneous.—Id.

§ 105 (Mo.) Under Rev. St. 1909, § 389, defining the widow's right to dower, a judgment for damages must be against the interest of the party at fault, and a widow was not entitled to damages against a defendant who had not deprived her of possession of the land set off to her as dower.—Moran v. Stewart, 151 S. W. 439.

DRAINS.

See Arbitration and Award, § 27; Constitutional Law, § 290.

I. ESTABLISHMENT AND MAINTENANCE.

§ 14 (Mo.) The legality of the organization of a drainage district cannot be collaterally attacked in an action to collect drainage taxes.—State ex rel. Coleman v. Blair, 151 S. W. 148.

Rev. St. 1909, § 5587, requiring notice of application to incorporate a drainage district to be published in four issues of a weekly paper, the last insertion to be before the day set for hearing, does not require the last publication to be on the last day before the day set for hearing.—Id.

§ 14 (Mo.App.) Where it was sought to defeat payment of drainage assessments, on the ground that the clerk's premature issuance of process in proceedings for organization of the district deprived the county court of jurisdiction, the attack is collateral.—State ex rel. Ryan v. Coles, 151 S. W. 195; Same v. Malone, Id. 197; Same v. Gray, Id. 198.

Though the clerk's record showed that notice for the establishment of a drainage district was given before the making of the report of the viewers, instead of after, as required by law, such proceeding is not invalid on collateral attack; Ann. St. 1906, § 8288, requiring the court to first determine whether the required notice be given.—Id.

II. ASSESSMENTS AND SPECIAL TAXES.

§ 76 (Mo.) Notice of hearing on assessments published February 16th, March 2d, 9th, 16th, pursuant to Rev. St. 1909, § 5587, held constitutional as to an owner residing in another state.—State ex rel. Coleman v. Blair, 151 S. W. 148.

Rev. St. 1909, § 5584, relating to the assessment of benefits in establishing drains, and section 5587, requiring the clerk of the county court to give notice by name to all persons "who it may in any manner be ascertained" own the land affected, do not require the viewers to go to the record to ascertain the owners.—Id.

Since the drainage law does not require the same kind of notice as in ordinary suits to collect back taxes, the sufficiency of the notice of hearing in drainage assessment proceedings must be governed by the drainage law.—Id.

Though an order of the county court directed the clerk to insert notice of assessment of drainage benefits in the "Western Enterprise," insertion in the "Rich Hill Enterprise" was not a fatal variance, where the only paper in the city was designated by both names.—Id.

Notice addressed to "the estate of B., B's heirs," etc., held not objectionable though B's recorded will showed the names of those taking the estate.—Id.

In view of Rev. St. 1909, § 5615, defining "regular session" and "regular meeting" of the county court, it was sufficient, within section 5587, requiring the date of hearing objections to drainage assessments to be fixed at "the next regular term," to fix the date at an adjourned sitting.—Id.

EASEMENTS.

See Landlord and Tenant, § 123; Railroads, § 82.

I. CREATION, EXISTENCE, AND TERMINATION.

§ 1 (Tex.Civ.App.) An easement of way can only be acquired by express grant or by implied grant as a way of necessity or by prescription or limitation.—Williams v. Kuykendall, 151 S. W. 629.

§ 3 (Ky.) Where a grantor of land reserved for himself a way to the highway, such reservation is an appurtenance to the land retained, and passes to the grantor's subsequent grantee, though not expressly mentioned in the deed.—Hatfield v. Hatfield, 151 S. W. 3.

§ 3 (Mo.) An easement created by a partition held to pass as appurtenant and incident to the estates whether the word "appurtenances" be used or not, unless abandoned or extinguished.—Dulce Realty Co. v. Staed Realty Co., 151 S. W. 415.

§ 5 (Ark.) A private way over the land of another may be acquired by adverse user, provided the use has been for the statutory period of seven years under a claim of right, openly, continuously, and adversely.—Medlock v. Owen, 151 S. W. 905.

§ 8 (Tex.Civ.App.) To establish a way by prescription, there must be an adverse user of the same against the owner.—Williams v. Kuykendall, 151 S. W. 629.

§ 9 (Mo.) A beginning of occupation of a private alley by permission with an assertion of an adverse claim of right only a short time before commencement of a suit to enjoin its use held insufficient as a claim of right supporting title by limitations.—Dulce Realty Co. v. Staed Realty Co., 151 S. W. 415.

§ 18 (Tex.Civ.App.) A way of necessity arises where a grantor conveys land not having any outlet save over his remaining land.—Williams v. Kuykendall, 151 S. W. 629.

§ 30 (Mo.) An easement acquired by a deed cannot be lost by mere nonuser.—Dulce Realty Co. v. Staed Realty Co., 151 S. W. 415.

§ 36 (Ky.) A person claiming a right of way across the land of another held to have the burden of showing that the use of such way was under a claim of right, and not by permission.—Cahill v. Mangold, 151 S. W. 373.

Where the use of a right of way is interrupted or controlled by the owner of the land, as a matter of right, this constitutes evidence that the use was permissive only.—Id.

Where a way across another's land is used, without interruption, for many years, it will be presumed that it existed, as a matter of right; and the burden is on the landowner to show that such use was permissive.—Id.

The presumption that the uninterrupted use of a way for many years was one of right may be rebutted by proof of acts showing that the landowner never intended to recognize that the use was other than permissive.—Id.

In an action to enjoin interference with a way across defendant's land, evidence held to support a finding that the previous use of such way by plaintiff was by the owner's permission, and not under a claim of right.—Id.

§ 36 (Tex.Civ.App.) One claiming an easement of way without express grant must establish all of the necessary facts by which the right may be presumed.—Williams v. Kuykendall, 151 S. W. 629.

§ 37 (Ky.) Whether the use of a way across another's land was under a claim of right or by permission is a question of fact.—Cahill v. Mangold, 151 S. W. 373.

II. EXTENT OF RIGHT, USE, AND OBSTRUCTION.

§ 44 (Ky.) A reservation of a passway by a grantor for the benefit of land retained held to give no further right than necessary to reach the highway, and, on change of the highway which made part of the passway unnecessary, the right to that extent was lost.—Hatfield v. Hatfield, 151 S. W. 3.

EJECTION.

See Carriers, §§ 373-383.

EJECTION.

See Appeal and Error, § 1073.

III. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.

§ 86 (Mo.) Where, in ejection, defendant was in possession claiming under a plat of an addition as actually laid out on the ground, plaintiff could not recover except by affirmatively showing a better right.—Dolphin v. Kiann, 151 S. W. 956.

§ 95 (Mo.) Evidence held to justify a finding that a strip of land passed to a senior grantee, and not to a junior grantee of the same grantor.—Strother v. Barrow, 151 S. W. 960.

V. DAMAGES, MESNE PROFITS, IMPROVEMENTS, AND TAXES.

§ 144 (Mo.) A purchaser, sued in ejection by the vendor on default in payment, held entitled only to set off his improvements against the damages, and not to charge them as a lien on the land, under Rev. St. 1909, §§ 2401 et seq.—Montgomery v. Gahagan, 151 S. W. 453.

ELECTION.

See Wills, § 782.

ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

§ 3 (Mo.) The remedy by quo warranto against corporations constituting unlawful combinations in restraint of trade and the remedy by injunction, if any exists, are inconsistent, and cannot be prosecuted at the same time.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

§ 9 (Mo.App.) An unsuccessful action by insured for the premiums paid, on the ground of the insurer's wrongful forfeiture of the policy, does not bar, on the theory of election of remedies, an action by his widow and children for the amount of the policy.—Hartwig v. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 477.

§ 11 (Mo.App.) An election of remedies presupposes the existence of more than one remedy at the time of the election; and where one believes he has a remedy, when he has not, the rule does not apply.—Hartwig v. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 477.

ELECTIONS.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 1027, 1108; Bills and Notes, § 106; Counties, § 35; Criminal Law, § 814; Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 29, 226.

VIII. CONDUCT OF ELECTION.

§ 203 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where a county line had been in dispute for years and it was not shown that any one voting at a voting place situated within the disputed tract was disfranchised at the election, the count of the votes cast at such polling place held not to violate the spirit of the Constitution, though the voting place was situated without the county.—*Ralls v. II. COMPENSATION.

(C) Measure and Amount.

§ 124 (Tenn.) The assessment of compensation in condemnation proceedings should be determined as of the date of the actual taking, rather than of the filing of the petition.—Southern Ry. Co. v. Michaels, 151 S. W. 53.

§ 134 (Tenn.) Damages are not assessable for the value of a pocket in a river formerly used for the storing of logs during the use of the property for sawmill purposes.—Southern Ry. Co. v. Michaels, 151 S. W. 53.

III. PROCEEDINGS TO TAKE PROPERTY AND ASSESS COMPENSATION.

§ 177 (Mo.) The only necessary parties are the city and the owner of the property taken, and not owners of property benefited.—State ex rel. Tuller v. Seehorn, 151 S. W. 724.

§ 256 (Mo.) Under Kansas City Charter, art. 6, §§ 6, 23, relative to proceedings to acquire property for street purposes, persons interested held to have a right of appeal in a supplemental proceeding.—State ex rel. Tuller v. Seehorn, 151 S. W. 724.

I. JURISDICTION, PRINCIPLES, AND MAXIMS.

(A) Nature, Grounds, Subjects, and Extent of Jurisdiction in General.

§ 39 (Mo.) As a rule, a court of equity, upon acquiring jurisdiction for one purpose, will do complete justice, though required to adjudicate matters of law.—Waddle v. Frazier, 151 S. W. 87.

II. LACHES AND STALE DEMANDS.

§ 69 (Mo.App.) A failure to institute an equitable proceeding to redeem a policy of life insurance assigned as security held not barred by laches, though not commenced until after the death of the original assignee, in the absence of a showing of injury, or that the plaintiff had knowledge of his rights and an opportunity to sue before such death or any considerable time before commencement of suit.—Locke v. Bowman, 151 S. W. 468.

§ 71 (Mo.) Where the patentee of public land under an erroneous description transferred it by a warranty deed with the same description, and delayed for 20 years before claiming that the transfer was fraudulent, his grantee's representatives were not guilty of laches in seeking about 10 years thereafter, in response to the patentee's challenge, to establish their title.—Marshall v. Hill, 151 S. W. 131.

Time is an important element in the defense of laches, irrespective of the statute of limitations.—Id.

V. EVIDENCE.

ESCHEAT.

§ 3 (Ky.) In a proceeding to escheat a number of lots because held by a corporation in violation of Const. § 192, held, that certain lots along defendant's right of way used for storage, for residences of section foremen, for the business of shippers, and for the growing of locust trees for ties were not subject to escheat; but that a lot as to which no present or reasonably necessary future use was shown was so subject.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 151 S. W. 934.

§ 6 (Ky.) Petition by the commonwealth to escheat real estate held by a corporation, and not proper or necessary for carrying on its business, in violation of Const. § 192, need only follow the constitutional prohibition, and need not negative the idea of a reasonable necessity for future use; that being a matter of defense.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 151 S. W. 934.

ESCROWS.

See Deeds, § 61; Evidence, § 230.

§ 13 (Tex.) Where delivery is to a third person in escrow for delivery to the grantee, after the grantor's death, a delivery as directed relates back so as to divest the title of the grantor from the first delivery.—Henry v. Phillips, 151 S. W. 533.

ESTATES.

See Deeds, §§ 120, 125; Dower; Life Estates; Perpetuities; Tenancy in Common.

§ 6 (Ky.) The proprietor of a qualified or base fee has the same rights and privileges till the contingency upon which it is limited occurs as if he were a tenant in fee simple.—Landers v. Landers, 151 S. W. 386.

ESTOPPEL.

II. BY DEED.

(A) Creation and Operation in General.

§ 22 (Tex.) Where a married woman is imposed upon by one in whom she has confidence, and induced to sign and acknowledge a deed covering land which she has not bargained to sell, she is not estopped, in an action to set the deed aside, to deny her want of knowledge of what land was covered by the deed.—Oar v. Davis, 151 S. W. 794.

§ 29 (Tex.Civ.App.) Acceptance of a quitclaim by the purchaser on foreclosure of a vendor's lien held not to create an estoppel.—Gamble v. Martin, 151 S. W. 327.

(B) Estates and Rights Subsequently Acquired.

§ 38 (Tex.Civ.App.) For an after-acquired title to pass to a grantee under a warranty of title, it is not necessary that the conveyance should have been upon a valuable consideration.—Morris v. Short, 151 S. W. 633.

§ 39 (Tex.Civ.App.) Title acquired by grantor subsequent to conveyance held to pass to grantee, where the deed contained neither an express warranty nor any limitation on the implied warranty provided for by Rev. St. 1895, art. 633.—Morris v. Short, 151 S. W. 633.

III. EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL.

(A) Nature and Essentials in General.

§ 58 (Tex.Civ.App.) Attorneys held not estopped by answer alleging that a conveyance was upon a contingency as against a subsequent purchaser who did not rely thereon and who paid nothing of value for his conveyance.—Morris v. Short, 151 S. W. 633.

§ 59 (Tex.Civ.App.) A grantee who obtained his deed by fraud cannot rely on an estoppel against the grantor to deny his title, based on her silence while he was making improvements.—Chambers v. Wyatt, 151 S. W. 864.

(B) Grounds of Estoppel.

§ 78 (Tex.Civ.App.) An agreement by the holder of a note to extend time of payment, though not based on any consideration, may estop him from exercising an option to declare the note due, where the maker was induced to relax his efforts to procure money which he could otherwise have procured.—Corbett v. Sweeney, 151 S. W. 858.

§ 91 (Ky.) Where a will gave a legatee an interest in the proceeds of property to be converted into money, failure of the legatee to object to the levy of an execution on his share, which share was not subject to that process, will not estop him or his successors from denying the validity of the execution.—Cropper v. Gaar's Ex'r, 151 S. W. 913.

§ 93 (Tex.Civ.App.) That plaintiff railroad company did not object when defendant's track was laid across the land in controversy did not create an estoppel against plaintiff, if plaintiff's officials did not know at the time that it owned the land.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Southern Kansas Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 850.

(C) Persons Affected.

§ 97 (Tex.Civ.App.) Any act by plaintiff, pursuant to an agreement between itself and another railroad company, could not be taken advantage of as an estoppel by defendant railroad company, which was not a party thereto.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Southern Kansas Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 850.

(E) Pleading, Evidence, Trial, and Review.

§ 116 (Mo.App.) One setting up estoppel has the burden of making out the facts upon which it rests.—Locke v. Bowman, 151 S. W. 468.

II. JUDICIAL NOTICE.

§ 5 (Mo.) Courts will take judicial notice that a very large percentage of the lands of the state, and some of the most valuable thereof, are incumbered.—State ex rel. Deems v. Holtcamp, 151 S. W. 153.

§ 43 (Tex.) A court in an action on a liquor dealer's bond held entitled to take judicial notice of its own prior decision determining that the local option election in the county in which the bond was given was invalid.—State v. Savage, 151 S. W. 530.

II. PRESUMPTIONS.

§ 60 (Mo.) All things are presumed in favor of life, liberty, and innocence.—Nelson v. Jones, 151 S. W. 80.

§ 60 (Tex.) In construing a contract, it must be presumed that the parties intended to obey the law.—Foard County v. Sandifer, 151 S. W. 523.

§ 65 (Tex.) A court in construing a contract must presume that the parties knew the law.—Foard County v. Sandifer, 151 S. W. 523.

§ 65 (Tex.Civ.App.) A special statute granting a right of way to a railroad company through the public lands of the state is a public law, so as to be constructive notice to another railroad company of the extent of the rights of the grantee.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Southern Kansas Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 850.

There is a pseudo-presumption that every one is presumed to know the law.—Id.

§ 67 (Mo.) A status once established is presumed to continue until the contrary is shown by evidence.—Nelson v. Jones, 151 S. W. 80.

§ 67 (Tex.Civ.App.) It cannot be presumed as a matter of law that the houses in the built-up part of a town were the same in 1910 as in 1891, when the town was made the county seat.—Ralls v. Parish, 151 S. W. 1089.

§ 78 (Mo.App.) Where party to a contract obtained documentary evidence from third person and destroyed part of it, held, that it will be presumed that the papers were as claimed by the other party; every presumption being against the depositor of documentary evidence.—Tracy v. Buchanan, 151 S. W. 747.

§ 80 (Mo.App.) Where one relies on the law of a sister state for his cause of action, and the petition states a good cause of action under the statutory law of Missouri, the presumption arises, on the failure of defendant to demur, that the law of the sister state is similar to the law of Missouri.—Madden v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 489.

The court cannot presume that the common law is in force in Kansas; but, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, it will presume that the statutory law of Kansas is like the statutory law of Missouri.—Id.

§ 80 (Mo.App.) The humanitarian rule is a common-law, and not a statutory, rule, and, in the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that it is recognized in a common-law sister state.—Shelton v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 493.

The territory of which the state of Kansas is a part, never having been subject to Great Britain, but having been a French possession at the time of its purchase by the United States, no presumption can be indulged that the common law exists therein.—Id.

§ 82 (Mo.) The acts of the probate courts of the state are presumed to be regular until the contrary is shown.—State ex rel. Nolte v. McQuillin, 151 S. W. 444.

§ 84 (Tex.Civ.App.) The court cannot presume that, because a part of the plat of an existing town was within five miles of the center of the county, any part of the town itself, as it previously existed, was within that radius; that being a matter of proof.—Balls v. Parish, 151 S. W. 1089.

III. BURDEN OF PROOF.

§ 91 (Ark.) Burden is on plaintiff to prove the affirmative of a material fact alleged by him.—Henderson v. E. W. Emerson Co., 151 S. W. 251.

IV. RELEVANCY, MATERIALITY, AND COMPETENCY IN GENERAL.

(A) Facts in Issue and Relevant to Issues.

§ 99 (Ky.) A plaintiff suing for a personal injury may testify what physicians examined him, and that defendant's physician examined him.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Meyers, 151 S. W. 19.

§ 113 (Mo.App.) As regards damages from loss of profits through defendant's breach of contract to furnish timber for plaintiff to manufacture into hubs to sell, the price at which another had contracted to buy the hubs of plaintiff is some evidence of their market value.—Martin v. Bunker-Culler Lumber Co., 151 S. W. 984.

(B) Res Gestæ.

§ 121 (Tex.) Declarations by a grantor, made at the time of the execution of a deed, showing fraud and undue influence, are competent as a part of the res gestæ.—Rankin v. Rankin, 151 S. W. 527.

§ 127 (Tex.Civ.App.) In a personal injury action, witnesses held properly permitted to testify to declarations made by plaintiff as to existing pain, though he was then insane.—Knox v. Robins, 151 S. W. 1134.

(C) Similar Facts and Transactions.

§ 130 (Ark.) In an action by the grantors to reform their timber deed, evidence that the purchaser's grantee, who was made a party solely for that reason, had urged in an action between other parties a contention similar to that of the grantors, is irrelevant.—Hearin v. Union Sawmill Co., 151 S. W. 1007.

§ 139 (Tex.Civ.App.) Testimony that mortgagee, an insurance company, issued a policy and sent a bill for the premium held competent to show agreement by it to attend to the insurance on premises covered by another deed of trust executed at the same time.—Commonwealth Fire Ins. Co. v. Obenchain, 151 S. W. 611.

V. BEST AND SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

§ 159 (Mo.) Evidence by a county judge, justice, and notary public in Missouri that he searched the records in a county in Arkansas was not the best evidence of the nonexistence of a divorce decree, the best evidence being that of the custodian of such records or other persons qualified to search them.—Nelson v. Jones, 151 S. W. 80.

§ 159 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where defendant pleaded avoidance of the policy sued on by breach of a provision against other insurance, parol evidence to show the execution, but not the contents of such other policies, was admissible.—Philadelphia Underwriters Agency of Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. Brown, 151 S. W. 899.

§ 162 (Tenn.) Under Shannon's Code, § 5579, dissolution of an injunction must be proved, in an action on the bond, by the record of the injunction suit.—King v. Cox, 151 S. W. 58.

§ 183 (Tenn.) Evidence held not to show that the pleadings, writ, and bond in an injunction suit were lost, so as to render certified copies admissible.—King v. Cox, 151 S. W. 58.

VI. DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE.

§ 199 (Tex.Civ.App.) In action against manufacturer for injuries caused by soap, permitting test by pouring vinegar on the soap held not error.—Armstrong Packing Co. v. Clem, 151 S. W. 576.

VII. ADMISSIONS.

(A) Nature, Form, and Incidents in General.

§ 210 (Mo.App.) A deposition of a party to a suit is admissible in evidence as declarations of an adverse party, although such person is in court at the time.—Wilson v. Salisbury, 151 S. W. 194.

§ 213 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action on contract, evidence that defendant's agent said that he would advise defendant to settle was not admissible to show an offer to compromise.—S. W. Slayden & Co. v. Palmo, 151 S. W. 649.

(B) By Parties or Others Interested in Event.

§ 222 (Tex.Civ.App.) An admission by plaintiff that he had obtained other insurance contrary to a provision in the policy sued on was competent as original evidence.—Philadelphia Underwriters Agency of Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. Brown, 151 S. W. 899.

(C) By Grantors, Former Owners, or Privies.

§ 230 (Tex.) Declarations by a grantor before or after the execution of a deed are not competent to prove fraud and undue influence.—Rankin v. Rankin, 151 S. W. 527.

§ 230 (Tex.) That a grantor subsequent to execution and delivery to a third person in escrow for delivery to the grantee after the grantor's death listed the property for sale could not be proved after the grantor's death as against grantee.—Henry v. Phillips, 151 S. W. 533.

(D) By Agents or Other Representatives.

§ 241 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action on contract, evidence that defendant's agent said that he would advise defendant to settle was admissible to disprove an averment in the answer that plaintiff had abandoned his contract.—Slayden & Co. v. Palmo, 151 S. W. 649.

§ 243 (Ark.) Declaration of a coemployé, immediately after a servant's injury, that if he had done his duty it would not have happened is inadmissible against the master, not being part of the res gestæ, but a mere narrative of a past occurrence.—River, Rail & Harbor Const. Co. v. Goodwin, 151 S. W. 267.

§ 244 (Mo.App.) In an action for false imprisonment, the declaration of defendant's agent, the day after the arrest, that defendant had plaintiff arrested, was incompetent, not being a part of the res gestæ, but merely an account of a past event.—Carson v. St. Joseph Stockyards Co., 151 S. W. 752.

§ 244 (Tex.Civ.App.) Agreements or concessions by plaintiff's superintendents with reference to another part of its right of way than that in controversy, though a part of the same section, were not admissible in evidence, in trespass to try title between it and another railroad company.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Southern Kansas Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 850.

§ 253 (Mo.) Declarations of defendant's president held admissible as declarations of a coconspirator to show an agreement by it with another company to fix prices, where there was other evidence of conspiracy.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

VIII. DECLARATIONS.

(A) Nature, Form, and Incidents in General.

§ 268 (Tex.) Declarations by a grantor after making a deed are not admissible to show the grantor's mental condition at the time of the execution of the deed, unless made so near to that time as to justify the inference that such mental condition existed at that time.—Rankin v. Rankin, 151 S. W. 527.

§ 271 (Tex.Civ.App.) Abandoned pleadings drawn by one not a party, containing self-serving declarations, were properly excluded.—Gamble v. Martin, 151 S. W. 327.

IX. HEARSAY.

§ 314 (Tex.Civ.App.) After the lapse of a long period of time, death may be proven by hearsay.—McDoel v. Jordan, 151 S. W. 1178.

§ 317 (Tex.Civ.App.) Statements made by J. to a witness explaining his failure to testify on a prior trial held hearsay.—Gamble v. Martin, 151 S. W. 327.

§ 317 (Tex.Civ.App.) It was error to permit a witness to testify to the contents of a letter which was not itself admissible in evidence, as not binding the other party.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Southern Kansas Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 850.

§ 317 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injury to an employé in the derailment of a logging train, testimony that plaintiff's coemployé told witness after the wreck that they had orders not to ride on the train was properly excluded, as being hearsay.—Knox v. Robbins, 151 S. W. 1134.

§ 318 (Tex.Civ.App.) Letters passing between defendant's officials, relating to the land in controversy, are not admissible in trespass to try title, not binding plaintiff.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Southern Kansas Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 850.

§ 322 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injury to an employé claimed to have rendered him insane, testimony for defendant that before the accident "everybody talked about" plaintiff's insanity held properly excluded.—Knox v. Robbins, 151 S. W. 1134.

X. DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

(D) Production, Authentication, and Effect.

§ 366 (Tenn.) To prove the dissolution of an injunction, a copy of the whole record must be produced.—King v. Cox, 151 S. W. 58.

XI. PAROL OR EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITINGS.

(A) Contradicting, Varying, or Adding to Terms of Written Instrument.

§ 407 (Mo.App.) Recitals in bills of lading that goods were received in good order refer only to the external appearance, and may be rebutted.—Bettman v. Mobile & O. R. Co., 151 S. W. 169.

§ 417 (Tex.) Where a grantor placed the deed in an envelope, indorsed with his name, and the names of the grantees, and delivered the same to a bank, his statement then made to the bank that it was for delivery to the grantees after his death was admissible as against the objection that it varied the terms of the indorsement.—Henry v. Phillips, 151 S. W. 533.

§ 420 (Tex.Civ.App.) Evidence that the vendor executed a contract upon condition that it should not become effective until approved by his co-owner held admissible.—Parker v. Naylor, 151 S. W. 1096.

(B) Invalidating Written Instrument.

§ 432 (Ky.) Parol evidence is admissible, in an action by a policy holder to recover premiums paid under a new policy and the surrender value of an old policy, to show that there was no consideration for the new policy or for a note given for premiums due thereon.—Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. of New York v. Shearer, 151 S. W. 938.

Since Ky. St. § 679, requires that a copy of an application for life insurance shall be attached to the policy such application when attached becomes a part of the contract, and parol evidence is admissible to vary its terms where the contract is assailed for want of consideration.—Id.

§ 434 (Ky.) In an action by a policy holder to recover premiums paid under a new policy and the surrender value of an old policy, parol evidence is admissible to show that the acceptance of the new policy was procured by false representations.—Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. of New York v. Shearer, 151 S. W. 938.

Since Ky. St. § 679, requires that a copy of an application for life insurance shall be attached to the policy, such application when attached becomes a part of the contract, and parol evidence is admissible to vary its terms where the contract is assailed for fraud.—Id.

§ 434 (Mo.) Fraudulent representations were not merged in a written contract, so that parol evidence of such fraud was admissible.—State v. Lovan, 151 S. W. 141.

(D) Construction or Application of Language of Written Instrument.

§ 448 (Tex.) Parol evidence is inadmissible to show the construction placed on an unambiguous written contract by the parties, where the intent may be ascertained therefrom.—Henry v. Phillips, 151 S. W. 533.

§ 461 (Ark.) Where a timber deed conveyed all the pine timber 10 inches and up, thus including old-field pine, parol evidence was inadmissible to show that it was not intended by the parties to include such timber.—Hearin v. Union Sawmill Co., 151 S. W. 1007.

§ 466 (Tex.) It is competent to show by parol that a written contract has been abandoned.—Henry v. Phillips, 151 S. W. 533.

XII. OPINION EVIDENCE.

(A) Conclusions and Opinions of Witnesses in General.

§ 471 (Ark.) The testimony of a witness that he guessed his mother was in the possession of land was not a statement of a substantive fact, but a mere conclusion of the witness.—Strickland v. Moore, 151 S. W. 1009.

§ 501 (Ky.) Where witnesses in a will contested that testator knew the objects of his bounty and the value of his stock and had a disposing mind, refusal to permit them to say whether testator was of sound or unsound mind was not error, since the question had been fully answered.—Crosthwaite v. Crosthwaite, 151 S. W. 945.

§ 501 (Ky.) One, not a medical expert, cannot testify that prior to the alleged injuries plaintiff was a well woman, but should be required to state the facts and the difference in appearance of plaintiff before and after the accident.—Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Rowell, 151 S. W. 950.

(B) Subjects of Expert Testimony.

§ 527 (Tex.Civ.App.) Men of experience in the cattle business, qualified to know the effect of dipping cattle in arsenic solution, may give their opinion as to the effect of such dipping of cattle after being given certain feed.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Good, 151 S. W. 617.

(C) Competency of Experts.

§ 538 (Tex.Civ.App.) Cattlemen, who for a number of years had been engaged in shipping and marketing stock to a given point, are competent to testify as experts as to the necessity of feeding, and watering cattle at a given point.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Knox, 151 S. W. 902.

§ 539 (Ky.) Witnesses held qualified to testify that an employé would not have been injured by the breaking of a chain if other chains had been properly adjusted.—Louisville & N. R. R. Co. v. Goodwin, 151 S. W. 376.

§ 544 (Tex.Civ.App.) Cattlemen, who for a number of years had been engaged in shipping and marketing stock to a given point, are competent to testify as experts as to whether depreciation in value of cattle was due to rough handling and delay.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Knox, 151 S. W. 902.

(D) Examination of Experts.

§ 548 (Ky.) Where a physician examines one to qualify himself as a witness, he cannot state what the party detailed as the history of her case, although the rule is otherwise where the physician is called to administer treatment.—Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Rowell, 151 S. W. 950.

XIV. WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY.

§ 584 (Ark.) Affirmative evidence which is reasonable and consistent cannot arbitrarily be disregarded by the jury.—Ramsey v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 288.

§ 586 (Mo.) Evidence held not to show that a divorce was not granted in a certain county in another state.—Nelson v. Jones, 151 S. W. 80.

§ 594 (Tenn.) Where the testimony of insured was in no way impeached, nor was there any attack made on his character, his statement as to the facts must be accepted as true, when standing uncontradicted.—Gleason v. Prudential Fire Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 1030.

§ 596 (Ky.) Plaintiff must establish his cause of action by evidence which does more than support a mere guess as to the existence of the facts establishing liability.—Thomas' Adm'r v. Eminence Distilling Co., 151 S. W. 47.

§ 596 (Ky.) To overturn a written contract, parol evidence must be clear and convincing, especially where its effect is to destroy the written contract or to give the attacking party an advantage.—Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. of New York v. Shearer, 151 S. W. 938.

EXAMINATION.

See Witnesses, §§ 236-287.

EXCEPTIONS.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 253-274; Pleading, § 205.

EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 500-502, 511, 518, 544, 548, 549, 532, 581, 732; Criminal Law, §§ 1088-1093, 1109.

I. NATURE, FORM, AND CONTENTS IN GENERAL.

§ 6 (Mo.App.) When an appeal is taken to overrule a motion setting aside a default judgment, matters that occurred at the time of the default are immaterial, and have no place in the bill of exceptions.—State ex rel. Elrick v. Allen, 151 S. W. 756.

Matters of which the trial court took judicial notice are properly incorporated in a bill of exceptions.—Id.

§ 23 (Ark.) Direction in bill of exceptions that the "clerk here insert testimony" held not to authorize consideration as a part of the bill of testimony subsequently transcribed and certified to by the official stenographer, where it did not appear that it was approved by the trial judge.—Grand Lodge of A. O. U. W. of Arkansas v. Dreher, 151 S. W. 435.

II. SETTLEMENT, SIGNING, AND FILING.

§ 38 (Mo.) Where no bill of exceptions was filed at the term when the referee was appointed, nor leave taken to file such a bill, the referability of the proceeding was not open to review on appeal.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

§ 51 (Mo.App.) That a bill of exceptions is not true is sufficient to justify a judge in not signing it.—State ex rel. Elrick v. Allen, 151 S. W. 756.

§ 53 (Mo.) A writ of prohibition restraining a circuit judge from signing and filing a bill of exceptions in a certain case which he had disposed of held a valid reason for his refusal to sign and file such bill.—State ex rel. Nolte v. McQuillin, 151 S. W. 444.

Mandamus will not be granted to compel a circuit judge to sign and file bills of exception where it would be a useless act.—Id.

§ 54 (Mo.App.) Rev. St. §§ 2030, 2031, 2034, provide the exclusive remedies for the refusal of the trial judge to sign bills of exception, and an ex parte affidavit of counsel in the abstract that an exception to the motion for new trial was preserved, cannot be considered so as to supply the exception, which was not in the bill.—Murphy v. Lorwood Cooperage Co., 151 S. W. 191.

§ 56 (Mo.) The judge's statement, at the end of a paper purporting to be a bill of exceptions, that it was allowed, signed, sealed, "filed, and made a part of the record," does not prove that it was filed.—Langstaff v. City of Webster Groves, 151 S. W. 456.

EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

See Damages, § 132; Death, § 99.

EXCUSE.

See Judgment, § 143.

EXECUTION.

See Adverse Possession, § 85; Estoppel, § 91; Fraudulent Conveyances, § 241; Garnishment, § 60; Justices of the Peace, § 135; Wills, § 114.

II. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO EXECUTION.

§ 41 (Mo.App.) Trust property cannot be reached in an action at law for damages for breach of an executory contract, and it can only be reached in equity.—Markel v. Peck, 151 S. W. 772.

§ 45 (Ky.) The interest of a legatee in the proceeds of property directed to be converted into money and distributed is not subject to levy under an ordinary execution and a judgment against the legatee does not create any lien on his interest in the land.—Cropper v. Gaar's Ex'r, 151 S. W. 913.

V. STAY, QUASHING, VACATING, AND RELIEF AGAINST EXECUTION.

§ 163 (Mo.App.) That a foreign corporation is not authorized to do business in the state is an affirmative defense to its right to an execution on a judgment in its favor; and the mere filing of an ex parte affidavit showing noncompliance by the corporation with the statutes, not presented to the court, is insufficient.—Scientific American Club v. Horchitz, 151 S. W. 475.

VI. CLAIMS BY THIRD PERSONS.

§ 181 (Tex.Civ.App.) A claimant in a trial of the right to property levied on is entitled to prevail, when his rightful possession was disturbed, or when he was entitled to possession, and has been deprived thereof by the levy.—Jones v. Lawrence, 151 S. W. 584.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

See Appeal and Error, § 374; Death, § 31; Descent and Distribution; Divorce, § 194; Husband and Wife, § 276; Infants, § 29; Public Lands, § 175; Wills.

II. APPOINTMENT, QUALIFICATION, AND TENURE.

§ 31 (Tex.Civ.App.) In view of Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 3235, providing that an intestate's property shall vest in his heirs at law or his estate shall pass to the administrator's possession for distribution, the appointment of a guardian of minor heirs held not to ipso facto supersede the administrator.—Wilkin v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 1145.

III. ASSETS, APPRAISAL, AND INVENTORY.

§ 55 (Tex.Civ.App.) A wife's administrator was entitled to administer separate property left by her under the supervision of the probate court.—Lanza v. Roe, 151 S. W. 571.

IV. COLLECTION AND MANAGEMENT OF ESTATE.

(A) In General.

§ 87 (Ky.) Under Const. § 241, vesting an administrator with the right of action for death, it was not necessary that the infant wife and child of deceased should be advised as to a settlement.—Slusher v. Weller, 151 S. W. 684.

(B) Real Property and Interests Therein.

§ 138 (Ky.) A will held to authorize decedent's executor to sell his land.—Smith v. Scott's Ex'r, 151 S. W. 42.

VI. ALLOWANCE AND PAYMENT OF CLAIMS.

(B) Presentation and Allowance.

§ 225 (Mo.App.) Rev. St. 1909, §§ 190-194, limiting the time for exhibiting claims against decedents' estates, are a special statute of limitations, not affecting the general statute, and a surety on a note paying a judgment thereon must file his claim for contribution against the estate of a deceased cosurety within five years from the payment, deducting the period between the cosurety's death and the granting of letters.—Hinshaw v. Warren's Estate, 151 S. W. 497.

§ 228 (Mo.App.) A claimant against a decedent's estate who makes out the claim, and takes it to the home of the clerk of the probate court to have it sworn to, without requesting the clerk to file it, does not thereby file the claim within the statute.—Hinshaw v. Warren's Estate, 151 S. W. 497.

§ 232 (Mo.App.) An administrator who long before the running of limitations agreed to waive service of notice of claim against decedent's estate was not thereby estopped from pleading limitations, where claimant delayed the presentation of his claim until limitations had run.—Hinshaw v. Warren's Estate, 151 S. W. 497.

(C) Disputed Claims.

§ 245 (Mo.App.) To invoke the bar of limitations to a claim against a decedent's estate, it is not necessary to file a written pleading setting up limitations, either in the probate court or in the circuit court on appeal.—Hinshaw v. Warren's Estate, 151 S. W. 497.

VIII. SALES AND CONVEYANCES UNDER ORDER OF COURT.

(A) When Authorized.

§ 326 (Mo.) While under Rev. St. 1909, §§ 147, 148, a sale of incumbered real estate may be made in administration, if such sale will promote the interests of the heirs though there are no general debts, a sale merely to prevent a partition is not justified.—State ex rel. Deems v. Holtcamp, 151 S. W. 153.

§ 326 (Tex.Civ.App.) If the probate court had fixed the allowance for the support of a widow and minor children of decedent, and funds were needed for a year's support of the children, it could order a sale of land of the estate on the administrator's application for the support of such heirs.—Wilkin v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 1145.

The existence of orders by the probate court fixing the allowance for the year's support of minor children and the allowance for them in lieu of exempt property were not needed to give jurisdiction to order the sale of land of the estate for the support of such children as heirs.—Id.

(B) Application and Order.

§ 337 (Mo.) An administrator selling incumbered real estate to pay his own unprobated claim or the debts due to incumbrancers must proceed under Rev. St. 1909, §§ 150, 151, by petition accompanied by his account and inventory and a list of unpaid debts, and must give the notice required by section 152.—State ex rel. Deems v. Holtcamp, 151 S. W. 153.

Though Rev. St. 1909, §§ 147, 148, require no notice, such notice is necessary.—Id.

§ 349 (Tex.Civ.App.) If the probate court acquires jurisdiction of the property of an estate and of the persons interested therein, it has complete jurisdiction, so that its order of sale cannot be collaterally attacked.—Wilkin v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 1145.

The question whether a sale of the land was necessary for the support of minor heirs on an administrator's application for a sale for that purpose was for the determination of the probate court, and its judgment thereon cannot be collaterally attacked.—Id.

Lands sold on an administrator's application for an order of sale held sufficiently described in the application, as against collateral attack on the order of sale.—Id.

(C) Sale.

§ 383 (Tex.Civ.App.) While probate courts may not sell lands of a deceased person without the citation directed by Rev. St. 1895, art. 2123, on collateral attack it will be presumed that due service was obtained.—Daimwood v. Driscoll, 151 S. W. 621.

An application by an executor to sell real estate, though it did not comply with Rev. St.

1895, art. 2123, held, not void, and hence not open to collateral attack.—Id.

A sale of land by an executor by order of court, without notice, is not void, but voidable.—Id.

The failure to show the expenses and claims of the executor, in an application for sale of land, as required by Rev. St. 1895, art. 2123, rendered the sale only voidable, even though there were no debts due to any one; and it could not be collaterally attacked.—Id.

Where the application to sell lands showed that debts were due the executor, it will be presumed, on collateral attack, that the law in regard to claims of an executor was fully complied with.—Id.

§ 383 (Tex.Civ.App.) An administrator's sale of land upon an application stating that its sale was necessary for the support of heirs, etc., is not void so as to be subject to collateral attack, even though not made for a purpose authorized by law.—Wilkin v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 1145.

§ 388 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the court, on an application by an executor, made an order of sale and confirmed it, a purchaser could assume that the order was properly made.—Daimwood v. Driscoll, 151 S. W. 621.

§ 388 (Tex.Civ.App.) An order for sale of the land of an estate, report thereof, and confirmation, are sufficient to give the purchaser title without the execution of a deed, so that it is immaterial that the deed executed was made before confirmation.—Wilkin v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 1145.

XI. ACCOUNTING AND SETTLEMENT.

(C) Charges and Credits.

§ 485 (Ky.) An attorney after qualifying as administrator cannot charge for services which he renders as attorney for himself.—Slusher v. Weller, 151 S. W. 684.

(D) Compensation.

§ 496 (Ky.) Where an attorney qualified as administrator at the request of an infant widow, and, without the service of any other attorney, obtained $3,000 in settlement of her claim for decedent's wrongful death, held that, in view of the statute limiting administrators' commissions to 5 per cent., he was entitled to 5 per cent. on that amount.—Slusher v. Weller, 151 S. W. 684.

EXEMPTIONS.

See Homestead.

EXPLOSIVES.

See Master and Servant, §§ 118, 236, 289; Negligence, § 136.

§ 8 (Tex.Civ.App.) Whether an owner of explosives who placed them on the premises of a third person to which children resorted was guilty of actionable negligence, and liable for injuries to a child caused by an explosion, held for the jury.—Little v. James McCord Co., 151 S. W. 835.

Whether the negligence of an owner of explosives who placed them on the premises of a third person was the proximate cause of an injury to a child caused by an explosion held for the jury.—Id.

An owner who placed explosives on the premises of a third person held not entitled to escape liability for injuries to a child caused by an explosion on the ground that children were attracted to the premises for the chief purpose of securing pecans.—Id.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

See Malicious Prosecution.

I. CIVIL LIABILITY.

(A) Acts Constituting False Imprisonment and Liability Therefor.

§ 15 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where plaintiff was arrested by an officer employed by a private person to keep the peace at a show, the fact that the person making the arrest was an officer did not show that he acted in his official capacity, nor was the fact of his employment sufficient to show that he acted as defendant's servant.—Rucker v. Barker, 151 S. W. 871.

Act of an officer doing private duty in defendant's show tent in dragging plaintiff out of a seat and causing him to be arrested, after defendant had instructed the officer to settle a dispute over possession of the seat, held not in the officer's official capacity, but performed in defendant's business, for which defendant was liable.—Id.

(B) Actions.

§ 36 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where plaintiff, a young unmarried man of good habits, was arrested in the presence of friends while occupying a reserved seat in a show tent, and, after being roughly handled and wounded in the face, was driven to jail in the police wagon, and locked up with negroes and Mexicans, a verdict of $1,000 as compensatory damages for false imprisonment was not excessive.—Rucker v. Barker, 151 S. W. 871.

Where, in an action for false imprisonment there was evidence of actual malice on defendant's part, it was not error to allow $250 by way of punitive damages.—Id.

FALSE PRETENSES.

See Criminal Law, §§ 761, 1169.

§ 12 (Mo.App.) A debtor who obtains a credit on account by means of an order drawn on a third person, not indebted to him, is not guilty of obtaining property under false pretenses, in violation of Rev. St. 1909, § 4505.—State v. Martin, 151 S. W. 504.

§ 34 (Mo.) Under Rev. St. 1909, § 4765, specifying the elements of the crime of false pretenses, an information held sufficient, though the charge as to obtaining the property was not included in the charging part of the information.—State v. Lovan, 151 S. W. 141.

§ 38 (Mo.) In an action for obtaining shares of stock by false representations as to the title to land, deeds to land described in the information held properly admitted.—State v. Lovan, 151 S. W. 141.

§ 42 (Mo.) In a prosecution for fraudulent representations that land was unincumbered, testimony for the defendant that deeds of trust on such property pledged to secure a loan could have been recovered by him at any time held admissible as bearing on intent.—State v. Lovan, 151 S. W. 141.

§ 49 (Mo.) On a prosecution for obtaining shares of stock by false pretenses as to the condition of the title to certain property, held, that there was no failure of proof of the subject-matter of the representation alleged in the information.—State v. Lovan, 151 S. W. 141.

Civ. St. 1897, arts. 2529, 2542, limiting the issues in forcible entry and detainer to right of possession only.—Hengy v. Hengy, 151 S. W. 1127.

I. DECEPTION CONSTITUTING FRAUD, AND LIABILITY THEREFOR.

§ 11 (Mo.App.) Mere expressions of opinion, as distinguished from representations as to existing facts, cannot be made the basis of an action for fraud.—Williamson v. Harris, 151 S. W. 500.

§ 18 (Mo.App.) One suing for damages from fraudulent representations, inducing the execution of an instrument, must show that the representations were as to a material fact, and that they contributed to the injury.—Birch Tree State Bank v. Dowler, 151 S. W. 784.

§ 20 (Mo.App.) A representation, to be actionable as a fraudulent representation, must be one on which the complaining party relied, and by which he was actually misled to his injury.—Birch Tree State Bank v. Dowler, 151 S. W. 784.

§ 20 (Mo.App.) To be actionable a vendor's false representations as to the quality of land must relate to a material fact relied upon by the purchaser.—Williamson v. Harris, 151 S. W. 500.

§ 28 (Tex.Civ.App.) If a test well was drilled and completed according to contract, the fact that thereafter the contractor made untrue representations as to the quality of the water was not actionable fraud constituting a defense to a note for the work.—Miller v. Layne & Bowler Co., 151 S. W. 341.

II. ACTIONS.(C) Evidence.

§ 50 (Ky.) The burden of proving actual fraud is on the party asserting it, unless fraud is implied from the confidential relation of the parties.—Shacklette v. Goodall, 151 S. W. 23.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.V. AGREEMENTS NOT TO BE PERFORMED WITHIN ONE YEAR.

§ 49 (Ark.) A contract to erect a building, which may be performed within a year, is not within the statute of frauds.—Friedman v. Schleuter, 151 S. W. 696.

VII. SALES OF GOODS.(B) Acceptance of Part of Goods.

§ 89 (Mo.App.) Where a buyer of goods in a store selected goods desired, and subsequently exchanged them for other goods in the store, there was a delivery and acceptance of the original goods, to constitute a valid sale within the statute of frauds (Rev. St. 1909, § 2784).—P. H. Rea Implement Co. v. Smith, 151 S. W. 203.

§ 90 (Mo.App.) Under the statute of frauds (Rev. St. 1909, § 2784), a seller of personality for more than $30, unaccompanied by any writing or part payment, is not binding on the buyer, in absence of a delivery.—P. H. Rea Implement Co. v. Smith, 151 S. W. 203.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

See Bankruptcy, § 302.

I. TRANSFERS AND TRANSACTIONS INVALID.(B) Nature and Form of Transfer.

§ 25 (Mo.) Where no rights of creditors intervened, an alteration in the date of a deed from a son to his mother, made after acknowledgment, but before record, would not avoid it as to subsequent creditors of the son.—Mayhew v. Todisman, 151 S. W. 436.

(D) Indebtedness, Insolvency, and Intent of Grantor.

§ 61 (Mo.App.) A gift by an insolvent father to his son is fraudulent as to creditors, whatever the intent.—Wilson v. Salisbury, 151 S. W. 194.

(F) Confidential Relations of Parties.

§ 104 (Mo.) Financial transactions between husband and wife are looked upon with suspicion.—First Nat. Bank v. Renick, 151 S. W. 421.

(H) Preferences to Creditors.

§ 115 (Mo.App.) A debtor may transfer his property in payment of his debts, though he thereby gives certain creditors a preference.—Gambrel v. Hines, 151 S. W. 474.

(D) Retention of Possession or Apparent Title by Grantor.

§ 135 (Mo.App.) An unrecorded bill of sale from a debtor to his creditors in payment of his debts without a change of possession held void under Rev. St. 1909, § 2887, making void as to creditors a sale of chattels without a change of possession.—Gambrel v. Hines, 151 S. W. 474.

§ 154 (Mo.) Where property was conveyed to a son for his mother, and the deed to the son was recorded, the omission of the mother to record her deed from the son would not vitiate it or give existing creditors a right to complain, though she could not claim the property against those giving the son credit on his apparent ownership.—Mayhew v. Todisman, 151 S. W. 436.

III. REMEDIES OF CREDITORS AND PURCHASERS.(C) Right of Action to Set Aside Transfer, and Defenses.

§ 241 (Mo.App.) In a judgment creditor's action to reach land fraudulently conveyed by the debtor, plaintiff need not procure an execution and return nulla bona, where the debtor has been proved insolvent.—Wilson v. Salisbury, 151 S. W. 194.

(G) Evidence.

§ 278 (Mo.) The common law, giving rise to the presumption that a husband furnished the money for the purchase of land during coverture, title to which was taken in the wife, has been abolished by Rev. St. 1909, §§ 8304, 8309, defining the powers of married women, and the presumption is entitled to but little weight in determining whether conveyances to a wife by a third person are fraudulent as against the husband's creditors.—Crump v. Walkup, 151 S. W. 709.

§ 295 (Ky.) Evidence held not to sustain a finding that certain mules and hogs were ever the property of defendants, or were transferred by them to their mother to defraud creditors.—Coomes Bros. v. Grigsby & Co., 151 S. W. 943.

§ 300 (Mo.) Evidence held to show that a wife purchased property by means of her separate estate, so that the conveyances were not in fraud of the husband's creditors.—Crump v. Walkup, 151 S. W. 709.

That a husband, without his wife's knowledge, mortgaged her separate chattels, is not evidence that he owned the chattels, and that the wife's claim thereto is in fraud of his creditors.—Id.

That a husband listed personalty claimed by his wife as his own for taxation is not conclusive evidence that the wife's claim of ownership is in fraud of his creditors.—Id.

GAMING.

See Indictment and Information, §§ 70, 87.

III. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY.(A) Offenses.

§ 76 (Tex.Cr.App.) When a person opens a house under his control, and permits persons to gather there and gamble without invitation, it becomes a "resort for gambling."—Davis v. State, 151 S. W. 313.

Where an unmarried man takes possession of a private house during the owner's absence, and permits gambling therein, he is guilty of unlawfully permitting property under his control to be used as a resort for gambling.—Id.

The act of a person in engaging with others in gambling on premises under his control constituted permission to the others to gamble.—Id.

(B) Prosecution and Punishment.

§ 88 (Tex.Cr.App.) An indictment for permitting gambling, in violation of Pen. Code 1911, art. 559, need not name the games played.—Davis v. State, 151 S. W. 313.

§ 89 (Tex.Cr.App.) An indictment for permitting gambling, in violation of Pen. Code 1911, art. 559, need not describe the premises, nor allege the house to be a public place.—Davis v. State, 151 S. W. 313.

§ 94 (Tex.Cr.App.) Evidence that shortly before the grand jury met defendant requested gambling to stop, held not to present the issue that gambling theretofore took place without his consent.—Davis v. State, 151 S. W. 313.

§ 98 (Tex.Cr.App.) Evidence held to sustain a finding that defendant permitted a house under his control to be used as a resort for gambling.—Davis v. State, 151 S. W. 313.

GARNISHMENT.

See Banks and Banking, § 134.

II. PERSONS AND PROPERTY SUBJECT TO GARNISHMENT.

§ 27 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Rev. Civ. St. 1911, arts. 3745, 3742, 296, a stockholder's interest in a corporation, evidenced by shares of stock assigned to a bank as collateral security, could not be subjected to garnishment by service of notice on an officer of the bank.—Presnall v. Stockyards Nat. Bank, 151 S. W. 873.

§ 29 (Tex.Civ.App.) A debtor's equity of redemption in mortgaged cattle, pledged to a bank for a loan and of less value than the loan, held not subject to garnishment as against the bank.—Presnall v. Stockyards Nat. Bank, 151 S. W. 873.

§ 58 (Tex.) The principle underlying the rule that property in custodia legis is not subject to garnishment, etc., is to protect the jurisdiction of the court from invasion of another tribunal or officer, and not to protect the debtor's property.—Turner v. Gibson, 151 S. W. 793.

§ 60 (Tex.) In view of Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 3778, requiring the surplus upon an execution sale to be paid over to defendant, any excess remaining in the sheriff's hands after satisfying a writ of execution may be the subject of garnishment.—Turner v. Gibson, 151 S. W. 793.

VI. PROCEEDINGS TO SUPPORT OR ENFORCE.

§ 191 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where a garnishee answered claiming the property of the debtor and was unsuccessful, it became itself a litigant and could not recover attorney's fees or costs.—Presnall v. Stockyards Nat. Bank, 151 S. W. 873.

GAS.

GIFTS.

See Adverse Possession, §§ 64, 85; Charities; Fraudulent Conveyances; Husband and Wife, § 49½; Wills, § 673.

I. INTER VIVOS.

§ 4 (Ky.) A deed of gift conveying all of the donor's estate, real and personal, is sufficiently definite and carries with it a note in favor of the donor.—Taylor v. Purdy, 151 S. W. 45.

§ 18 (Ky.) To constitute a gift inter vivos, there must be a delivery, actual or symbolical.—Taylor v. Purdy, 151 S. W. 45.

§ 21 (Ky.) A writing remitting future interest on a note held not valid as a gift inter vivos, where delivered only to the agent of the person attempting to make it; such agent being also designated as executor.—Baldwin's Ex'r v. Barber's Ex'rs, 151 S. W. 686.

§ 22 (Ky.) A gift, evidenced by a written instrument executed by the donor, is effectuated by a delivery of the instrument.—Taylor v. Purdy, 151 S. W. 45.

§ 47 (Ky.) Presumption of fraud, where a confidential relation exists between the parties, arises more readily in cases of gift than of contract.—Shacklette v. Goodall, 151 S. W. 23.

§ 47 (Ky.) Where a deed of gift to infants appeared in the possession of the trustee of the gift, its delivery will be presumed.—Taylor v. Purdy, 151 S. W. 45.

§ 49 (Ky.) Evidence held to establish delivery of a deed of gift to personalty.—Taylor v. Purdy, 151 S. W. 45.

GRAND JURY.

§ 7 (Tex.Cr.App.) An order directing the summoning of grand jurors for the three succeeding terms of court held without authority, and to warrant a dismissal of an indictment returned by a grand jury summoned for the second term.—Mayfield v. State, 151 S. W. 303.

GUARANTY.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

§ 7 (Ark.) Where a traveling salesman wrote his employer, who refused to accept an order, to the effect that, if his indorsement was worth anything, the employer would ship the goods, the agent was bound on the employer shipping the goods in reliance on the guaranty, though there was no notice of acceptance.—McCarroll v. Red Diamond Clothing Co., 151 S. W. 1012.

§ 20 (Ark.) One induced to execute a guaranty of performance of a contract by a third person by the fraudulent representations of such person may not escape liability to the other contracting party innocent of fraud.—Publishers: George Knapp & Co. v. Wilks, 151 S. W. 280.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

§ 34 (Ark.) Where a traveling salesman wrote to his employer, refusing to accept an order, to the effect that, if his indorsement was worth anything, the employer should ship the goods, the agent was absolutely bound to pay on the employer shipping the goods in reliance of the guaranty.—McCarroll v. Red Diamond Clothing Co., 151 S. W. 1012.

III. DISCHARGE OF GUARANTOR.

§ 54 (Ark.) A guarantor held not released from liability by the filling in of a blank space for the date in the contract to be guaranteed.—Publishers: George Knapp & Co. v. Wilks, 151 S. W. 280.

Nor was such guarantor released by subsequent insertion in a blank space of the number of papers to be furnished daily.—Id.

§ 67 (Ark.) Where a traveling salesman wrote his employer, who refused to accept an order, to the effect that, if his indorsement was worth anything, the employer would ship the goods, the agent was bound on the employer shipping the goods in reliance on the guaranty, though there was no notice of the buyer's failure to pay.—McCarroll v. Red Diamond Clothing Co., 151 S. W. 1012.

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

See Executors and Administrators, § 31.

IV. SALES AND CONVEYANCES UNDER ORDER OF COURT.

§ 92 (Ky.) The bond required by Civ. Code Prac. § 493, to be executed to infants by their guardian before a sale, need not, in view of section 497, be executed before sale in an action, under section 490, subsec. 2, for sale for partition.—Hatterich v. Bruce, 151 S. W. 31.

§ 102 (Ky.) Where, through mistake which was apparent of record, a guardian ad litem to sell land filed his report in the name only of other infants for whom he was not appointed, held, that that report sufficiently represented the infants for whom he was appointed, and an order made in pursuance thereof will not be set aside.—Thomson's Guardian v. Thomson, 151 S. W. 658.

VI. ACCOUNTING AND SETTLEMENT.

§ 148 (Ark.) Where, in a final settlement of a guardianship, the parties treated notes as worth their face value, the court, on the notes being surrendered by the administratrix of the deceased guardian, must give credit for the balance due on the face of the notes.—Stubblefield v. Stubblefield, 151 S. W. 994.

§ 159 (Ark.) Where the final settlement of a guardian did not show how much of the balance was money, or how much was notes drawing interest, interest must be charged at 10 per cent. per annum, and the court must then determine what credits should be allowed, and render judgment for the balance.—Stubblefield v. Stubblefield, 151 S. W. 994.

§ 161 (Ark.) The circuit court, on appeal from the probate court on exceptions to the final settlement of a guardian, should state the account without a jury.—Stubblefield v. Stubblefield, 151 S. W. 994.

§ 163 (Ark.) The court, on a final settlement of a guardian's account, must take as a basis for the settlement an intermediate settlement approved by the probate court, unless an affirmative showing is made that at the time of the approval there was property in the guardian's hands not included in the settlement.—Stubblefield v. Stubblefield, 151 S. W. 994.

HIGHWAYS.

See Easements, §§ 3, 44; Mandamus, § 31; Mechanics' Liens, § 18; Private Roads.

I. ESTABLISHMENT, ALTERATION, AND DISCONTINUANCE.

(A) Establishment by Prescription, User, or Recognition.

§ 6 (Mo.) The use of a road for 10 years with the acquiescence of the owner makes it a valid road.—Laclede-Christy Clay Products Co. v. City of St. Louis, 151 S. W. 460.

§ 7 (Tex.Civ.App.) The public may by adverse use for the prescriptive period acquire right of highway in a road, though the county authorities have not recognized it as a public road.—Porter v. Johnson, 151 S. W. 599.

(B) Establishment by Statute or Statutory Proceedings.

§ 28 (Mo.) Order establishing a road held void where it was signed by 8 persons instead of 12 as required by law.—Laclede-Christy Clay Products Co. v. City of St. Louis, 151 S. W. 460.

(C) Alteration, Vacation, or Abandonment.

§ 77 (Tex.Civ.App.) Though the road, the closing of which was sought to be enjoined, was not a part of the E. road as actually laid out by the county authorities, yet it being part of "what is known" as the E. road, and this being the allegation of the petition, there is no variance.—Porter v. Johnson, 151 S. W. 599.

III. CONSTRUCTION, IMPROVEMENT, AND REPAIR.

§ 113 (Tex.Civ.App.) A contractor for the construction of roads for a county who by an instrument directs payment to a bank of moneys due or to become due under the contract, and the issuance of warrants direct to the bank, thereby assigns the funds due him from the county subject to the claim of the county.—National Bank of Denison v. Coleman, 151 S. W. 1123.

A county employing a contractor to construct roads and accepting his assignment to a third person of the amount due him under the contract, without intimating that it would elect to pay claims of laborers and materialmen, held estopped from exercising the option as against the third person.—Id.

Laborers and materialmen of a contractor with a county for the construction of roads held not entitled to compel performance of the stipulation in the contract authorizing the county to pay laborers and materialmen.—Id.

HOMESTEAD.

See Appeal and Error, § 77.

V. PROTECTION AND ENFORCEMENT OF RIGHTS.

§ 212 (Tex.Civ.App.) In trespass to try title by a municipal corporation to recover a portion of a street claimed by defendant as part of his homestead, the wife was not a necessary party.—Gillaspie v. City of Huntsville, 151 S. W. 1114.

HOMICIDE.

See Criminal Law, §§ 369, 404, 472, 603, 673, 800, 823, 824, 1090, 1097; Indictment and Information, § 60.

III. MANSLAUGHTER.

§ 39 (Tex.Cr.App.) Manslaughter is predicated on adequate cause, and, unless such cause exists, the homicide will not be reduced from murder, although committed under the influence of sudden passion, rendering the mind incapable of cool reflection.—Kelly v. State, 151 S. W. 304.

IV. ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL.

§ 84 (Tex.Cr.App.) To constitute the offense of assault with intent to murder, there must be an assault with a specific intent to kill actuated by malice.—Young v. State, 151 S. W. 1048.

§ 86 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where there is no intent to kill, but simply a shooting to frighten or even to inflict injury without killing, the offense is aggravated assault.—Young v. State, 151 S. W. 1048.

§ 89 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where accused, seeing his wife insulted by another, shot at him and struck his wife, he would be guilty of aggravated assault only.—Hobbs v. State, 151 S. W. 809.

§ 96 (Tex. Cr. App.) Where accused accidentally shot his wife as he was defending himself against another, who was in his wife's company, he was entitled to defend on the ground of self-defense.—Hobbs v. State, 151 S. W. 809.

V. EXCUSABLE OR JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE.

§ 116 (Tex.Cr.App.) Threats of themselves alone will not justify a killing, but if deceased raised from his seat with a knife, and defendant thought he was going to carry into effect previous threats to kill him, the right of self-defense arose.—Kelly v. State, 151 S. W. 304.

Though an assault by deceased to carry out threats was such as would not reasonably cause one to believe that he was in danger of losing his life or suffering serious bodily injury, yet if the conduct at the time was such, taking into consideration such threats, as to cause a degree of anger or terror as to render the mind incapable of cool reflection, the offense would be manslaughter.—Id.

Threats made by one against another with the intention of provoking a difficulty on that occasion would not justify the other in killing him on another and different occasion before an act is done or word spoken.—Id.

VII. EVIDENCE.

(B) Admissibility in General.

§ 158 (Tex.Cr.App.) Threats by accused to kill deceased are admissible.—Brock v. State, 151 S. W. 801.

§ 166 (Tex.Cr.App.) Evidence that the sheriff had made statements as to defendant's defeat in an election loud enough for the latter, 15 or 20 feet away, to hear, was admissible to show motive, where immediately afterwards accused went to where deceased, who had fought him in the election, was sitting, and the difficulty resulted.—Kelly v. State, 151 S. W. 304.

Evidence elicited by the state on cross-examination that the witness was arrested by defendant at a given time was properly admitted where its only purpose was to fix the time, and was proved by the witness that defendant at that time told him he would let him go if he would tell on the deceased, as showing his state of mind toward the deceased.—Id.

(E) Weight and Sufficiency.

§ 250 (Tex.Cr.App.) Evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction of murder.—Brock v. State, 151 S. W. 801.

§ 254. Evidence held to support a conviction for murder in the second degree.

—(Ark.) Wilkerson v. State, 151 S. W. 518; (Tex. Cr. App.) Pugh v. State, 151 S. W. 546; Pinson v. Same, Id. 556.

§ 255 (Ark.) Evidence held to support a conviction of voluntary manslaughter.—Williams v. State, 151 S. W. 1011.

§ 257 (Tex.Cr.App.) Testimony of a physician, that the hatchet with which accused struck his wife, in the hands of a strong man like defendant, was a weapon with which a person could be killed, held sufficient to show that it was a dangerous weapon.—Stanton v. State, 151 S. W. 808.

Evidence held to sustain a conviction of assault with intent to murder.—Id.

VIII. TRIAL.

(C) Instructions.

§ 294 (Tex.Cr.App.) An instruction defining murder held not objectionable in using the word "memory" instead of "mind," where insanity was pleaded.—Montgomery v. State, 151 S. W. 813.

An instruction on insanity held not objectionable as requiring defendant to prove insanity beyond a reasonable doubt or for failure to require that the insanity must be such as to deprive defendant of the knowledge of the nature and quality of his acts, or of the fact that he was doing wrong.—Id.

An instruction held not objectionable as limiting the jury to the consideration of a particular form of insanity.—Id.

An instruction authorizing a conviction if accused knew the nature and quality of his act held not objectionable for failure to also require that he knew that his act in killing deceased was wrong.—Id.

§ 295 (Tex.Cr.App.) Evidence held to require submission as adequate cause in charge on manslaughter of repetition and renewal of insult, as well as communicated insults.—Washington v. State, 151 S. W. 818.

§ 300 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where a charge given was in the abstract, held, that a requested instruction on self-defense applying the law to the facts shown by the evidence should have been given.—Edwards v. State, 151 S. W. 294.

Instruction that if deceased attacked accused with a weapon calculated to produce murder, maiming, etc., it would be presumed that he intended to murder accused, held improperly denied.—Id.

Instruction that, where accused and deceased settled a difficulty between them, accused's right of perfect self-defense against a subsequent attack by deceased revived, held improperly denied.—Id.

§ 300 (Tex.Cr.App.) In an instruction on the abandonment of the difficulty, the use of the words "in good faith abandoned," etc., were improper, in that the jury might infer that the defendant intended at some future time to renew the difficulty.—Kelly v. State, 151 S. W. 304.

§ 300 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where accused, after having pleaded insanity only, introduced evidence of prior difficulty with deceased and prior communicated threats, the court did not err in charging on threats and self-defense.—Montgomery v. State, 151 S. W. 813.

§ 300 (Tex.Cr.App.) An instruction held erroneous as restricting defendant's right of self-defense.—McDowell v. State, 151 S. W. 1049.

§ 308 (Tex.Cr.App.) An instruction on murder in the second degree held justified by the evidence.—Pinson v. State, 151 S. W. 556.

§ 308 (Tex.Cr.App.) An instruction on murder in the second degree held erroneous, as authorizing a conviction of that offense, though defendant may have killed deceased in self-defense, or have been guilty of no higher offense than manslaughter, or unintentional killing.—McDowell v. State, 151 S. W. 1049.

§ 309 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the state showed only a case of murder, and the defendant as justification alleged an assault with a knife by deceased, and threats on occasions other than when the assault was made, a charge on manslaughter which dealt only with such assault was proper.—Kelly v. State, 151 S. W. 304.

§ 309 (Tex.Cr.App.) Evidence held to require an instruction under White's Ann. Pen. Code 1911, art. 1149, on killing as the result of sudden passion by means not calculated to produce death without the specific intent.—McDowell v. State, 151 S. W. 1049.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, there was no evidence of any former provocation, an instruction on manslaughter that the provocation must arise at the time, and not by any former provocation, was erroneous.—Id.

§ 310 (Ky.) In a prosecution under Ky. St. § 1166, for shooting and wounding with intent to kill, an instruction on the offense of shooting in sudden affray, defined by Ky. St. § 1242, and which is a degree of the offense of shooting with intent to kill, was proper.—Breeden v. Commonwealth, 151 S. W. 407.

§ 310 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where accused discovered a third person caressing his wife, whereupon he shot at him and injured his wife, he was entitled to an affirmative charge that he was guilty of no greater offense than aggravated assault.—Hobbs v. State, 151 S. W. 809.

§ 310 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where it might have been found from the evidence that there was no intent to kill, an instruction that had the assault resulted in a killing, which would have been manslaughter, there might be a verdict of aggravated assault was too restrictive, and the refusal to instruct that serious bodily injury with a deadly weapon without intent to kill or maim was an aggravated assault, was error.—Young v. State, 151 S. W. 1046.

X. APPEAL AND ERROR.

§ 332 (Tex.Cr.App.) Evidence held to sustain a jury's finding, sustained by the trial court, that accused was not so insane at the time he killed deceased as to free him from criminal responsibility.—Montgomery v. State, 151 S. W. 813.

§ 340 (Tex.Cr.App.) In an instruction on the abandonment of the difficulty, error in the use of the words "in good faith abandoned" held harmless, where there was no evidence from which an inference could be drawn that defendant intended at some future time to renew the difficulty.—Kelly v. State, 151 S. W. 304.

§ 340 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the court submitted the issue of manslaughter, and the jury convicted defendant of that offense only, and error in failing to submit that issue in conformity with the evidence was harmless.—Alexander v. State, 151 S. W. 807.

§ 340 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the jury convicted for murder in the second degree and assessed the punishment at 20 years' imprisonment, failure in charging on manslaughter to submit as adequate cause insults shown by the evidence was reversible error.—Washington v. State, 151 S. W. 818.

HUMANITARIAN DOCTRINE.

See Evidence, § 80.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

See Acknowledgment, §§ 37, 58; Adverse Possession, §§ 62, 85; Bills and Notes, § 92; Curtesy; Death, § 14; Descent and Distribution; Divorce; Dower; Executors and Administrators, § 55; Fraudulent Conveyances, §§ 104, 278, 300; Homestead, § 212; Homicide, §§ 59, 96, 310; Insurance, § 115; Judgment, § 686; Landlord and Tenant, § 169; Marriage; Trial, § 41; Witnesses, §§ 190, 193.

I. MUTUAL RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES.

§ 23 (Tex.Civ.App.) The wife of a contractor who, with his consent, was in active charge of the erection of a building was his agent in all things pertaining thereto, and authorized to execute transfers of money to materialmen from the funds due.—A. A. Fielder Lumber Co. v. Smith, 151 S. W. 605.

III. CONVEYANCES, CONTRACTS, AND OTHER TRANSACTIONS BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE.

§ 39 (Mo.App.) A wife may now contract with her husband as if sole.—Crowley v. Crowley, 151 S. W. 512.

§ 49½ (Ky.) A wife, who takes property from her husband as a gift with knowledge that his mother had conveyed the property to him in consideration for maintenance, which she did not get, being unable to live with the wife, cannot object to the declaring of a lien in favor of the mother.—Hopper v. Hopper, 151 S. W. 359.

V. WIFE'S SEPARATE ESTATE.

(A) What Constitutes.

§ 121 (Mo.) Under Rev. St. 1909, §§ 8304, 8309, relative to rights of married women, real and personal property acquired by a wife by means of her separate estate and labor constitute her separate property, and cannot be taken to satisfy her husband's debts.—Crump v. Walkup, 151 S. W. 709.

(B) Rights and Liabilities of Husband.

§ 144 (Mo.App.) Where a husband and wife lived together on the wife's farm, and the husband collected the rents and provided for the family, the wife cannot recover against his estate for such rents, because she never gave written consent to his use of such rents, as required by Rev. St. 1909, § 8309.—Crowley v. Crowley, 151 S. W. 512.

VII. COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

§ 268 (Tex.Civ.App.) A wife who has been abandoned by her husband can bind herself by the execution of a note for the settlement of community debts.—Crowder v. McLeod, 151 S. W. 1168.

§ 276 (Tex.Civ.App.) The general creditors of the husband of one of two deceased married women, claimed to have been partners in a business in their own right, could not intervene in a suit by the administrator of one of them against the administrator of the husband of the other, claiming that defendant had wrongfully taken possession of the property as community property when it was separate property.—Lanza v. Roe, 151 S. W. 571.

VIII. SEPARATION AND SEPARATE MAINTENANCE.

§ 288 (Ky.) A wife, who refused to live in a comfortable home provided at a place where her husband's business required him to be, was not entitled to alimony.—Davis v. Davis, 151 S. W. 361.

§ 288 (Mo.App.) In view of Rev. St. 1909, § 8295, a husband's abandonment of and failure to support his wife will not entitle her to separate maintenance for any given length of time, and his sincere offer to take her back and maintain her with conjugal kindness and affection, even after decree for maintenance, will defeat her right to separate maintenance.—Creasey v. Creasey, 151 S. W. 215.

§ 297 (Mo.App.) Evidence held to support a finding that the defendant offered in good faith to take plaintiff back and maintain her.—Creasey v. Creasey, 151 S. W. 215.

§ 298½ (Mo.App.) The trial court may take the case under advisement and postpone its decision in order to give the parties an opportunity to become reconciled.—Creasey v. Creasey, 151 S. W. 215.

The trial court has the discretionary power to reopen the case and hear additional evidence on the husband's attempt to effect a reconciliation after the decision has been taken under advisement.—Id.

§ 299 (Mo.App.) An adverse judgment based on a resumption of or offer to resume the conjugal relation will not bar a future action, if the husband thereafter continues his ill treatment, or if upon her return he repulses her.—Creasey v. Creasey, 151 S. W. 215.

IX. ABANDONMENT.

§ 304 (Mo.App.) A husband cannot be convicted of abandoning his wife and refusing to support her, where, although he has abandoned her, he has furnished means for her support.—State v. Lasley, 151 S. W. 752.

Where a husband, who had abandoned his wife, made arrangements for her support, in which she had first acquiesced, that she later became dissatisfied was not evidence of criminal intent, necessary to the offense of abandoning a wife and refusing to support.—Id.

§ 313 (Mo.App.) Evidence, on the prosecution of a husband for abandoning his wife and refusing to support her, held to require the direction of a verdict for defendant.—State v. Lasley, 151 S. W. 752.

§ 6 (Tex.Cr.App.) The depth of the penetration is not material to the crime of incest, where there is an emission.—Drake v. State, 151 S. W. 815.

§ 13 (Tex.Cr.App.) In an incest case the court properly excluded testimony as to what the police and detectives told prosecutrix and her mother when the complaint was made.—Drake v. State, 151 S. W. 815.

§ 14 (Tex. Cr. App.) Where accused charged with incest with his stepdaughter, had been married prior to his marriage to the mother of prosecutrix, the state should clearly show that at the time of the second marriage, his first wife was dead, or that the first marriage had been annulled.—Burford v. State, 151 S. W. 538.

V. REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY OF ACCUSATION.

§ 60 (Mo.) Indictment not showing whether or not death of woman or child was caused by abortion held insufficient, because it did not show whether the offense was abortion or manslaughter.—State v. Stapp, 151 S. W. 971.

§ 70 (Tex.Cr.App.) Information for gaming held defective, in that it did not present to the court that accused violated the law, but only that some affiant charged him with such offense.—Zinn v. State, 151 S. W. 825.

§ 86 (Tex.Cr.App.) An indictment alleging that defendant, in C. county, in the state, permitted property under his control, to wit, one house in C., to be used as a resort for gambling held to sufficiently allege that the offense was committed in C. county.—Davis v. State, 151 S. W. 313.

§ 86 (Tex.Cr.App.) An information charging that on an election day in a specified town, voting precinct, and county defendant "then and there" gave intoxicating liquor to another sufficiently charged that the offense was committed in the town.—Walker v. State, 151 S. W. 318.

§ 87 (Tex.Cr.App.) An indictment alleging that defendant, on or about a certain day, permitted property to be used as a resort for gambling held to sufficiently allege the date of the offense.—Davis v. State, 151 S. W. 313.

§ 87 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the record shows that an indictment was returned into court May 22d, charging the commission of an offense May 4th, a recital that the indictment was filed April 22d was a clerical error, and the indictment was found and returned after the commission of the offense as required by White's Ann. Code Cr. Proc. arts. 433, 434.—Fields v. State, 151 S. W. 1051.

§ 87 (Tex.Cr.App.) An indictment charging the commission of a statutory offense on a certain date, which was after the passage of the statute, is good on its face without containing the allegation that the offense was committed after such passage.—Byrd v. State, 151 S. W. 1068.

VI. JOINDER OF PARTIES, OFFENSES, AND COUNTS, DUPLICITY, AND ELECTION.

§ 125 (Mo.) The administration of drugs and the use of instruments to produce an abortion are separate offenses, and hence should not be charged in one count of an indictment.—State v. Stapp, 151 S. W. 971.

X. CONVICTION OF OFFENSE INCLUDED IN CHARGE.

§ 189 (Tex.Cr.App.) Under Code Cr. Proc. 1911, arts. 771, 772, subd. 2, 837, one indicted for an assault with intent to rape, for an attempt to have carnal knowledge, and for burglary with intent to have carnal knowledge, may be convicted of aggravated assault.—Ward v. State, 151 S. W. 1073.

INFANTS.

III. PROPERTY AND CONVEYANCES.

§ 29 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where an infant solemnly ratified the sale of land of an executor after reaching maturity, he cannot set it aside for irregularities after the land has greatly increased in value.—Diamwood v. Driscoll, 151 S. W. 621.

§ 30 (Tex.Civ.App.) An infant, who did not attempt to disaffirm a sale until three years after his majority, will be held to have affirmed it.—Diamwood v. Driscoll, 151 S. W. 621.

IV. CONTRACTS.

§ 47 (Ky.) An infant is not bound by contract made by another person purporting to act for him, unless such person has been appointed guardian or next friend, or is in some manner authorized by law to act for him.—Slusher v. Weller, 151 S. W. 684.

§ 50 (Ky.) An infant is bound for necessities including legal services in defense of his civil or property rights.—Slusher v. Weller, 151 S. W. 684.

I. NATURE AND GROUNDS IN GENERAL.

(B) Grounds of Relief.

§ 12 (Mo.App.) A court of equity may enjoin a threatened irreparable injury to property rights, though no injury has then occurred.—Williams v. School Dist. No. 5, 151 S. W. 504.

II. SUBJECTS OF PROTECTION AND RELIEF.

(B) Property, Conveyances, and Incumbrances.

§ 35 (Tex.Civ.App.) A private corporation given the exclusive possession and control of property owned by the state, charged with its care and maintenance, has the right to defend its possession as against a trespasser by action to enjoin the trespass.—Conley v. Daughters of the Republic of Texas, 151 S. W. 877.

A private corporation vested by the Legislature with the exclusive possession and control of property belonging to the state to sustain a suit to enjoin a trespass, need not show express statutory authority, since the statute carried with it the grant of every power needed to carry its purpose into effect.—Id.

§ 46 (Tex.Civ.App.) A showing that its possession had been invaded and injured entitled a corporation in custody and control of property to an injunction restraining trespass.—Conley v. Daughters of the Republic of Texas, 151 S. W. 877.

III. ACTIONS FOR INJUNCTIONS.

§ 118 (Tex.Civ.App.) A petition to enjoin a substituted trustee from selling land which states that such trustee did not have authority under the trust deed, which was a conclusion, but pleads no facts showing whether the deed of trust gave him authority, was insufficient: a power to sell being strictly construed.—Hicks v. Murphy, 151 S. W. 845.

IV. PRELIMINARY AND INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTIONS.

(A) Grounds and Proceedings to Procure.

§ 148 (Tex.Civ.App.) An injunction restraining a substituted trustee under a deed of trust from selling the land, but saying nothing about the collection of the notes for which the deed of trust was security, was not one restraining the collection of money within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3008, requiring a refunding bond in such cases.—Hicks v. Murphy, 151 S. W. 845.

(B) Continuing, Modifying, Vacating, or Dissolving.

§ 172 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the answer is a complete denial, the dissolution of a temporary injunction against the sale of land under a trust deed rests largely in the discretion of the trial court.—Corbett v. Sweeney, 151 S. W. 858.

§ 187 (Ark.) A temporary restraining order is not "an injunction to stay proceedings upon a judgment or final order" of the county court, within Kirby's Dig. § 3998, providing that upon the dissolution of an injunction to stay proceedings upon a judgment or final order damages shall be assessed by the court.—Adcock v. Coker, 151 S. W. 253.

VII. VIOLATION AND PUNISHMENT.

§ 219 (Tenn.) Dismissal on certiorari of bills in the chancery court to enjoin the maintenance of disorderly houses on the ground of want of jurisdiction held not to affect contempt proceedings for disobedience of the injunctions granted, although the imprisonment orders should be remitted.—Weidner v. Friedman, 151 S. W. 56.

§ 232 (Tenn.) The chancery court, in punishing a disobedience of its injunction as a contempt, may impose only $50 fine and 10 days' imprisonment.—Weidner v. Friedman, 151 S. W. 56.

VIII. LIABILITIES ON BONDS OR UNDERTAKINGS.

§ 241 (Ark.) The chancery court, in a proceeding by the county treasurer to enjoin the county judge from establishing a depository for funds, held, on intervention by prosecuting attorney, asking for judgment on injunction bond for damages for interest on daily balances, to have no jurisdiction; the amounts of such interest, if any, being within the exclusive jurisdiction of the county court.—Adcock v. Coker, 151 S. W. 253.

§ 241 (Tenn.) Under Shannon's Code, § 6259, providing that damages from an injunction may be ascertained by a master, or upon an issue of fact tried by a jury, defendant may have a reference or sue on the injunction bond.—King v. Cox, 151 S. W. 58.

§ 23 (Mo.) Rev. St. 1909, § 482, held not to deprive the probate court of jurisdiction to sustain a motion by an alleged insane person to set aside the verdict finding her insane on a motion filed and heard, but not determined during the term.—State ex rel. Nolte v. McQuillin, 151 S. W. 444.

§ 27 (Mo.) Decree adjudging a person of unsound mind being subject to vacation at any subsequent term under Rev. St. 1909, § 519, no appeal lies therefrom.—State ex rel. Nolte v. McQuillin, 151 S. W. 444.

II. INSURANCE COMPANIES.

(B) Mutual Companies.

§ 63 (Tenn.) Mutual assessment fire insurance companies have no capital stock, the policy holders being the stockholders, and the cash paid in and the premium notes constituting the company's assets; and hence, upon the insolvency of such company, a policy holder cannot recover premiums paid in or avoid premium notes.—Gleason v. Prudential Fire Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 1030.

§ 64 (Tenn.) Where a bill by an insured to recover on a policy of an insolvent insurance company is good as a creditors' bill, it cannot be rejected because complainant is not entitled to recover under the policy; all other creditors being given an opportunity to come in.—Gleason v. Prudential Fire Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 1030.

§ 70 (Tenn.) The appointment of a receiver for an insolvent mutual assessment fire insurance company terminates all fire insurance contracts, regardless of the payment of premium and period to continue.—Gleason v. Prudential Fire Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 1030.

III. INSURANCE AGENTS AND BROKERS.

(B) Agency for Applicant or Insured.

§ 113 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where a mortgagee agreed to attend to the insurance on the mortgaged premises and procured policies of insurance thereon and retained them in its possession, the mortgagor was chargeable with notice of their provisions.—Commonwealth Fire Ins. Co. v. Obenchain, 151 S. W. 611.

IV. INSURABLE INTEREST.

§ 115 (Tenn.) A husband, having a freehold estate in the property of his wife and the right to control it, has an insurable interest therein.—Gleason v. Prudential Fire Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 1030.

§ 122 (Mo.App.) An assignment of an insurance policy to one who has no interest in the life of the insured held valid only to the extent of advances made.—Locke v. Bowman, 151 S. W. 468.

V. THE CONTRACT IN GENERAL.

(A) Nature, Requisites, and Validity.

§ 143 (Tenn.) Where by mistake a fire policy misdescribed the location of the property insured, insured's remedy is to ask for a reformation; but no action can be maintained upon the policy, where the property destroyed was not in the location described.—Gleason v. Prudential Fire Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 1030.

VI. PREMIUMS, DUES, AND ASSESSMENTS.

§ 198 (Ky.) The acceptance and retention of a life policy will not estop insured from maintaining an action to recover the premiums paid on the ground of false representations inducing the contract.—Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. of New York v. Shearer, 151 S. W. 938.

Evidence held to support a verdict for insured for the amount of premiums paid on a life policy, based on want of consideration and fraudulent representations of the agent of insurer.—Id.

On recovery by insured of the premiums paid on a life policy on the ground of fraudulent representations by insurer's agent, the insurer is entitled to credit for the actual cost of the insurance while the policy was in force.—Id.

VII. ASSIGNMENT OR OTHER TRANSFER OF POLICY.

§ 212 (Mo.App.) In an action to set aside an assignment of a policy of life insurance, the burden of showing its validity held to be on the defendant, where the complaint showed an assignment prima facie void.—Locke v. Bowman, 151 S. W. 468.

§ 219 (Mo.App.) An assignee of an assignee of a life insurance policy held to acquire only the rights of his assignor.—Locke v. Bowman, 151 S. W. 468.

An assignor of a policy of life insurance held not estopped to set up his title as against the assignee.—Id.

§ 219 (Tex.Civ.App.) Assignee of policy of fire insurance, knowing that the delivery of the policy was unauthorized, that it had never been accepted by the insured, and that on failure to pay premiums it was automatically canceled, held not entitled to recover.—Polk v. State Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 1126.

§ 222 (Mo.App.) In an action to redeem a policy of life insurance assigned absolutely as security, an allegation of tender before suit brought held unnecessary.—Locke v. Bowman, 151 S. W. 468.

X. FORFEITURE OF POLICY FOR BREACH OF PROMISSORY WARRANTY, COVENANT, OR CONDITION SUBSEQUENT.

(B) Matters Relating to Property or Interest Insured.

§ 328 (Tex.Civ.App.) Insurance company liable although no policy was issued, because it had agreed to attend to the matter, held not relieved of liability by a conveyance as security two years before the loss because the policy, if issued, would have been subsequent to such conveyance.—Commonwealth Fire Ins. Co. v. Obenchain, 151 S. W. 611.

§ 335 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the keeping of invoices and books of entry by insured was in substantial compliance with the iron-safe clause, he was entitled to recover.—American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Hardin, 151 S. W. 1152.

(E) Nonpayment of Premiums or Assessments.

§ 349 (Tenn.) Where a fire policy and a premium note provided that failure to pay any premium note when due should terminate the liability of insurer, insured's failure to pay a premium note according to its tenor avoided the policy.—Gleason v. Prudential Fire Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 1030.

§ 353 (Tenn.) Where the agent, in inducing insured to accept a fire policy, agreed to give him reasonable notice of the maturity of a premium note, that agreement will prevent the insurer from declaring forfeiture for nonpayment of the note, when no notice was given.—Gleason v. Prudential Fire Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 1030.

§ 362 (Tex.Civ.App.) Failure of insured to pay insurance premium when notified by local agent that it was due held not to relieve the company, the mortgagee, from liability where it had agreed to attend to the insurance, had done so for a time, and had not notified the insured that it would not continue to do so.—Commonwealth Fire Ins. Co. v. Obenchain, 151 S. W. 611.

XI. ESTOPPEL, WAIVER, OR AGREEMENTS AFFECTING RIGHT TO AVOID OR FORFEIT POLICY.

§ 384 (Tex.Civ.App.) An insurer whose agent consented in advance to additional insurance, and issued a slip showing such agreement, was estopped from asserting a forfeiture, though such slip was not attached to the policy until after the loss.—American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Hardin, 151 S. W. 1152.

XIII. EXTENT OF LOSS AND LIABILITY OF INSURER.

(E) Accident and Health Insurance.

§ 525 (Ky.) Under a life insurance policy providing for liability so long as insured was confined to bed, liability held not removed by the fact that insured was up at times to get fresh air, etc.—Home Protective Ass'n v. Williams, 151 S. W. 361.

XIV. NOTICE AND PROOF OF LOSS.

§ 536 (Tenn.) Where the local agent, as well as the adjuster, of a fire insurance company, promised to furnish insured with blanks for proof of loss, their failure to furnish the blanks within the time stipulated by the policy is a waiver of the condition requiring insured to make proofs within that time.—Gleason v. Prudential Fire Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 1030.

Where an insurance company became insolvent and a receiver was appointed after a loss, but before the time for filing proofs had expired, and the court fixed a time within which creditors were required to file petitions establishing their claims, that order superseded the requirement of filing proofs of loss.—Id.

XVII. PAYMENT OR DISCHARGE, CONTRIBUTION, AND SUBROGATION.

§ 602 (Tex.Civ.App.) Acts 31st Leg. c. 108, § 35, making an insurer failing to pay a loss liable for damages and attorney's fees, requires the petition to specifically allege a demand and refusal to pay within the statutory time.—General Accident, Fire & Life Assur. Corporation v. Lacy, 151 S. W. 1170.

XVIII. ACTIONS ON POLICIES.

§ 629 (Ky.) Where a policy contains a general clause with a promise to pay, exceptions in a distinct clause limiting the general clause need not be pleaded by plaintiff.—Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Rustin, 151 S. W. 366.

§ 653 (Tex. Civ. App.) Where the evidence tended to show that loss under a fire policy was occasioned by incendiaryism, evidence as to the existence of a mortgage on the property was admissible as tending to show a motive.—Philadelphia Underwriters Agency of Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. Brown, 151 S. W. 899.

§ 665 (Ky.) In action on policy, where defense was suicide, evidence held to make a prima facie case for plaintiff.—Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Rustin, 151 S. W. 366.

Evidence in an action on a policy limiting insurer's liability for death from injuries intentionally inflicted, except assaults for burglary or robbery, held to justify a recovery, although it did not show that the injuries were inflicted in such an assault.—Id.

§ 669 (Ky.) In action on accident insurance policy, where suicide was the defense, instructions held to have properly submitted the case as made by the evidence.—Aetna Ins. Co. v. Rustin, 151 S. W. 366.

XX. MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE

(B) The Contract in General.

§ 723 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where insured in her medical examination stated that she had had two miscarriages, proof that she had had two abortions did not show a breach of warranty.—Royal Neighbors of America v. Bratcher, 151 S. W. 885.

Proof that insured had been treated for headache three years prior to the issuance of her policy, she having stated that she had had no illness for seven years, was not necessarily a defense; the jury being authorized to find that it was not material to the risk under Acts 31st Leg. (2d Extra Sess.) c. 22.—Id.

(D) Forfeiture or Suspension.

§ 747 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where a member of a fraternal organization was not in good standing at the time of his death in the only subordinate temple to which he belonged, or could belong, there could be no recovery on the certificate.—International Order of Twelve Knights & Daughters of Tabor v. Wilson, 151 S. W. 320.

(F) Actions for Benefits.

§ 815 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the petition in an action on a certificate issued by a fraternal organization alleged that decedent was a member of a subordinate temple, it was error to introduce in evidence the financial card of another temple.—International Order of Twelve Knights & Daughters of Tabor v. Wilson, 151 S. W. 320.

§ 818 (Tex.Civ.App.) A letter from a negro fraternal organization, written after the death of a member, notifying the beneficiary of her expulsion, held inadmissible on the issue as to whether insured was a member in good standing at his death.—International Order of Twelve Knights & Daughters of Tabor v. Wilson, 151 S. W. 320.

Insurable interest, see Insurance, §§ 115, 122.

II. RATE.

§ 38 (Mo.App.) Under Rev. St. 1909, §§ 7179, 7181, making 6 per cent. the legal rate of interest, and declaring that judgments shall bear that rate, a judgment on a special tax bill draws such rate, though the city charter authorizes 8 per cent. on tax bills in case of default.—Granite Bituminous Paving Co. v. Parkview Realty & Improvement Co., 151 S. W. 479.

III. LOCAL OPTION.

§ 29 (Mo.) Under the statutory construction section of Rev. St. 1889, § 6570, and Laws 1907, p. 263, defining the terms "general election," local option law (Laws 1887, p. 179), prohibiting a holding of a local option election within 60 days of a general election, held not to prohibit the holding of a local option election within 60 days of a primary.—State ex rel. Million v. Graham, 151 S. W. 729.

IV. LICENSES AND TAXES.

§ 82 (Tex.) A valid local option election resulting in the adoption of the law is essential to any liability on a liquor dealer's bond given under the local option law.—State v. Savage, 151 S. W. 530.

VI. OFFENSES.

§ 146 (Ark.) Defendant was asked by M. if he could get him some whisky, and was given money to get it. He got it of B., who had told him he could get of him any time, and gave it to M., who did not know B. was engaged in selling it. Held, that he was a necessary factor in making the sale, and that he acted for B. as well as M., and so was a principal in the illegal sale.—Bobo v. State, 151 S. W. 1000.

§ 146 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where the state's witness gave defendant 50 cents to get some whisky, and when defendant returned with alcohol refused to take it, but afterwards followed defendant and took the alcohol from him without his consent, there was no sale; but if he took it in payment of the 50 cents, with defendant's consent, it would be a sale.—Scott v. State, 151 S. W. 550.

§ 146 (Tex.Cr.App.) The giving of whisky to be repaid in whisky is a sale.—Black v. State, 151 S. W. 1053.

§ 148 (Tex.Cr.App.) The offense of pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquors in local option territory is a distinct offense from that of making a sale of intoxicating liquors, and is a felony.—Byrd v. State, 151 S. W. 1068.

VIII. CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

§ 205 (Tex.Cr.App.) Under the Code, an indictment charging accused with pursuing the occupation of selling intoxicating liquors in local option territory and with making sales to persons named and to persons unknown is not bad for failing to allege that, during the time of the sales, accused continued to pursue the business of selling liquor.—Byrd v. State, 151 S. W. 1068.

§ 221 (Tex.Cr.App.) An information charging the giving of intoxicating liquors to another on election day need not state that the defendant is not a druggist within a proviso to the statute.—Walker v. State, 151 S. W. 318.

§ 224 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for sales of intoxicants made by a licensed dealer on Sunday, the state, having introduced his application for a license in which he made affidavit that prohibition was not in effect, is not bound to show that the local option law had not been adopted.—Woods v. State, 151 S. W. 296.

§ 226 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for a gift of intoxicating liquor on election day, the order of the commissioners' court creating the election precinct, as well as evidence that the town in which the offense was alleged to have been committed was in such precinct, was admissible.—Walker v. State, 151 S. W. 318.

§ 227 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for illegal sales of intoxicating liquors, it is proper to allow witness to testify that accused was engaged in the saloon business, even if it had not been shown that the retail license introduced in evidence was issued to accused.—Woods v. State, 151 S. W. 296.

§ 233 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for a sale of intoxicants on Sunday, it is not error for a witness to be asked whether he saw the side door of accused's saloon open on a stated Sunday.—Woods v. State, 151 S. W. 296.

§ 233 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, evidence to show that defendant had access to a quantity of whisky at the time of the alleged sales was admissible.—Black v. State, 151 S. W. 1053.

§ 233 (Tex.Cr.App.) Under an indictment charging accused with carrying on the business of selling liquor in local option territory, the state was properly permitted to show the amount of liquor received by accused and that it was delivered at the place where the business was carried on.—Byrd v. State, 151 S. W. 1068.

§ 234 (Tex.Cr.App.) Whether or not a liquor license had been issued is a fact, which may be proved without the exhibition of the license, especially in view of Acts 31st Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 17, § 14, requiring the posting of licenses.—Woods v. State, 151 S. W. 296.

§ 235 (Tex.Cr.App.) On a trial for pursuing the business of selling liquor in local option territory, the refusal to permit accused to show his custom to order liquor for patrons held proper.—Byrd v. State, 151 S. W. 1068.

§ 236 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for giving intoxicating liquor to a minor without the consent of his parent or guardian, evidence held insufficient to sustain a conviction.—Simpson v. State, 151 S. W. 303.

§ 238 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for the sale of liquor, where the evidence was conflicting as to whether defendant consented to its taking from him by the state's witness, the failure to submit the question of his consent was reversible error.—Scott v. State, 151 S. W. 550.

§ 239 (Tex.Cr.App.) Proof that accused did not know that what she sold was intoxicating did not raise the issue of an offense committed by accident within Pen. Code 1911, arts. 45, 47, in the absence of proof that she used proper care to ascertain before offering to sell it.—Mollenkopf v. State, 151 S. W. 799.

Where the state's witnesses testified that they bought intoxicating wine from accused, while she claimed that she sold only unfermented grape juice, she was entitled to have an affirmative instruction submitting such issue to the jury.—Id.

An instruction as to what was necessary to show that accused engaged in the business of selling intoxicating liquor, etc., held misleading.—Id.

X. ABATEMENT AND INJUNCTION.

§ 261 (Tex.Civ.App.) Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 4643, does not authorize the court to enjoin a public nuisance created by pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquors without a license, but the party seeking the remedy must show himself entitled thereto under the general principles of equity, or bring himself within some statute granting the relief.—Spence v. Fenchler, 151 S. W. 1094.

§ 274 (Tex.Civ.App.) A private person, to be entitled to a temporary injunction under Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 4674 (1), to abate a public nuisance, must allege that a person named pursued the business of selling intoxicating liquors without a license and thereby created a nuisance.—Spence v. Fenchler, 151 S. W. 1094.

IV. DISQUALIFICATION TO ACT.

§ 47 (Tenn.) A judge is not disqualified to act in a case merely because he will be a witness, in view of Shannon's Code, § 5594, making the judge a competent witness in any case before him.—In re Cameron, 151 S. W. 64.

Trial judge held not to have become prosecutor, and disqualified from hearing disbarment proceedings, by consulting with others before making charges of misconduct, in order to test his recollection of what occurred.—Id.

§ 49 (Tenn.) A judge is not absolutely disqualified to hear and determine a case merely because he is personally prejudiced against a party; it being left to his personal discretion whether he will act.—In re Cameron, 151 S. W. 64.

A trial judge, who, as shown by uncontradicted evidence, had decided disbarment proceedings before hearing, held disqualified, under Const. art. 6, § 11, and Shannon's Code, § 5706.—Id.

A trial judge is not disqualified on the ground that he had decided the case in advance, unless it appears beyond any doubt that such is the fact; his denial, though not under oath, being conclusive on this point.—Id.

JUDGMENT.

I. NATURE AND ESSENTIALS IN GENERAL.

§ 1 (Tex.) The judgment of a court is that which it pronounces; that is, the judicial act by which it declares the decision of the law upon the matter at issue.—Coleman v. Zapp, 151 S. W. 1040.

IV. BY DEFAULT.

(A) Requisites and Validity.

§ 106 (Tex.Civ.App.) The filing of a plea charging a defect of parties was not the filing of such answer as would prevent the entry of a judgment by default under Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 1936.—Gillaspie v. City of Huntsville, 151 S. W. 1114.

An answer filed, but not called to the attention of the court, will not render the entry of a judgment by default error.—Id.

§ 107 (Mo.) Defendant held not in default, so as to warrant judgment, where his answer contained a general denial, as well as the counterclaim to which a demurrer was sustained.—Montgomery v. Gahagan, 151 S. W. 453.

(B) Opening or Setting Aside Default.

§ 138 (Ky.) An order directing that the allegations of the petition, as amended, be taken as confessed, is an interlocutory order, which may be set aside at a subsequent term, without following the Code provisions for vacating judgments.—Duff & Oney v. Rose, 151 S. W. 22.

§ 138 (Tex.Civ.App.) A nonresident defendant, who did not attempt to engage counsel until a few days before the beginning of the term at which the case was to be tried, did not exercise sufficient diligence to warrant the setting aside of his default because he was unrepresented by counsel.—Booker v. Coulter, 151 S. W. 335.

Where a nonresident defendant knew, at least a month before trial, that he could not be present, and that his defense could only be established by his evidence, a default will not be set aside, on failure to have his deposition taken, to allow him to present his defense.—Id.

§ 139 (Tex.Civ.App.) An application to set aside a default judgment is addressed to the sound discretion of the court.—Gillaspie v. City of Huntsville, 151 S. W. 1114.

§ 143 (Tex.Civ.App.) A defendant who on appearance day suggested that his wife was a necessary party, and left the courtroom without answering to the merits, expecting the court according to custom to take cognizance of the pleading filed, and to have him called when the case should be reached, no such custom being proved, did not present a valid excuse for failing to answer in time.—Gillaspie v. City of Huntsville, 151 S. W. 1114.

§ 143 (Tex.Civ.App.) A defendant who, before the end of the term, filed his application to vacate a default judgment and pleaded as an excuse a compromise and settlement of the claim and a promise by plaintiff to dismiss the action, showed a reasonable excuse for defaulting.—General Accident, Fire & Life Assur. Corporation v. Lacy, 151 S. W. 1170.

§ 145 (Tex.Civ.App.) A default judgment will not be vacated, on the ground that defendant was not represented by counsel, where, had he been represented by counsel, the result could not have been changed.—Booker v. Coulter, 151 S. W. 335.

§ 145 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where on the day following rendition of judgment by default defendant filed a motion to set aside and an answer to the merits, the court should have looked to the allegations of the answer to determine whether defendant had a meritorious defense.—Gillaspie v. City of Huntsville, 151 S. W. 1114.

§ 158 (Tex.Civ.App.) A motion to set aside a default must be denied, where the allegation of a meritorious defense is not supported by affidavit.—Booker v. Coulter, 151 S. W. 335.

§ 162 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where on the day following rendition of judgment by default defendant filed a motion to set aside and an answer to the merits, the court should have looked to the allegations of the answer to determine whether defendant had a meritorious defense, but could not hear proof to determine their truth.—Gillaspie v. City of Huntsville, 151 S. W. 1114.

§ 162 (Tex.Civ.App.) The court on a motion to open a default may take testimony on the merits of the defense interposed, where no objection is made to a trial of the issue in that way.—General Accident, Fire & Life Assur. Corporation v. Lacy, 151 S. W. 1170.

§ 163 (Tex.Civ.App.) The court on motion to open a default may not as a general rule pass on the merits of a defense in support of the motion.—General Accident, Fire & Life Assur. Corporation v. Lacy, 151 S. W. 1170.

VI. ON TRIAL OF ISSUES.

(B) Parties.

§ 239 (Mo.) A plaintiff suing two or more persons as joint tort-feasors may recover against one alone, and this rule is not changed by Rev. St. 1909, § 1734.—Winn v. Kansas City Belt Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 98.

(C) Conformity to Process, Pleadings, Proofs, and Verdict or Findings.

§ 248 (Mo.App.) Judgments and decrees must be responsive to the pleadings and issues.—Advance Thresher Co. v. Speak, 151 S. W. 235.

§ 250 (Mo.App.) In an action for breach of a contract to float logs, brought on theory of mere failure of performance, causing total loss of the logs, plaintiff could not recover on the theory of defendant's abandonment of the contract, imposing on plaintiff the duty to minimize damages.—Cronan v. Stutsman, 151 S. W. 166.

§ 253 (Tex.Civ.App.) A money judgment cannot exceed the amount demanded in the petition.—First Bank of Springtown v. Hill, 151 S. W. 652.

§ 253 (Tex.Civ.App.) The amount plaintiff may recover is limited by the allegations of the petition.—Anderson v. Crow, 151 S. W. 1080.

§ 256 (Tex.Civ.App.) A finding that attorneys were entitled to part of land under a deed held to involve a finding that the deed was not one upon a contingency for one-half of the land recovered by the grantor in an action, and hence it was improper to limit their recovery to one-half the land.—Morris v. Short, 151 S. W. 633.

VII. ENTRY, RECORD, AND DOCKETING.

§ 293 (Tex.) The failure to correctly or fully enter a judgment upon the minutes does not annul it, but merely makes its record imperfect.—Coleman v. Zapp, 151 S. W. 1040.

VIII. AMENDMENT, CORRECTION, AND REVIEW IN SAME COURT.

§ 294 (Tex.) The right to have a judgment entry correspond with the terms of the judgment is not affected by rule 48 for the district courts (142 S. W. xxi), requiring counsel for the successful party to prepare the form of the judgment and submit it to the court.—Coleman v. Zapp, 151 S. W. 1040.

§ 299 (Tex.) A court's jurisdiction over its judgment records does not end with the term; the case being regarded as pending until the judgment is correctly recorded.—Coleman v. Zapp, 151 S. W. 1040.

§ 318 (Tex.) The right of a party to have a judgment entry corrected or amended to speak the truth cannot be exercised to the prejudice of innocent third persons.—Coleman v. Zapp, 151 S. W. 1040.

§ 321 (Tex.) A delay of six years after entry of a judgment in applying to correct it nunc pro tunc by adding an omitted part does not bar the relief where the parties had not changed their positions and no rights had intervened.—Coleman v. Zapp, 151 S. W. 1040.

§ 326 (Tex.) A court has inherent power to correct a judgment nunc pro tunc, so as to properly recite the effect of its judgment.—Coleman v. Zapp, 151 S. W. 1040.

§ 335 (Mo.) Petition stating the facts prescribed for a petition for review by Rev. St. 1899, § 780, held to be a petition for review, under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 777, 780, though an additional party was brought in, and one party was transferred to a different side.—Marshall v. Hill, 151 S. W. 131.

The proceeding named a "petition for review" is highly remedial, and must accommodate itself to the needs and practices of every proceeding that comes within its scope.—Id.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 784, providing that a conveyance to satisfy a judgment shall not be affected by a vacation of the judgment on petition for review, as against innocent purchasers, the title of innocent purchasers for value from the holder of the legal title cannot be set aside in proceedings for review by the holders of the equitable title.—Id.

IX. EQUITABLE RELIEF.

(A) Nature of Remedy and Grounds.

§ 419 (Tex.Civ.App.) A default judgment against a partnership on allegation that it was a corporation and service having been had on a certain person as agent of the alleged corporation held void and its enforcement subject to injunction.—Spaulding Mfg. Co. v. Kuvkendall, 151 S. W. 1122.

XI. COLLATERAL ATTACK.

(B) Grounds.

§ 495 (Tex.Civ.App.) Every presumption is in favor of the jurisdiction of a court of general jurisdiction in a collateral attack on its judgment.—Wilkin v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 1145.

XIII. MERGER AND BAR OF CAUSES OF ACTION AND DEFENSES.(A) Judgments Operative as Bar.

§ 568 (Mo.App.) A default judgment for an indorser against the makers of the note is a bar in a second action between the same parties to charge real estate fraudulently conveyed, as to a defense that plaintiff was released by an extension of time, so that her payment of the note was voluntary.—Wilson v. Salisbury, 151 S. W. 194.

§ 572 (Tenn.) A decree on demurrer held res judicata, when a demurrer to a single ground of relief is overruled, when the demurrer is sustained and the bill dismissed, when the bill presents several grounds of relief and the court acts upon each ground, but not where there is a general judgment overruling a demurrer to a bill setting up several grounds of relief.—Logan & Maphet Lumber Co. v. Cross, 151 S. W. 51.

Judgment of Supreme Court that demurrer to bill alleging several grounds of relief was not well taken, and affirming the decree overruling it, and remanding the bill for answer and further proceedings, held res judicata as to a new bill containing the same grounds of relief.—Id.

(B) Causes of Action and Defenses Merged, Barred, or Concluded.

§ 585 (Mo.App.) A judgment adjudging that a party is not entitled to a release of a deed of trust securing a debt bars an action for the statutory penalty for a refusal to release the deed of trust.—Warner v. Michel, 151 S. W. 159.

§ 585 (Mo.App.) A judgment denying relief to insured suing for the premiums paid is not res judicata in a subsequent action by his widow and children for the amount of the policy, on the theory that Rev. St. 1889, § 5886, in force at the time, extended the insurance beyond the date of insured's death.—Hartwig v. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 477.

§ 606 (Ky.) Where the builders of a railroad wrongfully blasted rock into a river so as to divert its channel and cause a riparian owner's land to be overflowed, separate actions may be recovered for each of the recurring floods, and a recovery by the landowner will not bar his grantees.—Turner v. J. M. Brooks & Sons, 151 S. W. 948.

XIV. CONCLUSIVENESS OF ADJUDICATION.(B) Persons Concluded.

§ 686 (Ky.) A judgment in an action to which plaintiff's husband was a party, construing a will under which he claimed, which judgment had never been set aside or reversed, was conclusive against plaintiff as devisee of her husband.—Landers v. Landers, 151 S. W. 386.

(C) Matters Concluded.

§ 713 (Mo.App.) A judgment for a foreign corporation instituting an action is conclusive on its right to sue since such issue could have been tried.—Scientific American Club v. Horchitz, 151 S. W. 475.

§ 713 (Mo.App.) A judgment bars a subsequent suit between the same parties on the same cause of action as to all matters which might have been litigated in the prior action.—Hartwig v. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co., 151 S. W. 477.

XVII. FOREIGN JUDGMENTS.

§ 829 (Ky.) The judgment of the United States Circuit Court, from which no writ of error has been taken, rendered after it has sustained its own jurisdiction and refused to remand the action, cannot be collaterally attacked in the state as void for want of jurisdiction.—Tyson's Adm'x v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 151 S. W. 404.

XIX. SUSPENSION, ENFORCEMENT, AND REVIVAL.

§ 853 (Ky.) A lapse of more than 15 years from the issuance of an execution will bar any attempt to subject the debtor's property to the judgment.—Cropper v. Gaar's Ex'r, 151 S. W. 913.

XXII. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE OF JUDGMENT AS ESTOPPEL OR DEFENSE.

§ 948 (Mo.) In the absence of a plea the question of res judicata need not be considered.—Nelson v. Jones, 151 S. W. 80.

§ 948 (Tex.Civ.App.) Res judicata must be pleaded and proven.—Pye v. Wyatt, 151 S. W. 1088.

§ 953 (Ky.) Evidence held sufficient to show that, in an action in which the construction of a will was involved, it was determined that a person had only a defeasible fee, although the papers in such action had been destroyed by fire.—Landers v. Landers, 151 S. W. 386.

JURY.

See Criminal Law, § 871; Grand Jury; New Trial, § 52.

II. RIGHT TO TRIAL BY JURY.

§ 13 (Ky.) Const. § 7, guaranteeing the right of trial by jury, has reference to cases in which such right was given at common law, and issues of fact in equity cases are triable by a jury only at the discretion of the chancellor.—Rieger v. Schulte & Eicher, 151 S. W. 395.

§ 14 (Ky.) Under Civ. Code Prac. § 12, providing for a jury trial of issues in equitable actions, and Ky. St. §§ 2471, 2472, 2473, providing for the hearing of lien claimants by a commissioner and his report thereon, held that disputed questions as to whether alleged defects in a building were chargeable to any of the lien claimants, and, if so, to what extent their liens should be abated, are not triable by jury.—Rieger v. Schulte & Eicher, 151 S. W. 395.

§ 25 (Mo.) A motion for a trial by jury after a referee has filed his report is too late.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

§ 29 (Tex.Cr.App.) The statute which provides that defendant, in a misdemeanor case, may waive a jury, enables him to agree to a trial by a jury composed of less than six men.—Mackey v. State, 151 S. W. 802.

Where defendants agree to the trial of a misdemeanor before a jury of five, an objection to such a trial, first made after conviction, comes too late.—Id.

V. COMPETENCY OF JURORS, CHALLENGES, AND OBJECTIONS.

§ 142 (Ky.) After adverse verdict in a will contest, appellant held estopped from complaining of the overruling of a challenge to a juror for cause, where he did not on examination of the juror ask such questions or give such information as would have shown the juror's opinion.—Crosthwaite v. Crosthwaite, 151 S. W. 945.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 297, 532; Courts, § 120; Criminal Law, § 447.

IV. PROCEDURE IN CIVIL CASES.

§§ 73, 74 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the regular justice was sick, a justice of the same precinct could, as authorized by Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1566, perform the duties of the office, provided he was the nearest justice.—Chance v. Pace, 151 S. W. 843.

§ 84 (Mo.App.) A defendant, appealing from a justice of the peace, and appearing on appeal for the sole purpose of quashing the return on the summons and dismissing the action, does not thereby waive defective service.—Handlan-Buck Mfg. Co. v. Chester, P. & Ste. G. R. Co., 151 S. W. 171.

§ 84 (Tex.Civ.App.) An appearance by defendant in justice's court to obtain a continuance, and actually obtaining a continuance, is a waiver of the issuance and service of citation.—Chance v. Pace, 151 S. W. 843.

§ 106 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1301, providing that a party may take a nonsuit at any time before a decision is announced by the court, and article 1677, making the same procedure applicable to justices' courts, a nonsuit may be entered after the justice has announced his decision, but before formal judgment is rendered.—Pye v. Wyatt, 151 S. W. 1086.

§ 135 (Tex.Civ.App.) A petition to restrain an execution sale under a justice's judgment, which alleged that the justice was without jurisdiction because the suit was based on 20 notes of $10 each and 10 per cent. attorney's fees, as against which a credit of $45 had been allowed, did not show that the amount involved was in excess of $200; there being no averment as to the date of the credit.—Chance v. Pace, 151 S. W. 843.

A defendant in justice's court, who made no defense, though he knew of the action, and who showed no excuse for his failure to appeal or bring certiorari, was not entitled to restrain an execution sale under the judgment.—Id.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1657-1659, making execution issued on justice's judgment returnable in 60 days, a writ not returned within that time lapses.—Id.

§ 135 (Tex.Civ.App.) The enforcement of a judgment of a justice of the peace will not be restrained unless the judgment is wholly void for want of jurisdiction, and not merely erroneous.—Pye v. Wyatt, 151 S. W. 1086.

The privilege to be sued before a justice in a given district is a matter of defense and does not affect the validity of a judgment rendered, and hence enforcement of such judgment will not be restrained.—Id.

In an action to enjoin a justice's judgment on the ground of a previous judgment of nonsuit, an allegation that in the first action the justice stated that he would be compelled to render judgment for defendant is not equivalent to an allegation that judgment had been pronounced so that no nonsuit could be taken.—Id.

V. REVIEW OF PROCEEDINGS.

(A) Appeal and Error.

§ 191 (Mo.App.) A surety on an appeal bond is in privity with the judgment debtor; and the judgment is binding on both.—Scientific American Club v. Horchitz, 151 S. W. 475.

(B) Certiorari.

§ 210 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where defendant, against whom a judgment was rendered in justice's court, brought certiorari, plaintiff, obtaining a judgment on the merits, was entitled to judgment against the sureties on the bond filed, as required by Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 749.—Ingram v. McClure, 151 S. W. 339.

II. LEASES AND AGREEMENTS IN GENERAL.

(A) Requisites and Validity.

§ 20 (Mo.) At common law the term "real estate" did not include a lease.—Springfield S. W. Ry. Co. v. Schweitzer, 151 S. W. 128.

IV. TERMS FOR YEARS.

(A) Nature and Extent.

§ 70 (Mo.) At common law a term for years, created by lease, was a "chattel real."—Springfield S. W. Ry. Co. v. Schweitzer, 151 S. W. 128.

(B) Assignment, Subletting, and Mortgage.

§ 75 (Mo.App.) Under Rev. St. 1909, § 7880, prohibiting the assignment of a lease for a term not exceeding two years, or at will, or by sufferance without the written consent of the landlord, a lease extending from September 23, 1909, to January 1, 1913, held a proper subject of assignment.—Griggs v. Bridgwater, 151 S. W. 764.

§ 76 (Tex.Civ.App.) A lessee held to have no right to permit a third person to erect signboards on the roof of the leased premises; the lease and Rev. St. 1895, art. 3250, both forbidding a subletting without the consent of the lessor.—Clayton D. Brown Co. v. O'Connor, 151 S. W. 339.

A landlord held not estopped by acceptance of rent from compelling removal of such signboards.—Id.

§ 79 (Mo.App.) The rights of an assignee of a lease held not affected by the death of his assignor, though the personal representative of such assignor refused to take charge of the lease.—Griggs v. Bridgwater, 151 S. W. 764.

§ 79 (Tex.) An instrument executed by a lessee whereby he conveys the entire term and parts with all reversionary interest in the premises is an assignment, while, if he retains any reversionary interest, the instrument is a sublease.—Davis v. Vidal, 151 S. W. 290.

The word "term," in the rule that a tenant who parts with the entire term embraced in his lease is an assignor of the lease, defined.—Id.

Where a tenant reserves, in the instrument, giving possession to his transferee, the right of re-entry on failure to pay rent, he retains an interest in the premises and the instrument is a subletting, though stated to be an assignment.—Id.

VII. PREMISES, AND ENJOYMENT AND USE THEREOF.

(A) Description, Extent, and Condition.

§ 123 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where an owner of a one-story building containing several rooms leases them to different tenants, each lessee has merely an easement in the roof and has no control over it.—Clayton D. Brown Co. v. O'Connor, 151 S. W. 339.

(D) Repairs, Insurance, and Improvements.

§ 150 (Mo.App.) Where a single dwelling was demised to one person, without any covenant as to repairs, no one, not even the landlord, could enter, without defendant's consent, to make repairs.—Korach v. Loeffel, 151 S. W. 790.

(E) Injuries from Dangerous or Defective Condition.

§ 164 (Ky.) Condition of outbuilding on leased premises, where an infant child of the tenant fell and was injured, held not dangerous or defective, and hence to impose no liability on the landlord.—Grant v. Seelye, 151 S. W. 401.

§ 164 (Ky.) Notice to a landlord sufficient to apprise a person of ordinary prudence that the leased premises are in a dangerous condition is equivalent to actual knowledge, rendering him liable for injuries to the tenant.—Andonique v. Carmen, 151 S. W. 921.

A tenant who knows of the defective condition of the premises, or who may have known thereof by a reasonable inspection, may not recover from the landlord for injuries sustained in consequence thereof.—Id.

§ 164 (Mo.App.) In the absence of an express warranty to repair, held, that there could be no recovery by the minor child of a tenant of a dwelling house, who was injured by the fall of a mantel.—Korach v. Loeffel, 151 S. W. 790.

A breach of the landlord's covenant to repair demised premises and make them reasonably safe will not support an action for personal injuries due to failure to repair.—Id.

§ 169 (Ky.) An instruction that if the landlord had knowledge of a defect in the premises by which the tenant was injured, "or such notice as would cause a reasonable person to act upon it," was misleading, as tending to impose on the landlord the duty of exercising ordinary care to discover defects.—Andonique v. Carmen, 151 S. W. 921.

Whether a tenant knew of a defect or could have discovered it by reasonable inspection held for the jury.—Id.

§ 169 (Mo.App.) In an action against a landlord for injuries to the tenant's wife caused by a defect in the premises, whether the premises were in the same condition at the time of the accident as when rented was for the jury.—Haywood v. Kuhn, 151 S. W. 204.

The instructions in such action held to cover the negligence charged in the petition.—Id.

The instructions also held to properly submit the issue of contributory negligence.—Id.

VIII. RENT AND ADVANCES.

(A) Rights and Liabilities.

§ 208 (Tex.) A landlord may recover the rent due from an assignee of the lessee.—Davis v. Vidal, 151 S. W. 290.

§ 209 (Tex.) A landlord may not recover the rent due from a subtenant.—Davis v. Vidal, 151 S. W. 290.

(B) Actions.

§ 232 (Ky.) Upon recovery of a judgment for an annual rent, each year's rent should bear interest from January 1st following its maturity.—White v. White, 151 S. W. 1.

(D) Distress.

§ 274 (Ky.) The remedies for wrongful distress prescribed by Ky. St. § 2303, and Civ. Code Prac. § 653, both of which require the tenant to execute a forthcoming bond, are not exclusive; Ky. St. § 2310, providing a remedy by replevin, section 7 a remedy by action without bond, and the common law affording a similar remedy.—Board v. Luigart, 151 S. W. 9.

In a common-law action for wrongful distress, double damages provided for by Ky. St. § 2312 cannot be recovered as being in the nature of a statutory penalty.—Id.

A petition in an action against a landlord and a constable for wrongful distress held to state a cause of action under the statute and at common law as against the landlord.—Id.

IX. RE-ENTRY AND RECOVERY OF POSSESSION BY LANDLORD.

§ 291 (Mo.App.) That the notice and demand for possession in unlawful detainer embraced more land than the amended petition on which the cause was tried would not justify a finding in favor of the defendant.—Griggs v. Bridgwater, 151 S. W. 764.

LAPSE.

See Willa, §§ 775, 858.

LARCENY.

See Burglary.

II. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT.

(A) Indictment and Information.

§ 32 (Tex.Cr.App.) The custody of the keeper of an automobile garage in which was left a car did not constitute ownership for the purpose of the allegation of ownership and taking without consent in a prosecution for theft of a part of a machine.—Staha v. State, 151 S. W. 548.

(B) Evidence.

§ 55 (Tex.Cr.App.) Evidence held insufficient to support the conviction.—Yarbrough v. State, 151 S. W. 545.

§ 55 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for theft from the person, evidence held sufficient to support the conviction.—Brooks v. State, 151 S. W. 549.

(C) Trial and Review.

§ 71 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for theft from the person, where accused claimed that the property was taken to hold it as security to compel the prosecuting witness to reimburse him for whisky destroyed, a charge held to sufficiently submit accused's contention.—Brooks v. State, 151 S. W. 549.

See Criminal Law, § 442; Evidence, §§ 317, 318.

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

See Criminal Law, §§ 419, 420, 789; Witnesses, § 277.

I. WORDS AND ACTS ACTIONABLE, AND LIABILITY THEREFOR.

§ 21 (Tex.Civ.App.) To justify recovery for libel, it is not necessary that plaintiff should be named, if pointed out by circumstances, or ascertainable from the words used.—Express Pub. Co. v. Orsborn, 151 S. W. 574.

To justify a recovery for libel, it is not necessary that all the world should understand who the person defamed was, if those knowing plaintiff can discern that she was meant.—Id.

II. PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS, AND MALICE THEREIN.

§ 38 (Tex.Civ.App.) Questions asked by an attorney of a party while testifying as a witness are absolutely privileged, and cannot be made the basis of an action for slander, though otherwise actionable.—Kruegel v. Cockrell & Gray, 151 S. W. 352.

IV. ACTIONS.(C) Evidence.

§ 101 (Tex.Civ.App.) The burden is on a party suing for libel to prove that the libel was directed at him.—Express Pub. Co. v. Orsborn, 151 S. W. 574.

(E) Trial, Judgment, and Review.

§ 123 (Tex.Civ.App.) Question whether article referring to person as a negress was directed at plaintiff held a question for the jury, when considered in connection with another article apparently relating to the same matter and naming plaintiff.—Express Pub. Co. v. Orsborn, 151 S. W. 574.

Whether a libel was directed at plaintiff is a question of fact for the jury.—Id.

VI. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY.(A) Offenses.

§ 141 (Mo.App.) To constitute an offense under Rev. St. 1909, § 4817, the words uttered must impute lack of chastity, and not be intended and to be understood merely as terms of abuse.—State v. White, 151 S. W. 757.

§ 143 (Mo.App.) In cases of criminal slander, the gist of the action is defendant's intention in uttering the words.—State v. White, 151 S. W. 757.

(B) Prosecution and Punishment.

§ 155 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for slandering accused's wife by charging misconduct with S., circumstances tending to show preparation on the part of S. for the commission of the offense are admissible.—Elder v. State, 151 S. W. 1052.

Where accused charged with slandering his wife by alleging her intimacy with S. claimed that the flight of S. was an incriminating circumstance, S. was properly permitted to testify to a statement made to him by the wife as furnishing an innocent reason for the flight.—Id.

LICENSES.

See Municipal Corporations, § 122; Negligence, § 32; Telegraphs and Telephones, § 30.

I. FOR OCCUPATIONS AND PRIVILEGES.

§ 7 (Ky.) A municipal ordinance imposing a license tax on a telephone company is not invalid because not stating the purposes for which such tax is levied.—Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Calhoun, 151 S. W. 659.

§ 7 (Ky.) Under Ky. St. § 8290, subsec. 12, a city is authorized to make a reasonable classification of business for the imposition of license taxes.—Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. City of Owensboro, 151 S. W. 932.

The business of a concern furnishing trading stamps to merchants was so different from that of an ordinary merchant as to furnish a reasonable basis for classification by a city in imposing a license tax on such business.—Id.

A city ordinance imposing a license tax on persons engaged in the trading stamp business of $300 a year held void as unreasonable, oppressive, and prohibitory.—Id.

§ 15 (Ky.) Furnishing trading stamps, being a lawful business, cannot be taxed by a city in the exercise of its police power, but may be taxed a reasonable amount as a lawful business.—Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. City of Owensboro, 151 S. W. 932.

LIENS.

See Ejectment, § 144; Jury, § 14; Mechanics' Liens; Municipal Corporations, §§ 519, 565; Partition, § 93; Schools and School Districts, § 86; Vendor and Purchaser, §§ 198, 277, 279, 289.

§ 7 (Ky.) Where a mother deeds property to her son in consideration of a home and maintenance, but is unable to get along with the latter's wife, and leaves, being old and unable to work, she is entitled to a lien on the property for her maintenance.—Hopper v. Hopper, 151 S. W. 359.

LIFE ESTATES.

See Wills, § 616.

§ 8 (Mo.) Neither a life tenant nor her grantee could claim adversely to the remainderman, until the death of the life tenant.—Waddle v. Frazier, 151 S. W. 87.

§ 8 (Mo.) Possession of one holding as life tenant can never become hostile to the remaindermen.—Moran v. Stewart, 151 S. W. 439.

§ 22 (Ky.) A life tenant held to have an action for depreciation in rental value and time and money spent in repairs made necessary by the inadequacy of a city sewer.—City of Louisville v. Kramer's Adm'x, 151 S. W. 379.

LIFE INSURANCE.

See Insurance.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

See Adverse Possession; Appeal and Error, §§ 750, 909; Executors and Administrators, §§ 225, 245; Municipal Corporations, § 564; Time, §§ 9, 10.

I. STATUTES OF LIMITATION.(A) Nature, Validity, and Construction in General.

§ 4 (Mo.App.) The Legislature may fix arbitrarily the time in which different actions may be commenced.—Hinshaw v. Warren's Estate, 151 S. W. 497.

§ 5 (Mo.) The statute of limitations applies alike to all actions, whether legal or equitable.—Marshall v. Hill, 151 S. W. 131.

§ 15 (Ark.) Kirby's Dig. § 5079, providing that an oral acknowledgment or promise shall not take an action out of the statute of limitations, has no application to an oral waiver of the statute, or a promise not to plead it.—Burnett v. Turner, 151 S. W. 249.

A promise not to plead limitations is based on estoppel and must be such a promise as the creditor has a right to rely on.—Id.

(B) Limitations Applicable to Particular Actions.

§ 28 (Ky.) A surety who pays the debt without taking an assignment of the creditor's judgment therefor, and who seeks relief against the principal, upon an implied obligation, must proceed within five years from the time of payment.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Souseley, 151 S. W. 353.

Under Ky. St. § 4666, entitling a surety who has satisfied a judgment against his principal to an assignment thereof, such assignment need not be in writing nor made a matter of record, and thereunder the surety's right to recover against his principal is not limited to an action on an implied promise, barred within five years, but extends for the same time that the right of the judgment creditor extends.—Id.

§ 28 (Mo.App.) A surety on a note who pays a judgment thereon is entitled to recover from the cosurety one-half of the amount paid, provided he sues therefor within the five-year statute of limitations.—Hinshaw v. Warren's Estate, 151 S. W. 497.

§ 32 (Mo.App.) The injury from polluting a stream flowing through the land of an individual by the construction of a city sewer emptying into the stream is permanent, inflicted on the completion of the work, and an action therefor is barred in 10 years.—Luckey v. City of Brookfield, 151 S. W. 201.

§ 39 (Tex.) A proceeding by scire facias to supply a part of a judgment omitted from the judgment record is not an "action" to correct a judgment within Rev. St. 1895, art. 3353, requiring every action other than to recover realty for which no limitation is otherwise prescribed, to be brought within four years.—Coleman v. Zapp, 151 S. W. 1040.

II. COMPUTATION OF PERIOD OF LIMITATION.(A) Accrual of Right of Action or Defense.

§ 46 (Tex.Civ.App.) A cause of action by a broker for commissions, accrues when a sale is finally consummated.—Anderson v. Crow, 151 S. W. 1080.

§ 47 (Mo.App.) Covenant of seisin is breached at date of the deed, and the statute then commences to run; the covenantor having then no estate, title, or possession, but merely a tax deed, void because based on a judgment against one dead at time of its rendition.—Frank v. Organ, 151 S. W. 504.

§ 55 (Ky.) Where a sewer was adequate at the time of its original construction, but became inadequate, owing to the connection of other sewers with it, a cause of action for injuries arising after such connection accrued at the time the injury was inflicted, and not at the time the sewer was originally constructed.—City of Louisville v. Kramer's Adm'r, 151 S. W. 379.

(B) Performance of Condition, Demand, and Notice.

§ 66 (Ky.) The statute of limitations does not begin to run against a depositor in a bank until refusal of payment on demand; this being so though the bank failed to credit the depositor with the deposit in his passbook.—Corbin Banking Co. v. Bryant, 151 S. W. 393.

(D) Death and Administration.

§ 83 (Mo.App.) Where a surety on a note paid a judgment thereon, the subsequent death of his cosurety suspended the running of limitations as to the time in which the surety must sue for contribution, until letters of administration were issued.—Hinshaw v. Warren's Estate, 151 S. W. 497.

(H) Commencement of Action or Other Proceeding.

§ 118 (Mo.App.) Whether an action has been commenced within the statute of limitations is determined by whether plaintiff complied with Rev. St. 1909, § 1756, providing that the filing of a petition and suing out process shall be deemed the commencement of the action.—Hinshaw v. Warren's Estate, 151 S. W. 497.

§ 127 (Tex.Civ.App.) In action for railway employe's death, amendment of petition charging negligence of his foreman so as to allege negligence on the part of the engineer of the train by which he was struck held not to introduce a new cause of action barred by limitations.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Myers, 151 S. W. 337.

III. ACKNOWLEDGMENT, NEW PROMISE, AND PART PAYMENT.

§ 145 (Ark.) An agreement to extend the time of payment beyond the period of limitations is a sufficient consideration to support a new promise suspending limitations.—Burnett v. Turner, 151 S. W. 249.

A promise by a debtor, that when he got his father out of the penitentiary he would pay, upon which the creditor, without agreeing not to sue, forbore suit, was without the consideration necessary to make it an original promise.—Id.

§ 146 (Ark.) The general rule that, in the absence of a forbidding statute, an oral acknowledgment or promise will interrupt the statute of limitations, is changed by Kirby's Dig. § 5073, requiring such acknowledgment or promise to be in writing.—Burnett v. Turner, 151 S. W. 249.

§ 157 (Ky.) The holder of a note cannot apply on the note anything he owes the maker without his consent, so as to interrupt the running of the statute of limitations.—Samuel v. Samuel's Adm'r, 151 S. W. 676.

V. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, TRIAL, AND REVIEW.

§ 195 (Tex.Civ.App.) A defendant has the burden of showing that the cause of action is barred.—Anderson v. Crow, 151 S. W. 1080.

§ 199 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for cutting timber on another's land, in which defendant pleaded limitations, evidence held to present a question for the jury whether the timber was cut within two years before the commencement of the action.—Thompson Bros. Lumber Co. v. Longini, 151 S. W. 888.

§ 3 (Ark.) Parties who committed a substantial breach of a contract to sell timber held not entitled to recover for a subsequent breach by the other parties thereto.—Keopple & McIntosh v. Delight Lumber Co., 151 S. W. 259.

An acceptance of payments contrary to the terms of a contract for the sale of logs and a shipment by the seller after notification that he would consider the contract void held a waiver of a right to consider the purchasers' noncompliance with its terms a breach.—Id.

§ 3 (Ark.) A timber deed, which conveyed all the pine timber 10 inches and up, includes every kind of pine on the land, regardless of whether it is worth sawing, and so includes old-field timber.—Hearin v. Union Sawmill Co., 151 S. W. 1007.

§ 3 (Ark.) In an action by the grantee of timber rights to enjoin his grantor from preventing the removal of such timber and for reformation of the contract, where the grantor asked a cancellation on the ground of fraud, evidence held sufficient to show that the grantee was entitled to the timber on the property specifically described in the contract and no more.—Reeves v. Moore, 151 S. W. 1025.

§ 3 (Ky.) A buyer of standing timber, with a year in which to remove it, and with good roads for a time sufficient to have removed it, prevented from removing it by unusually heavy rains and muddy roads in the winter, held not prevented by any unforeseen casualty or misfortune, and to have no right to remove it after the expiration of the year.—Z. Harrell & Co. v. Danks, 151 S. W. 13.

§ 15 (Mo.App.) In an action for breach of a contract to float logs providing the water was high enough, evidence held to warrant a finding that there was sufficient water.—Cronan v. Stutsman, 151 S. W. 166.

LOST INSTRUMENTS.

§ 1 (Tex.Civ.App.) The fact that a written transfer of a portion of a fund was lost does not affect its validity or sufficiency.—A. A. Fielder Lumber Co. v. Smith, 151 S. W. 605.

MALICE.

See Malicious Prosecution, § 16.

MALICIOUS MISCHIEF.

§ 1 (Ark.) A sister, who conceals the death of hogs killed by her brother, is not guilty of malicious mischief, committed by the killing of the hogs.—Wright v. State, 151 S. W. 990.

§ 9 (Ark.) Evidence held to support a conviction for malicious mischief.—Wright v. State, 151 S. W. 990.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

II. WANT OF PROBABLE CAUSE.

§ 16 (Tex.Civ.App.) One having probable cause for instigating a criminal prosecution is not liable for malicious prosecution, though malice actuated him.—Smith v. Pierson, 151 S. W. 1113.

§ 18 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where a constable attempted to execute a warrant after the return day thereof, and a dismissal of the prosecution, and took accused into custody thereunder, probable cause existed for the prosecution of the constable for false imprisonment.—Smith v. Pierson, 151 S. W. 1113.

MANDAMUS.

See Appeal and Error, § 71; Courts, § 122; Exceptions, Bill of, § 53.

I. NATURE AND GROUNDS IN GENERAL.

§ 16 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the record on appeal shows conclusively that the conclusions of fact and law were not filed in time, mandamus does not lie to compel the district court to correct the record by striking therefrom the conclusions of fact and law.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Powell, 151 S. W. 887.

II. SUBJECTS AND PURPOSES OF RELIEF.

(A) Acts and Proceedings of Courts, Judges, and Judicial Officers.

§ 31 (Mo.) As mandamus will not be granted to direct the course of judicial action, but may issue to compel a judicial officer to proceed with the cause, the writ of mandamus may be properly issued to require a circuit court judge to proceed with a cause to establish a private road, though not to direct the appointment of commissioners or in any way govern his action.—State ex rel. McDermott Realty Co. v. McElhinney, 151 S. W. 457.

§ 57 (Tex.Civ.App.) Mandamus lies to compel the district court to correct the record on appeal, when necessary to have the error corrected.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Powell, 151 S. W. 887.

MARRIAGE.

See Bastards, §§ 1, 3; Divorce; Husband and Wife.

§ 40 (Mo.) A marriage once shown to exist is, as a rule, presumed to continue until the contrary is shown.—Nelson v. Jones, 151 S. W. 80.

§ 50 (Mo.) Evidence held to show a common-law marriage.—Nelson v. Jones, 151 S. W. 80. Strong proof is necessary to establish a common-law marriage.—Id.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

See Appeal and Error, § 1066; Damages, §§ 132, 216; Death, § 14; Evidence, §§ 243, 317; False Imprisonment, § 15; Pleading, § 433; Railroads, §§ 281, 376, 377; Torts, § 10; Trial, §§ 251, 253, 260, 296; Work and Labor.

I. THE RELATION.

(A) Creation and Existence.

§ 6 (Mo.App.) Testimony of a witness that defendant agreed to pay plaintiff and witness a specified sum per week for services was admissible to prove the contract with plaintiff, in the absence of a showing that the contract referred to by witness was a joint one.—Thornton v. Mersereau, 151 S. W. 212.

II. SERVICES AND COMPENSATION.(B) Wages and Other Remuneration.

§ 78 (Mo.App.) A petition against an employer claiming benefits under a co-operative insurance scheme, held demurrable for want of allegations showing that the managers of the association had ordered the claim paid or that they were bound to do so.—Legg v. Swift & Co., 151 S. W. 230.

III. MASTER'S LIABILITY FOR INJURIES TO SERVANT.(A) Nature and Extent in General.

§ 88 (Mo.) Where a roller in an iron and steel mill was injured because of the absence of a safety post, and the mill was owned, controlled, and operated by defendant company, it was liable for the injuries sustained without reference to whether plaintiff was a servant of the company or of the head roller acting as an independent contractor.—Jewell v. Sturges, 151 S. W. 966.

Where an owner undertakes to furnish the place and appliances with which an independent contractor is to perform his contract, and retains control over the place and appliances, such owner is liable for injuries sustained by the contractor's servants by a failure to make and keep the place reasonably safe.—Id.

(B) Tools, Machinery, Appliances, and Places for Work.

§§ 101, 102 (Ark.) On the question of negligence in furnishing appliances and place to work, the test is what a reasonably prudent person would ordinarily have done in like circumstances.—Oak Leaf Mill Co. v. Littleton, 151 S. W. 262.

§§ 101, 102 (Mo.App.) Employer held to owe employé duty of providing and maintaining a chain on the machine operated by the employé reasonably suited to the purposes of its intended use.—Bradley v. Northern Cent. Coal Co., 151 S. W. 180.

§§ 101, 102 (Mo.App.) An employer is required to exercise reasonable care to provide his servants with a reasonably safe place of work.—Goode v. Central Coal & Coke Co., 151 S. W. 508.

§ 107 (Ky.) A master's duty to provide a safe place to work included the places to and from which the employé might be required to go.—Fluehart Collieries Co. v. Elam, 151 S. W. 34.

§ 107 (Mo.App.) An employer who continued a chain on a machine in use after it had become worn and dangerous, and after reasonable regard for the safety of employées required that it should be replaced, was negligent.—Bradley v. Northern Cent. Coal Co., 151 S. W. 180.

§ 118 (Ky.) A master who directed a blasting man to use an iron pipe to load dynamite into drilled holes, assuring him that it was safe, but which, because of its weight and rougher surface end, might and did discharge dynamite, was negligent in not furnishing a reasonably safe appliance for the work, whether or not he knew the danger.—Hough & Spradlin Co. v. Clark, 151 S. W. 28.

§ 118 (Ky.) Mining company held not relieved from liability for failure to provide a safe passageway around elevator shafts by the fact that there was no statute, or rule of the state mining department, requiring such passageway.—Fluehart Collieries Co. v. Elam, 151 S. W. 34.

§ 124 (Mo.App.) Rev. St. 1909, § 8447, requiring daily inspection of coal mines generating explosive gas, does not apply to mines not generating gases.—Goode v. Central Coal & Coke Co., 151 S. W. 508.

A coal mine owner was bound to inspect the mine roof at reasonable intervals, and, on discovering an insecure rock, to remove it for the protection of workmen required to be near it.—Id.

§ 129 (Ark.) Leaving two planks unfastened in the floor of a log deck in a sawmill was the proximate cause of the injury to the log scaler, where, when he was on the deck, a knot in a log rolled down, struck the lower end of one of the planks, striking against other logs, and causing them to roll down on him.—Oak Leaf Mill Co. v. Littleton, 151 S. W. 262.

(C) Methods of Work, Rules, and Orders.

§ 149 (Mo.) A foreman giving an order to employes to bring the rigging used in certain work from the second to the first floor of a building held not guilty of actionable negligence.—McCollin v. James Black Masonry & Construction Co., 151 S. W. 973.

(E) Fellow Servants.

§ 180 (Mo.App.) The common-law rule that the negligence of a servant causing injury to a fellow servant may not be imputed to the master has been abrogated by statute, so far as employes of railroad companies are concerned.—Madden v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 489.

Employes in railroad shops moving from the blacksmith shop to the roundhouse a brakebeam are within the fellow servant statute of Kansas (Gen. St. Kan. 1909, § 6999).—Id.

§ 190 (Ark.) The master is liable for injury to a foreman from the manager's neglect of his duty to inspect and discover defects in the appliances used, where such duty rests on the manager.—Worts v. Ft. Smith Biscuit Co., 151 S. W. 691.

§ 197 (Mo.App.) A machinist's helper in railroad shops and a machinist acting as foreman are fellow servants while moving a brakebeam from the blacksmith shop to the roundhouse, there to be unloaded and placed under a locomotive.—Madden v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 489.

§ 197 (Tex.Civ.App.) Employes in a sawmill engaged in removing planks from a saw as fast as they are sawed, are fellow servants.—Bledsoe v. Thompson Bros. Lumber Co., 151 S. W. 910.

§ 201 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the master's negligence in failing to guard dangerous machinery is the proximate cause of injury, he is not relieved from liability by the fact that plaintiff's fellow servant was negligent in operating the machine.—Armour & Co. v. Morgan, 151 S. W. 861.

(F) Risks Assumed by Servant.

§ 203 (Ark.) The defenses of "assumed risk" and "contributory negligence" are separate and independent; the former arising out of contract relations, and the latter not.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Brogan, 151 S. W. 699.

§ 203 (Tex.Civ.App.) The defenses of assumption of risk and contributory negligence are inconsistent, and the existence of one necessarily excludes the other.—Armour & Co. v. Morgan, 151 S. W. 861.

§ 204 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Acts 29th Leg. c. 163, providing that a servant's knowledge of a danger shall not charge him with assumption of risk if the master also knew the facts, and a person of ordinary care would have continued in the service, a brakeman, under such conditions, held not to assume the risk of injury by stumbling over clinkers while walking by a moving car in railroad yards.—Freeman v. Kennerly, 151 S. W. 580.

§ 208 (Mo.App.) Risk of injury from a chain breaking under unusual and unavoidable circumstances held assumed by employé, but risks resulting from the use of a chain so defective as to be unsafe for ordinary use were not assumed.—Bradley v. Northern Cent. Coal Co., 151 S. W. 180.

§ 211 (Ky.) A mine employé assumed ordinary risks connected with his employment, but not risks from the company's negligent failure to furnish a reasonably safe place to work.—Fluehart Collieries Co. v. Elam, 151 S. W. 34.

§ 216 (Mo.) A section hand on a hand car operated under direction of a foreman, who had a schedule of trains, held not to assume risk of injury from the foreman's negligent failure to clear the track to avoid a train on schedule time.—Honea v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 119.

§ 216 (Mo.App.) Under the rule of assumption of risk in force in Missouri or in Kansas, an employé in railroad shops assisting a co-employé in moving a brakebeam does not assume the risk of the latter's negligence.—Madden v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 489.

§ 217 (Ark.) A fireman, injured from a collision between his engine and a car negligently left by the railway company on a side switch, is not chargeable with having assumed the risk of such injury, unless he knew of the dangerous position of the car, and realized the danger, and voluntarily exposed himself to it.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Brogan, 151 S. W. 699.

§ 217 (Ark.) Knowledge by an employé of defects and danger therefrom held essential to an assumption of the risk, though he is chargeable with knowledge of danger which is so obvious as to be apparent to one of ordinary intelligence.—Fullerton v. Henry Wrape Co., 151 S. W. 1005.

An experienced operator of a circular saw in a lumber mill held to have assumed the risk of being injured through a piece of lumber "pinching" on the saw and being thrown back, owing to want of a guard and insufficiency of a device designed to prevent pinching.—Id.

§ 217 (Ky.) An employé of mature years who used the stairway on the employer's premises in going to and from the place of her work held to assume the risk of injury by falling down the stairway.—J. M. Robinson, Norton & Co. v. Legrande, 151 S. W. 383.

Though the business may be hazardous and the surroundings not free from danger, an employé who with knowledge of the conditions continues without objection assumes the risk.—Id.

§ 218 (Ark.) Under the evidence, held, the danger of one of the two pieces of wood driven in the ground pulling out, when the pole put between them was being bent over, was not so obvious that an inexperienced employé could be said to have assumed the risk, unless he was warned or appreciated the danger.—River, Rail & Harbor Const. Co. v. Goodwin, 151 S. W. 267.

§ 219 (Ark.) A servant does not assume, as incident to his employment, risks from latent defects in appliances or place of work.—Oak Leaf Mill Co. v. Littleton, 151 S. W. 262.

§ 219 (Ark.) A factory employé held to have assumed the risk from defects which were obvious, where he had been warned not to do the act causing his injury and fully appreciated the danger.—Worts v. Ft. Smith Biscuit Co., 151 S. W. 691.

§ 224 (Tex.Civ.App.) Employé riding on employer's log train for his own benefit held a licensee, and not to be so riding on the employer's implied invitation.—Kirby Lumber Co. v. Gresham, 151 S. W. 847.

§ 226 (Mo.App.) A servant does not, and cannot, assume risks caused by the master's negligence.—Bradley v. Northern Cent. Coal Co., 151 S. W. 180.

(G) Contributory Negligence of Servant.

§ 228 (Tex.Civ.App.) Acts 31st Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 10, declaring that contributory negligence of an employé shall not bar a recovery but that the damages shall be diminished, is not unconstitutional.—Freeman v. Kennerly, 151 S. W. 590.

§ 234 (Ky.) An employé is not guilty of contributory negligence in continuing work, although he knows of defects in the machine operated by him, unless the danger is so obvious and imminent that he must or should have known thereof.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Goodwin, 151 S. W. 376.

§ 234 (Mo.App.) Employé knowing of defect in appliance held not guilty of contributory negligence if a reasonably careful man would not have anticipated danger of injury.—Bradley v. Northern Cent. Coal Co., 151 S. W. 180.

§ 236 (Ky.) A servant, though assured by the master's overseer that an iron pipe was a safe tool in loading dynamite into drilled holes, was negligent, if it was so obviously unsafe that an ordinarily prudent person of the servant's experience would not have used it.—Hough & Spradlin Co. v. Clark, 151 S. W. 28.

§ 240 (Ark.) A brakeman held guilty of contributory negligence where, on being sent to flag trains, he crawled under a car on a storage track and was killed by a work train backing against such car.—Mitchell v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 520.

§ 240 (Tex.Civ.App.) A brakeman injured by stumbling over a clinker while walking by a moving car to couple it with an engine in railroad yards held entitled to recover as against the claim that he chose a dangerous way though he might have walked between the rails or on another track.—Freeman v. Kennerly, 151 S. W. 580.

§ 243 (Ky.) In handling a high tension electric wire, the utmost care must be used, not only by the master, but the servant, and the servant or his personal representative cannot recover where his negligent disobedience of orders caused personal injury or death.—West Kentucky Coal Co. v. Kuykendall's Adm'r, 151 S. W. 928.

§ 248 (Ky.) Where a servant of an electric light company was killed by a high tension wire because of his disobedience of orders, the master was not liable where it did not learn of the danger in which the servant had placed himself by his negligence in time to avoid the injury.—West Kentucky Coal Co. v. Kuykendall's Adm'r, 151 S. W. 928.

(H) Actions.

§ 252 (Mo.App.) An action under Gen. St. Kan. 1909, § 6909, brought within eight months after the sustaining of the injury complained of, is maintainable without the service of the notice specified in the statute.—Madden v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 489.

§ 265 (Ark.) Burden held on defendant railway company to prove contributory negligence of an injured fireman.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Brogan, 151 S. W. 699.

§ 265 (Mo.App.) The fact that a rock fell upon a coal miner was not sufficient proof of negligence as to inspection.—Goode v. Central Coal & Coke Co., 151 S. W. 508.

One suing for a coal miner's death must show that the rock which fell on him would have been discovered by the exercise of reasonable care in time to have prevented the injury.—Id.

§ 270 (Ark.) Evidence of repair of the appliance by the master after the accident is incompetent to show negligence of a master in furnishing a defective appliance by which an employé is injured.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Steed, 151 S. W. 257.

§ 270 (Ky.) It was error to admit evidence of precautions taken by the master in constructing a safe passway around an elevator shaft after the injury.—Fluehart Collieries Co. v. Elam, 151 S. W. 34.

Evidence of subsequent improvements or repairs is excluded because it does not establish that the wrongdoer was guilty of negligence before the accident.—Id.

§ 270 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injuries from unguarded machinery, on an issue as to whether it could have been guarded, evidence that a guard was placed over part of it, and that it did not interfere with its operation, was competent.—Armour & Co. v. Morgan, 151 S. W. 861.

§ 276 (Ky.) In an action against a master for the wrongful death of a servant, evidence held to show that the proximate cause of the servant's death was a disobedience of orders.—West Kentucky Coal Co. v. Kuykendall's Adm'r, 151 S. W. 928.

§ 276 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injury to a lumber company's employé while riding on a logging train to his work, evidence held to warrant a finding that the accident was caused by the concurrent negligence of the railroad and the lumber company.—Knox v. Robbins, 151 S. W. 1134.

In an action for injury to a lumber company's employé while riding on a logging train which was derailed, evidence held to warrant a finding that the accident proximately caused his insanity.—Id.

§ 278 (Ark.) The custom of others under like conditions is evidence, but not conclusive, of what a reasonably prudent person would ordinarily do in furnishing appliances and place to work.—Oak Leaf Mill Co. v. Littleton, 151 S. W. 262.

§ 278 (Ark.) In an action for the death of an employé, evidence held not to show actionable negligence.—Mitchell v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 520.

§ 278 (Ky.) Evidence held to sustain verdict for coal mine employé injured from the derailling of a car by its being struck by an overhead cross-beam.—Jellico Coal Mining Co. v. Lee, 151 S. W. 26.

§ 278 (Ky.) In an action for the death of an employé drowned while rowing a boat across a river, evidence held to show that the employer was not guilty of a breach of duty in failing to warn and instruct the servant of a dangerous appliance.—Stewart's Adm'r v. Ohio River Contract Co., 151 S. W. 398.

§ 278 (Mo.) Evidence held to establish a railroad company's negligence causing death of an employé.—Honea v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 119.

§ 278 (Tex.Civ.App.) Evidence held to show that an employer operating a sawmill was not guilty of negligence in operating the mill while a transfer chain carrying sawed planks was broken, or in failing to furnish an employé a safe place in which to work.—Bledsoe v. Thompson Bros. Lumber Co., 151 S. W. 910.

§ 279 (Ky.) In an action for the death by drowning of an employé while rowing a boat across a river, evidence held to show no failure of a foreman seated in the bow of the boat to exercise care to prevent the deceased from needlessly placing himself in a place of danger.—Stewart's Adm'r v. Ohio River Contract Co., 151 S. W. 398.

§ 279 (Mo.App.) In an action for injuries to a railroad servant evidence held to support a finding of negligence of a fellow servant.—Madden v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 489.

§ 280 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injury to a lumber company's employé while riding on a logging train to his work, evidence held to warrant a finding that plaintiff did not assume the risk.—Knox v. Robbins, 151 S. W. 1134.

§ 281 (Mo.) Evidence held to show that decedent, a railroad employé, was not guilty of contributory negligence.—Honea v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 119.

§ 281 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injury to a lumber company's employé while riding on a logging train to his work, evidence held to warrant a finding that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence.—Knox v. Robbins, 151 S. W. 1134.

§ 286 (Ark.) Evidence, in an action for injury to a log scaler from logs rolling against him while on the log deck, held to make a question for the jury as to negligence because of the log deck being constructed with two unfastened planks in it.—Oak Leaf Mill Co. v. Littleton, 151 S. W. 262.

§ 286 (Ky.) Evidence held to present a question for the jury whether plaintiff would have been injured if chains on the machine he was operating had been properly adjusted.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Goodwin, 151 S. W. 376.

§ 286 (Mo.App.) If the circumstances permit reasonable differences of opinion as to whether an employer was negligent, the question is for the jury.—Goode v. Central Coal & Coke Co., 151 S. W. 508.

§ 286 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for the death of an employé struck by a train while crossing the track to a position of safety after attempting to remove a hand-car from the track, evidence held to present a question for the jury as to the negligence of the engineer of the train.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Myers, 151 S. W. 337.

§ 286 (Tex.Civ.App.) Whether a switching crew which pushed cars against others to make a coupling, and not succeeding, repeated this killing a car inspector, who in the meantime had gone between those first on the track to inspect them, was guilty of negligence, in not giving him warning of the second attempt, held a question for the jury.—Casey v. Texarkana & Ft. S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 856.

§ 286 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action by a minor servant for personal injuries, held, that the question of defendant's negligence in failing to guard dangerous machinery was for the jury.—Armour & Co. v. Morgan, 151 S. W. 861.

§ 288 (Ark.) Whether an employé assumed the risk held for the jury.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Jacks, 151 S. W. 706.

§ 288 (Tex.Civ.App.) Whether a car inspector, who, after cars had been pushed against others to make a coupling, went between those first there to inspect them, assumed the risk of the switching crew repeating this without notice to him, the first attempt having been unsuccessful, held a question for the jury.—Casey v. Texarkana & Ft. S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 856.

§ 288 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injuries to a minor servant, plaintiff held not to have assumed the risk as a matter of law.—Continental Oil & Cotton Co. v. Gilliam, 151 S. W. 890.

§ 289 (Ark.) Evidence in action for injury to log scaler held to make question for the jury as to contributory negligence.—Oak Leaf Mill Co. v. Littleton, 151 S. W. 262.

§ 289 (Ark.) Whether an employé was guilty of contributory negligence held for the jury.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Jacks, 151 S. W. 706.

§ 289 (Ky.) The question of a servant's contributory negligence in using an iron pipe to load dynamite into a drilled hole too deep to be loaded with the wooden poles, which were safer on account of their lighter weight, was for the jury.—Hough & Spradlin Co. v. Clark, 151 S. W. 28.

§ 289 (Ky.) A coal miner injured while going through an elevator shaft in obedience to his foreman's orders, without having been warned and in the exercise of ordinary care, he being inexperienced in shaft mines, held not negligent as a matter of law.—Fluehart Collieries Co. v. Elam, 151 S. W. 34.

§ 289 (Mo.App.) In an employé's action for injuries, evidence held to present a question for the jury whether the danger of a chain breaking, which the employé knew to be defective, was so obvious as to render the employé guilty of contributory negligence.—Bradley v. Northern Cent. Coal Co., 151 S. W. 180.

§ 289 (Tex.Civ.App.) Whether a brakeman stumbled over a clinker while walking by a moving car, or recklessly placed his foot on the coupler of a car or engine and was thereby injured, held for the jury.—Freeman v. Kennerly, 151 S. W. 580.

§ 289 (Tex.Civ.App.) A minor servant injured while oiling certain bearings in a dangerous method held not negligent as a matter of law in adopting the same.—Continental Oil & Cotton Co. v. Gilliam, 151 S. W. 890.

§ 289 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injury to a lumber company's employé while riding on a logging train which was derailed, held, under the evidence, a jury question whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.—Knox v. Robbins, 151 S. W. 1134.

§ 291 (Mo.) In an action for death of a section hand by collision of a hand car with a train, an instruction held not inapplicable to the pleading.—Honea v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 119.

§ 293 (Ark.) Refusing an instruction that the master is only required to use ordinary care to furnish safe tools for use of employes, and giving one that it was defendant's duty to furnish safe tools for its employes to work with, was error.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Steed, 151 S. W. 257.

§ 293 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injuries to a servant, an instruction given held not erroneous as charging that defendant was negligent in requiring plaintiff to oil certain machinery, a duty he was employed to perform.—Continental Oil & Cotton Co. v. Gilliam, 151 S. W. 890.

§ 295 (Ark.) The court properly refused to modify instructions dealing only with the issue of assumed risk, so as to present also the issue of contributory negligence.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Brogan, 151 S. W. 890.

§ 295 (Ark.) In an action for the death of a boy acting as clerk to a railroad storekeeper, an instruction on assumption of risk held correct.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Jacks, 151 S. W. 706.

§ 295 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injury to an employé in the derailment of a logging train on which he was riding, an instruction on assumption of risk held proper.—Knox v. Robbins, 151 S. W. 1134.

§ 296 (Ark.) In an action for the death of a boy acting as clerk to a railroad storekeeper, an instruction on contributory negligence held correct.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Jacks, 151 S. W. 706.

§ 296 (Ky.) An instruction held to fairly present the question of the servant's contributory negligence in the use of a tool, notwithstanding the master's assurance of safety.—Hough & Spradlin Co. v. Clark, 151 S. W. 28.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

See Damages, §§ 105, 123.

MECHANICS' LIENS.

See Schools and School Districts, § 86.

I. NATURE, GROUNDS, AND SUBJECT-MATTER IN GENERAL.

§ 13 (Tex.Civ.App.) The construction of roads is a public work and laborers and materialmen have no lien.—National Bank of Denison v. Coleman, 151 S. W. 1123.

II. RIGHT TO LIEN.

(E) Subcontractors, and Contractors' Workmen and Materialmen.

§ 111 (Ky.) Subcontractors and materialmen who comply with the specifications are entitled to liens, irrespective of nonperformance by the contractor or the other subcontractors or materialmen.—Rieger v. Schulte & Eicher, 151 S. W. 395.

§ 115 (Ky.) Subcontractors and materialmen are entitled to a lien to the total amount of the contract price, though the owner has paid the same in full.—Rieger v. Schulte & Eicher, 151 S. W. 395.

IV. OPERATION AND EFFECT.

(A) Amount and Extent of Lien.

§ 164 (Ky.) Subcontractors and materialmen have a lien up to the amount for which the contractor was entitled to a lien.—Rieger v. Schulte & Eicher, 151 S. W. 395.

VII. ENFORCEMENT.

§ 281 (Ark.) In a suit by subcontractors against an owner to enforce mechanics' liens, with a cross-complaint by the contractor to recover the balance of the contract price over the alleged liens, held, that finding that damages to which the owner had been subjected did not arise from negligence of the contractor was supported by the evidence.—Fellheimer v. Higgins, 151 S. W. 991.

VIII. INDEMNITY AGAINST LIENS.

§ 313 (Mo.App.) Where a builder's contract appeared on one side of a printed sheet, and the bond for performance on the other, but the principal who signed the contract did not sign the bond, the surety, signing the bond, was bound thereby, where the principal was bound by the contract, and the bond was a complete instrument when executed by the surety alone.—Roennigke v. Essig, 151 S. W. 765.

MENTAL SUFFERING.

See Assault and Battery, §§ 38, 40; Telegraphs and Telephones, § 70.

MINES AND MINERALS.

See Contracts, § 10; Master and Servant, §§ 118, 124, 211, 265, 278, 289; Pleading, § 406; Trial, §§ 251, 253.

II. TITLE, CONVEYANCES, AND CONTRACTS.

(A) Rights and Remedies of Owners.

§ 51 (Ky.) Evidence, in an action for damages for mining coal from plaintiff's land, held not to sufficiently show the quantity of coal taken to sustain judgment for plaintiff.—Burke Hollow Coal Co. v. Lawson, 151 S. W. 657.

The measure of damages for coal taken from another's land through an honest mistake is the value of the coal taken as it lay in the mine, or the usual reasonable royalty paid for the right of mining.—Id.

(C) Leases, Licenses, and Contracts.

§ 58 (Ky.) Evidence held to show that a phosphate mining lease was procured by fraud on the part of lessees.—Killebrew v. Murray, 151 S. W. 662.

§ 62 (Ky.) A phosphate mining lease which required the lessees to pay a royalty of 25 cents per ton on the phosphate mined and $5 annually as a minimum to be credited thereon, whether the land was mined or not, held an executory contract.—Killebrew v. Murray, 151 S. W. 662.

§ 63 (Ky.) A phosphate mining lease, which authorized the lessee to terminate it at any time by written notice, will be construed as also making it terminable at the will of the lessor.—Killebrew v. Murray, 151 S. W. 662.

§ 68 (Ky.) A phosphate mining lease of land valued at $23,000, lessee to pay a royalty of 25 cents per ton for phosphate mined, held not to permit lessees to continue to hold the lease for the full 10-year period by paying annually $5 to the lessor, which payment the lease provided was a part of the royalties, and the minimum amount to be paid as such, but to require the beginning of operations within a reasonable time.—Killebrew v. Murray, 151 S. W. 662.

The lessees' failure to begin work under a gas and oil lease operates as an abandonment in a shorter time than in case of a phosphate lease, because of the greater danger of loss in the former case by reason of the migratory character of the minerals.—Id.

In the absence of a provision in a phosphate mining lease fixing the time for beginning operations, it will be presumed that operations were to begin within a reasonable time.—Id.

Where the lessees inferentially fixed a year or 18 months as the time for beginning work, such period must be considered a reasonable time.—Id.

In such case lessor could properly treat the failure to begin operations within 3½ years as an abandonment of the lease.—Id.

MISTAKE.

See Insurance, § 143; Public Lands, § 127.

MONOPOLIES.

See Election of Remedies, § 3; Evidence, § 253; Quo Warranto, § 48.

I. VALIDITY AND EFFECT OF GRANTS.

§ 3 (Tex.Civ.App.) "Monopoly," as forbidden by Const. art. 1, § 26, defined, and held, that Act Jan. 26, 1905 (Acts 29th Leg. c. 7), vesting the exclusive custody of state property in a private corporation to be maintained for historical and patriotic purposes, did not violate the constitutional provision.—Conley v. Daughters of the Republic of Texas, 151 S. W. 877.

II. TRUSTS AND OTHER COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

§ 12 (Mo.) The anti-trust act, in unambiguous language, condemns every direct restraint of trade, great or small, without regard to what the courts may think as to the extent of its effect.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

§ 17 (Mo.) Charge of making a combination to restrict competition in sale of ice held not refuted by the fact that defendant sold small quantities of ice during the spring and fall months through persons not parties to the combination.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

§ 20 (Mo.) The corporation succeeding to the rights of another in an unlawful combination in restraint of trade held not relieved of liability because the unlawful combination existed prior to its organization.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

§ 24 (Mo.) Evidence of preliminary steps in formation of unlawful combination prior to the date when the combination was alleged to exist, held admissible.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

Where defendant succeeded to the rights of another, which was a party to an unlawful combination to restrict competition, evidence held not to show, as a matter of law, that defendant did not have knowledge of the unlawful character of the combination.—Id.

In a proceeding against persons charged with effecting an unlawful combination to restrict competition, evidence held to support the trial court's findings that certain of the defendants had effected such an unlawful combination.—Id.

MORTGAGES.

See Bills and Notes, § 518; Chattel Mortgages; Corporations, § 484; Injunction, §§ 118, 148, 172; Insurance, § 113; Judgment, § 585; Vendor and Purchaser, §§ 279, 289.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(A) Nature and Essentials of Conveyances as Security.

§ 36 (Ark.) In a suit to declare a deed absolute on its face a mortgage, the burden is upon the complainant to show that it was a mortgage.—Edwards v. Bond, 151 S. W. 243.

§ 38 (Ark.) In the absence of fraud or imposition, the proof to overcome the presumption that a deed absolute on its face is an absolute conveyance, and to establish it as a mortgage must be clear, unequivocal, and convincing.—Edwards v. Bond, 151 S. W. 243.

III. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

(B) Parties and Debts or Liabilities Secured.

§ 115 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where defendants were deemed certain property on which plaintiff held a vendor's lien, evidenced by notes, and defendants asked for an extension of time, and executed a trust deed reciting that they "are justly indebted to the plaintiff, as evidenced by certain notes assumed," an indebtedness was created on the part of the defendants.—Peterson v. Kerbey, 151 S. W. 321.

IX. FORECLOSURE BY EXERCISE OF POWER OF SALE.

§ 330 (Tex.Civ.App.) Acts 1889, c. 118 (Rev. St. 1895, art. 2369), having been continued in force in its exact language by section 16 of the general provisions of Revised Statutes 1911, and such article not requiring notice of a sale under a power contained in the mortgage, governs a sale made in 1911, notwithstanding a subsequent statute requiring service of notice on the defendant in execution, especially in view of Act 1903, c. 77 (Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 3757).—Corbett v. Sweeney, 151 S. W. 858.

§ 338 (Tex.Civ.App.) A maker of notes secured by a trust deed cannot enjoin a sale thereunder for the entire debt on the ground that attorney's fees and commissions are extortionate.—Corbett v. Sweeney, 151 S. W. 858.

X. FORECLOSURE BY ACTION.

(E) Parties and Process.

§ 426 (Tex.Civ.App.) In a suit to foreclose a mortgage, the only proper parties are the mortgagor, mortgagee, and those acquiring rights or interests under them subsequent to the mortgage.—Gamble v. Martin, 151 S. W. 327.

(H) Trial or Hearing and Reference.

§ 480 (Tex.Civ.App.) Evidence held to present question for jury whether mortgagee, a fire insurance company, agreed to attend to the insurance on the premises, and did attend to it for a time, so as to justify the mortgagor in believing that it would continue to do so.—Commonwealth Fire Ins. Co. v. Obenchain, 151 S. W. 611.

IV. PROCEEDINGS OF COUNCIL OR OTHER GOVERNING BODY.

(B) Ordinances and By-Laws in General.

§ 122 (Ky.) The burden of showing that a municipal occupation or license tax is unreasonable, oppressive, and confiscatory is upon the party attacking the tax, and, in the absence of evidence, cannot be held invalid on those grounds.—Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Calhoun, 151 S. W. 659.

IX. PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

(B) Preliminary Proceedings and Ordinances or Resolutions.

§ 294 (Mo.App.) Cities of the third class are required to publish a preliminary resolution stating directly, or by reference, the nature and character of the improvement, a patented article furnishing its own standard in such case; otherwise the proceedings are without jurisdiction.—Custer v. City of Springfield, 151 S. W. 759.

§ 297 (Mo.App.) Person having contract for purchase of property abutting on the street held to be a "property owner" entitled to sign a protest against the improvement of a street, under Rev. St. 1909, § 9255.—Shaw v. Goben, 151 S. W. 209.

A person moving out of a city, although he states he intends to return, held not a resident owner entitled to sign a protest against the improvement of a street, under Rev. St. 1909, § 9255.—Id.

Owner of property in a city, residing outside the city, who moves to the city intending to remain there and become a citizen, held immediately qualified to sign a protest against the improvement of a street, under Rev. St. 1909, § 9255.—Id.

A signer of a protest against the improvement of a street, under Rev. St. 1909, § 9255, must have been qualified to sign it at the time a resolution for the improvement of the street was passed.—Id.

§ 297 (Mo.App.) Property owners may prevent the improvement of a street by filing a remonstrance within a certain time.—Custer v. City of Springfield, 151 S. W. 759.

§ 323 (Mo.App.) A city council acting in good faith in selecting patented paving material, not shown to be fraudulent or inferior to other paving materials in common use and less expensive, will not be restrained by property owners who have made no preliminary remonstrance.—Custer v. City of Springfield, 151 S. W. 759.

(C) Contracts.

§ 330 (Mo.App.) Where a city charter provides that public work shall be let to the lowest bidder, there must be opportunity for active competition, but where, in the bona fide opinion of the public authorities, a patented article is so superior that it would be a public injury not to use it, it may be required to be used.—Custer v. City of Springfield, 151 S. W. 759.

(E) Assessments for Benefits, and Special Taxes.

§ 450 (Ky.) Where territory on but one side of a street to be improved has been divided into squares by streets, the assessment district on the unplatted side must be to a line the same distance from the street as on the other side.—Long v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 151 S. W. 6.

§ 465 (Ky.) The cost of an improvement must be equally apportioned to all the property in an assessment district.—Long v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 151 S. W. 6.

§ 485 (Mo.App.) Under St. Louis city charter, making special tax bills prima facie evidence of proper assessment, a special tax bill held properly adjudged valid.—Granite Bituminous Paving Co. v. Parkview Realty & Improvement Co., 151 S. W. 487.

§ 495 (Mo.) Under Kansas City Charter, art. 6, §§ 6, 23, in a supplemental proceeding to assess the benefits of a public improvement, neither the municipal nor the circuit court has jurisdiction over property properly included in the verdict in the original proceeding in view of article 6, §§ 4, 5, 8, and 13.—State ex rel. Tuller v. Seehorn, 151 S. W. 724.

§ 513 (Ky.) Though defendant in injunction, after its demurrer to the petition was overruled, made no defense, except as to the value of plaintiff's lots, yet the petition and proof showing the lots were corner lots, the decree, disregarding the rule that such a lot may be assessed for half its value for the improvement of each street, was erroneous.—City of Latonia v. Carroll, 151 S. W. 400.

§ 519 (Mo.App.) Special taxes for street improvements are a lien superior to other incumbrances.—Granite Bituminous Paving Co. v. Parkview Realty & Improvement Co., 151 S. W. 479.

(F) Enforcement of Assessments and Special Taxes.

§ 525 (Mo.App.) A suit to enforce special tax bills is in rem, and enforcement can be made by sale alone.—Granite Bituminous Paving Co. v. Parkview Realty & Improvement Co., 151 S. W. 479.

§ 564 (Mo.App.) Under St. Louis City Charter, art. 6, § 25, an action to enforce a tax bill brought within two years after maturity of the bill by service of notice on the owner, wherein the purchaser at mortgage foreclosure sale is made a party defendant, held not barred by limitations.—Granite Bituminous Paving Co. v. Parkview Realty & Improvement Co., 151 S. W. 486.

§ 565 (Mo.App.) Beneficiaries of prior incumbrances on land subject to a lien for special taxes are not necessary, but proper, parties in a suit to enforce the bills.—Granite Bituminous Paving Co. v. Parkview Realty & Improvement Co., 151 S. W. 479.

The owner against whom a special tax bill issued, and who was the legal owner at the time the lien attached, is the only necessary party defendant in a suit to enforce the lien.—Id.

The word "owner," in the St. Louis city charter, providing for special tax bills and their enforcement in suits against the owner, means the "legal owner."—Id.

§ 567 (Mo.App.) An answer in a suit to enforce a special tax bill held to allege new matter which defendants must establish.—Granite Bituminous Paving Co. v. Parkview Realty & Improvement Co., 151 S. W. 487.

X. POLICE POWER AND REGULATIONS.

(A) Delegation, Extent, and Exercise of Power.

§ 604 (Mo.App.) An ordinance forbidding the use of a building for keeping stallions where such use disturbs the peace of the neighborhood, or violates public decency, is valid.—City of Tarkio v. Miller, 151 S. W. 208.

§ 605 (Mo.App.) A business which is a nuisance at common law may be suppressed by ordinance.—City of Tarkio v. Miller, 151 S. W. 208.

(B) Violations and Enforcement of Regulations.

§ 631 (Mo.App.) One keeping stallions, in a city in such a way as to scandalize the immediate neighborhood violates an ordinance forbidding such keeping so as to violate public decency.—City of Tarkio v. Miller, 151 S. W. 208.

§ 635 (Mo.App.) A prosecution for the violation of a city ordinance is a civil and not a criminal case.—Grant City v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 187.

§ 640 (Mo.App.) A person prosecuted for a violation of an ordinance, which is also an offense under the public laws of the state, is entitled to the presumption of innocence and to have his guilt established beyond a reasonable doubt.—Grant City v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 187.

§ 642 (Mo.App.) Notwithstanding Rev. St. 1909, § 2083, limiting appellate courts to an examination of the record, the court may, on a motion to dismiss the appeal, receive evidence dehors the record to show a compromise or settlement.—Grant City v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 187.

A party moving to dismiss an appeal on the ground of a settlement has the burden of showing the same and that the person agreeing thereto on behalf of the appellant had authority to make such agreement.—Id.

XI. USE AND REGULATION OF PUBLIC PLACES, PROPERTY, AND WORKS.

(A) Streets and Other Public Ways.

§ 646 (Ky.) Where a street improved for travel has not been dedicated or accepted or recognized by the municipality as such, it is not a public street.—Long v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 151 S. W. 6.

§ 647 (Mo.) St. Louis Scheme of Separation, § 10, providing that the interest of the county, in public roads shall vest in the city, is applicable to a road established by user.—Laclede-Christy Clay Products Co. v. City of St. Louis, 151 S. W. 460.

§ 654 (Ky.) An owner of property, asserting that a public use of a walkway for 15 years was merely permissive, held to have the burden of proof that the use was as claimed.—White v. City of Calhoun, 151 S. W. 362.

§ 654 (Mo.) Evidence held to establish the existence of a street by user and recognition.—Laclede-Christy Clay Products Co. v. City of St. Louis, 151 S. W. 460.

A void order establishing a public road held admissible as evidence of the existence of a street by prescription.—Id.

§ 657 (Mo.) Rev. St. 1909, § 10,446, providing that 10 years nonuser shall constitute abandonment of road, does not apply to city streets.—Laclede-Christy Clay Products Co. v. City of St. Louis, 151 S. W. 460.

Right of city and public to use a street held not lost by abandonment or adverse possession, though the street commissioners declared that it was not a street, and the city condemned a right of way therein for sewers and water pipes.—Id.

§ 691 (Ky.) A public service corporation which uses the streets of a city without the right to do so is a mere trespasser, and cannot invoke in its favor any of the laws enacted for the protection of corporations that have observed the law.—Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Calhoun, 151 S. W. 659.

§ 706 (Mo.App.) In an action for injuries from an automobile, where the only issue was as to its ownership or control, an instruction permitting the jury to find against defendant if his agent was operating the machine at the time, without requiring a finding that the agent was operating it for him, or in the course of his employment, was erroneous.—Warrington v. Bird, 151 S. W. 754.

§ 706 (Mo.App.) In an action for injuries by being struck by a taxicab, in which specific acts of negligence were alleged, it was error to authorize a finding for plaintiff if the jury found that the driver was not using the highest degree of care a careful person would use under similar circumstances at the time of the injury.—McDonnell v. Columbia Taxicab Co., 151 S. W. 767.

XII. TORTS.

(C) Defects or Obstructions in Streets and Other Public Ways.

§ 762 (Ky.) Where a city knows that rock has been placed in a street by an abutting owner, it must see to it that it is properly guarded.—City of Carlisle v. Campbell, 151 S. W. 673.

A city may not shift the statutory burden imposed on it of keeping its streets reasonably safe for public travel, by adopting an ordinance permitting property owners to use portions of the streets when erecting improvements on abutting lots.—Id.

§ 763 (Ky.) A city must maintain its streets in a reasonably safe condition.—City of Carlisle v. Campbell, 151 S. W. 673.

§ 768 (Mo.App.) A city engaged in the business of carrying high and dangerous currents of electricity on overhead wires held not an insurer of the safety of persons passing beneath, but bound to exercise reasonable care therefor.—Wilhite v. City of Huntsville, 151 S. W. 232.

A city held liable for the electrocution of a horse by his stepping on a telephone wire, broken in a severe sleet storm, which fell across an uninsulated portion of an electric light wire containing a dangerous current.—Id.

§ 803 (Mo.App.) Where there was no apparent reason why a 19 year old boy, familiar with the locality, fell over an embankment in a street in the daytime and was killed, he must have been guilty of contributory negligence.—Brady v. City of St. Joseph, 151 S. W. 234.

§ 816 (Mo.App.) Whether decedent's fall over an embankment in daylight, without any apparent reason, was explainable by his having incipient epilepsy cannot be considered, where that fact was not pleaded.—Brady v. City of St. Joseph, 151 S. W. 234.

§ 818 (Mo.App.) Evidence of the financial ability of the city to meet all of its obligations and duties as a corporation, is inadmissible in an action for personal injuries caused by defective sidewalk.—Ledbetter v. City of Kirksville, 151 S. W. 228.

§ 822 (Mo.App.) An instruction in an action against a city for damages for injuries caused by defective sidewalk held not erroneous as in effect charging that the city is liable regardless of the traveler's negligence.—Ledbetter v. City of Kirksville, 151 S. W. 228.

MURDER.

See Homicide.

NAMES.

§ 18 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the name of the grantee of a patent was identical with that of the signer of a will who was named in probate proceedings, the identity of names will, in the absence of other evidence, sufficiently establish the fact that the testator was the grantee of the patent.—McDoel v. Jordan, 151 S. W. 1178.

NAVIGABLE WATERS.III. RIPARIAN AND LITTORAL RIGHTS.

§ 44 (Ark.) In case of accretions, where the bore line is not irregular, they should be apportioned by giving to each section a proportion of the outer boundary line of the accretions in the ratio that the old shore line, on the particular section, bore to the whole of the old shore line, and though the main stream has gone west of the new shore line, leaving only a hute dividing the accretions from a former island in the river, the measurements must be made from such chute as the new shore line.—Leaves v. Moore, 151 S. W. 1025.

NECESSITY.

See Easements, §§ 1, 18.

NEGLIGENCE.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 216, 1064, 1066, 1068; Carriers, §§ 228, 280-345; Death; Explosives; Landlord and Tenant, §§ 164-169; Master and Servant, §§ 88-296; Mechanics' Liens, § 281; Municipal Corporations, §§ 706, 762-822; Pleading, §§ 8, 433; Railroads, §§ 233-482; Receivers, § 105; Street Railroads; Sunday, § 19; Telegraphs and Telephones, §§ 16, 37-71; Trial, §§ 191-296; Waters and Water Courses, § 63.

II. ACTS OR OMISSIONS CONSTITUTING NEGLIGENCE.(A) Personal Conduct in General.

§ 1 (Mo.App.) Negligence is distinguishable from actionable negligence, in that the former may mean mere carelessness not involving liability, while the latter means the violation of a duty owed by the party charged to the party injured.—Hight v. American Bakery Co., 151 S. W. 776.

(B) Dangerous Substances, Machinery, and Other Instrumentalities.

§ 23 (Ky.) The "turntable doctrine" is based upon the idea that a dangerous instrumentality has been constructed where children habitually congregated, or at a place inviting to children, so the owner's knowledge, so that he ought to have anticipated that they would be attracted to it.—Meyer v. Union Light, Heat & Power Co., 151 S. W. 941.

§ 23 (Mo.App.) To sustain a recovery for injuries to a child under the turntable doctrine, the machinery or appliance must have been dangerous in itself, or liable to become so when put in motion, and defendant must have been negligent in leaving it unguarded or unsecured in a place to which children had access.—Hight v. American Bakery Co., 151 S. W. 776.

In an action for injuries to a child by having his arm run over by defendant's wagon as he was reaching between the wheels to seize a toy thrown out by men in the wagon, defendant held not guilty of actionable negligence, and was not, therefore, liable under the turntable doctrine.—Id.

§ 23 (Tex.Civ.App.) One who leaves unguarded dangerous machinery usually attractive to children is liable for injuries to a child attracted to the machinery, though he is there without express permission.—Little v. James McCord Co., 151 S. W. 835.

§ 24 (Ky.) Where defendant power company did not know that there was a rock pile against a brick wall surrounding a churchyard, in which it had dangerous electrical apparatus, so that children could climb over it, and did not know that boys were in the habit of playing in a lot adjoining the churchyard, held, that it was not liable for injuries to a boy who climbed over the churchyard wall, and was injured by contact with its wires.—Meyer v. Union Light, Heat & Power Co., 151 S. W. 941.

§ 27 (Tex.Civ.App.) Manufacturer of soap held liable for injuries from poisonous substances therein, although there was no contract or privity between it and the person injured.—Armstrong Packing Co. v. Clem, 151 S. W. 576.

Facts held to show sufficiently that a manufacturer of soap failed to use care in its preparation and hence that it was liable for injuries from its use.—Id.

(C) Condition and Use of Land, Buildings, and other Structures.

§ 32 (Tex.Civ.App.) Person riding on another's log train without invitation, but by consent, held to be a licensee to whom the owner owed the duty only of ordinary care, and who was not liable for injuries caused by the condition of the track.—Kirby Lumber Co. v. Gresham, 151 S. W. 847.

III. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.(A) Persons Injured in General.

§ 66 (Tex.Civ.App.) A purchaser of soap is not required to test it for poisonous substances, but, where he is ignorant of defects therein, may assume that it is fit for use.—Armstrong Packing Co. v. Clem, 151 S. W. 576.

§ 82 (Mo.App.) Where a child placed his arm between the wheels of a slowly moving wagon in order to seize a toy, and, not having withdrawn it in time, it was caught by the wheel and injured, the placing of his arm between the wheels, and not the attractiveness of the toy, was the proximate cause of the injury.—Hight v. American Bakery Co., 151 S. W. 776.

(B) Children and Others Under Disability.

§ 85 (Mo.App.) A child of 10, injured by getting his arm under the wheel of a wagon passing slowly along the street as he was trying to seize a toy, held guilty of contributory negligence.—Hight v. American Bakery Co., 151 S. W. 776.

IV. ACTIONS.(A) Right of Action, Parties, Preliminary Proceedings, and Pleading.

§ 117 (Mo.) Contributory negligence is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded, unless it is shown by plaintiff in making out his own case.—Benjamin v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 91.

(B) Evidence.

§ 122 (Mo.App.) It cannot be presumed that a decedent exercised due care for his safety, where the unexplained facts show that he saw, or should have seen, the danger.—Brady v. City of St. Joseph, 151 S. W. 234.

(C) Trial, Judgment, and Review.

§ 136 (Ky.) In a negligence action, where the evidence is equally consistent with the existence or nonexistence of negligence, the case should not be submitted to the jury.—Wood v.

Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co., 151 S. W. 29.

§ 136 (Tex.Civ.App.) Negligence is one of law only when from the undisputed facts no inference except that of negligence can reasonably be drawn, or when unprejudiced minds cannot reasonably disagree as to the facts.—Freeman v. Kennerly, 151 S. W. 580.

§ 136 (Tex.Civ.App.) Whether a child injured by an explosion of an explosive left by the owner on the premises of a third person was guilty of contributory negligence held for the jury.—Little v. James McCord Co., 151 S. W. 835.

§ 141 (Mo.) An instruction that, if plaintiff was guilty of negligence of any character which directly contributed to her injuries, she could not recover, was erroneous, as not specifying the facts constituting such negligence.—Benjamin v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 91.

§ 141 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injuries to a child received while crossing railroad tracks, an instruction held properly refused for its imputation of contributory negligence of the child's father to her.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Wininger, 151 S. W. 586.

In an action for injuries to a child while crossing railway tracks, an instruction held properly refused for its tendency to hold a child of tender years responsible for contributory negligence without inquiry as to her discretion and mental capacity.—Id.

I. NATURE AND SCOPE OF REMEDY.

§ 6 (Mo.App.) Trial judges have a wide discretion in granting new trials.—Allen v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 151 S. W. 762.

II. GROUNDS.

(C) Rulings and Instructions at Trial.

§ 40 (Mo.App.) Though defendant did not except to instructions, the court may of its own motion notice error therein and grant him a new trial on account thereof.—Warren v. Cowden, 151 S. W. 501.

(D) Disqualification or Misconduct of or Affecting Jury.

§ 52 (Tex.Civ.App.) Averaging jurors' estimates of damages held not ground for a new trial, where it did not appear that there was any prior agreement that the average should constitute their verdict, or that it was returned as their verdict.—Armstrong Packing Co. v. Clem, 151 S. W. 576.

(F) Verdict or Findings Contrary to Law or Evidence.

§ 71 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the evidence was conflicting, but sustained the verdict, a new trial on the ground that it was against the preponderance of the evidence was properly denied.—St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Cartwright, 151 S. W. 630.

§ 72 (Mo.App.) Where plaintiff's case rested almost exclusively on his own testimony, and his credibility was attacked, there was no such preponderance of evidence in his favor as warranted a new trial.—Kiel v. Ott, 151 S. W. 182.

(G) Surprise, Accident, Inadvertence, or Mistake.

§ 89 (Mo.App.) Where, in attachment, interpleader's evidence was that it had marked the attached goods, it could not claim a new trial for surprise by the attaching creditor's evidence that the goods were not marked when attached.—Byrd v. Vanderburgh, 151 S. W. 184.

§ 90 (Mo.App.) Rev. St. 1909, § 2022, authorizing a new trial for perjury or mistake on the part of a witness resulting in an improper finding, gives the trial judge a wide discretion to be reasonably exercised.—Byrd v. Vanderburgh, 151 S. W. 184.

§ 97 (Mo.App.) If a party is surprised at the admission of evidence, he should ask a postponement to enable him to produce counter evidence or move for nonsuit, in order to rely thereon for a new trial.—Byrd v. Vanderburgh, 151 S. W. 184.

(H) Newly Discovered Evidence.

§ 103 (Mo.App.) In an action for personal injury, newly discovered evidence of the sister of the plaintiff, that the plaintiff intended to be injured, and afterwards feigned injury, held to justify the granting of a motion for a new trial.—Allen v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 151 S. W. 762.

III. PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE NEW TRIAL.

§ 126 (Mo.App.) A ground for new trial that the judgment and verdict are against the law is not sufficiently specific.—Byrd v. Vanderburgh, 151 S. W. 184.

§ 162 (Ky.) The rule that, where the judgment is excessive, a new trial must be awarded, does not apply where the items constituting the damages recovered are separable, so that the court may eliminate those not properly recoverable.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Meyers, 151 S. W. 19.

§ 162 (Mo.App.) The trial court did not err in granting a new trial for excessive damages, notwithstanding plaintiff's offer to remit the excessive portion, where he did not indicate how much should be remitted, but threw the burden of determining the proper amount on the court.—Blackmer & Post Pipe Co. v. Mobile & O. R. Co., 151 S. W. 164.

§ 9 (Mo.) If the law fixes a definite date, a notice cannot be returned on a different date.—State ex rel. Coleman v. Blair, 151 S. W. 148.

§ 11 (Mo.) As a rule, when the law requires a notice to be published for a certain number of days before legal proceedings are had, it is sufficient if the last publication occur before the date fixed.—State ex rel. Coleman v. Blair, 151 S. W. 148.

NUISANCE.

See Appeal and Error, § 221; Disorderly House, § 2; Injunction, § 219; Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 261, 274; Municipal Corporations, § 605.

I. PRIVATE NUISANCES.

(A) Nature of Injury, and Liability Therefor.

§ 3 (Mo.App.) One maintaining a barn and corral near a street for the sole purpose of keeping stallions to which he bred mares brought there maintains a nuisance to persons living from 200 to 400 feet from the barn.—McNulty v. Miller, 151 S. W. 208.

(C) Abatement and Injunction.

§ 36 (Tex.Civ.App.) Decree for abatement of a slaughterhouse as a nuisance allowed the plaintiff held proper though there was evidence that the premises had been made cleanly before trial, in view of the verdict that it was a nuisance.—Nations v. Harris, 151 S. W. 334.

II. PUBLIC NUISANCES.

(A) Nature of Injury, and Liability Therefor.

§ 60 (Tex.Civ.App.) Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 4689, authorizing the enjoining of bawdyhouses at the suit of the state or any citizen, except the statute shall not interfere with the regulation of bawdyhouses in towns and cities, makes bawdyhouses nuisances, subject to be abated by injunction at the suit of the state or any citizen; but the limitation of the right is valid.—Spence v. Fenchler, 151 S. W. 1094.

§ 61 (Mo.App.) The keeping in a city of stallions for breeding purposes is lawful, and not a nuisance per se, unless conducted in an improper manner.—City of Tarkio v. Miller, 151 S. W. 208.

(B) Rights and Remedies of Private Persons.

§ 75 (Tenn.) The chancery court has no jurisdiction of bills by private persons to enjoin the keeping of disorderly houses in a red light district, where the evidence does not show how much any house was responsible for the special injury alleged by complainants.—Weidner v. Friedman, 151 S. W. 56.

A bill to enjoin the maintenance of disorderly houses in a red light district, which have existed there for more than 25 years, should be dismissed for laches.—Id.

§ 9 (Ark.) A complete pardon granted one convicted of crime cannot be interposed to defeat a nunc pro tunc order amending the judgment, so as to impose on accused the burden of paying the costs.—Villines v. State, 151 S. W. 1023.

PARENT AND CHILD.

See Contracts, § 108; Death, §§ 31, 72; Deeds, § 211; Divorce, §§ 300, 303; Explosives; Fraudulent Conveyances, § 61; Liens, § 7; Negligence, § 141.

§ 3 (Tex.Civ.App.) While a parent cannot be charged for necessities furnished by a stranger for his minor child, except by his express or implied promise to pay, such promise may be inferred from his legal duty to furnish necessities.—Snell v. Ham, 151 S. W. 1077.

An instruction, in an action against a parent for clothing furnished a minor child, that there must have been an express or implied authority to the child to purchase or an express or implied promise to pay, and an express promise to pay for goods other than necessities, held erroneous, not stating whether the clothing was a necessity, or defining express or implied authority, and leading the jury to believe that explicit evidence of a promise was necessary.—Id. If articles furnished to minor children were reasonably necessary for their support and comfort the father's promise to pay therefor would be inferred, in absence of a showing that he was ready to himself supply the children therewith.—Id.

To charge a parent with payment for articles, not necessities, furnished minor children, they must have been expressly authorized by the father to purchase, or he must have permitted their purchase with knowledge thereof, leading the seller to believe that they were purchased with his consent, or must have expressly agreed to pay for them.—Id.

If goods furnished a minor child were necessary, so that the law would imply the parent's promise to pay therefor, his knowledge of whether the seller expected him to pay would be immaterial on his liability.—Id.

It was error not to charge, in an action against a parent for clothing furnished a minor child, that direct and positive evidence was not necessary to prove defendant's promise to pay for such necessities.—Id.

§ 7 (Ky.) A parent, who has not emancipated a child, may recover for loss of services and medical care and attention from injuries received in the employment of the child by one with notice of the minority, but not where he had emancipated such child, or where the child was employed without notice of the minority.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. De Atley, 151 S. W. 363.

In a father's action for injuries to his son while in defendant's employ, evidence held to show that the father consented that his son might work for himself, and surrendered his right to his control and services.—Id.

Father held not entitled to recover for injuries to a minor sustained while in defendant's employ because he had impliedly, if not expressly, emancipated his son.—Id.

Employer of minor held not liable to his father for personal injuries where he exercises reasonable care to ascertain his age, and where his appearance indicates that he is over 21 years of age.—Id.

Employer held not charged with notice that an employé was a minor by the fact that, on a previous employment in a different department, its clerks had advised the employé to misstate his age.—Id.

I. PLAINTIFFS.

(B) Joinder.

§ 19 (Mo.App.) A several action on a contract by one with two others jointly to pay them a certain sum for services to be performed by them jointly cannot be maintained by one of the obligees against the obligor.—Frumberg v. Haderlein, 151 S. W. 160.

PARTITION.

See Appeal and Error, § 719.

II. ACTIONS FOR PARTITION.

(A) Right of Action and Defenses.

§ 12 (Ky.) Under Civ. Code Prac. § 490, subsec. 2, land owned by infants jointly, subject to dower of their mother in a third of it, may be sold for partition in an action by their guardian; the mother consenting to take the present value of her dower.—Hatterich v. Bruce, 151 S. W. 81.

(B) Proceedings and Relief.

§ 77 (Ky.) Under Civ. Code Prac. § 490, providing that a vested estate jointly owned by two or more may be sold by a court of equity, though plaintiff or defendant is an infant, where the property cannot be divided without materially impairing its value, a sale of certain real estate held proper.—Riddell v. Wilcox, 151 S. W. 25.

§ 78 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 6108, the commissioners in partition may divide the land according to value, although the court determines that each party is entitled to one-half.—McShan v. Johnson, 151 S. W. 597.

§ 83 (Mo.) The rule that partition cannot be had, where one claims adversely to those seeking partition, without first determining the right of possession in ejectment does not apply where the adverse claimant voluntarily comes into the partition suit and sets up an equitable claim to the land.—Waddle v. Frazier, 151 S. W. 87.

§ 85 (Tex.Civ.App.) A tenant in common is entitled to have improvements made by him without intent to embarrass his cotenant set apart to him in partition if it can be done without injury to the cotenant, and, if it cannot be done, he is entitled to compensation.—Holloway v. Hall, 151 S. W. 895.

§ 91 (Tex.Civ.App.) In partition, a court did not err in appointing new commissioners and surveyor to make partition, when those first appointed failed or refused to act.—McShan v. Johnson, 151 S. W. 597.

Motion for appointment of surveyor and commissioners upon failure of those previously appointed to act held sufficient, although defendant did not state that a writ of partition, accompanied by a certified copy of the decree, was ever issued to the sheriff.—Id.

§ 93 (Ky.) Where the court ordered a sale of land owned by an adult and an infant, and the infant was before payment protected by the lien retained by the judgment, any irregularity in the time of the execution of the bond to the infant required by Civ. Code Prac. § 493, did not affect the validity of the sale.—Riddell v. Wilcox, 151 S. W. 25.

§ 114 (Ark.) Kirby's Dig. § 5793, relating to sale of the land, and providing for deducting the costs, furnishes no basis for the allowance of solicitor's fees to plaintiff where no sale was made.—Gardner v. McAuley, 151 S. W. 997.

Where defendants appear by attorney or the proceeding is adversary in its nature, plaintiffs in partition, though successful, are not entitled to have their solicitor's fees taxed as part of the costs.—Id.

PARTNERSHIP.

See Forcible Entry and Detainer, § 6; Judgment, § 419; Set-Off and Counterclaim, § 13; Trial, §§ 244, 256.

I. THE RELATION.

(A) Creation and Requisites.

§ 5 (Mo.App.) Where defendant, who had employed his brother as agent to procure a purchaser of his farm, employed plaintiff to advertise the property for a commission, without revoking the agency of the brother to whom plaintiff should turn over answers, the brother and plaintiff were not partners, and plaintiff could sue alone for the services rendered.—Dodge v. Childers, 151 S. W. 749.

(C) Evidence.

§ 53 (Ark.) Evidence held to sustain a finding that a partnership contract was for buying and selling but two cars of cotton seed during a season.—Henderson v. E. W. Emerson Co., 151 S. W. 261.

II. THE FIRM, ITS NAME, POWERS, AND PROPERTY.

§ 67 (Tex.Civ.App.) Property purchased with money withdrawn by a partner from the business is firm property, where it is withdrawn in bad faith, without the knowledge and consent of the other partner, but not where the other partner knows of and consents to such transaction.—Hengy v. Hengy, 151 S. W. 1127.

§ 68 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where a partner incurs a debt to secure money to buy land, and subsequently pays such debt out of partnership funds, the partnership does not thereby acquire any claim on the land.—Hengy v. Hengy, 151 S. W. 1127.

IV. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES AS TO THIRD PERSONS.

(D) Actions by or Against Firms or Partners.

§ 218 (Mo.App.) The fact of partnership is for the jury, where there are facts authorizing a verdict to that effect; but the court must determine whether there is such evidence.—Thornton v. Mersereau, 151 S. W. 212.

§ 219 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the petition in an action against a firm was sufficient to support a judgment against each partner personally, as well as against the firm, a partner against whom a personal judgment was rendered could not complain because no such judgment was rendered against the copartners.—First Bank of Springtown v. Hill, 151 S. W. 652.

VII. DISSOLUTION, SETTLEMENT, AND ACCOUNTING.

(D) Actions for Dissolution and Accounting.

§ 329 (Tex.Civ.App.) In action for partnership settlement, submission of question whether plaintiff paid one-half the purchase money for certain land individually held proper under the pleadings and evidence.—Hengy v. Hengy, 151 S. W. 1127.

§ 336 (Tex.Civ.App.) On a partnership accounting, where partner claimed land as his individual property, and claimed that he paid for it out of a bank deposit, exclusion of bank account offered to show that he had no such deposit held error.—Hengy v. Hengy, 151 S. W. 1127.

Letter from one partner to another stating properties owned by the writer in another state held irrelevant on a partnership accounting.—Id.

On partnership accounting between father and son, admission of letter of father showing property owned by him in another state held calculated to prejudice the jury.—Id.

§ 342 (Tex.Civ.App.) On a partnership accounting where there was a dispute as to the date when the partnership commenced, an auditor, having no power to pass upon this question, properly reported the amount due each of the partners on each of the different theories concerning such date.—Hengy v. Hengy, 151 S. W. 1127.

§ 39 (Tex. Civ. App.) Where a debtor making a payment gives no directions as to the application thereof, the creditor may generally do so within a reasonable time.—Compton v. Ahrens & Ott Mfg. Co., 151 S. W. 884.

IV. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, TRIAL, AND REVIEW.

§ 75 (Tex.Civ.App.) The application by a creditor of a payment, where the debtor gives no directions as to application, may be established by circumstances.—Compton v. Ahrens & Ott Mfg. Co., 151 S. W. 884.

Where a guaranty covered only part of an account, and the debtor made a part payment without directing its application, and the creditor demanded of the guarantor payment of the balance, and the guarantor made no objection, there was an application of the partial payment on the excess of the account over the guaranty, so that the guarantor was liable for the balance due.—Id.

I. FORM AND ALLEGATIONS IN GENERAL.

§ 2 (Ky.) While the Code abolishes forms of pleading, it does not change the substance of various pleas.—Shirley v. Renick, 151 S. W. 357.

§ 8 (Mo.) The facts constituting contributory negligence must be pleaded, and it is insufficient to merely allege that plaintiff received his injuries at the time mentioned in the petition as the result of his own fault and negligence.—Benjamin v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 91.

§ 8 (Mo.App.) In an action to enjoin municipal officers from entering into a contract for paying with patented material, the facts constituting illegality must be pleaded, and an allegation that the patent was a subterfuge to prevent competitive bidding is not an allegation of fact.—Custer v. City of Springfield, 151 S. W. 759.

§ 8 (Mo.App.) In an action against a landlord for injuries to the tenant's child from the falling of a mantel in the premises, an averment that it was the landlord's duty to have the premises in a safe condition for the use of plaintiff was a mere conclusion, and was not equivalent to an allegation of an express covenant to repair.—Korach v. Loeffel, 151 S. W. 790.

§ 8 (Tex.Civ.App.) Averments that a judgment of a justice of the peace was void, and that the justice had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter or the person of plaintiff suing to restrain enforcement of the judgment, are mere legal conclusions.—Pye v. Wyatt, 151 S. W. 1086.

§ 8 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where, in a purchaser's action for breach of contract, an answer alleging that vendor had been induced to sign the contract by plaintiff's fraudulent representations that it bound plaintiff to purchase, "assuming" a certain debt, when in fact it merely bound him to purchase "subject to" such debt, was not demurrable for failure to allege special damage from the fraud; such allegation, if made, being a conclusion.—Parker v. Naylor, 151 S. W. 1098.

§ 34 (Ky.) A pleading is construed most strongly against the pleader.—Samuels v. Louisville Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 37.

§ 34 (Mo.App.) A pleading must be read as a whole.—Goode v. Central Coal & Coke Co., 151 S. W. 508.

When first attacked after judgment, a pleading should be construed favorably to the pleader, and all doubts resolved in his favor.—Id.

§ 34 (Tex.Civ.App.) On general demurrer, every reasonable intent must be indulged in favor of the pleading assailed.—National Lumber & Creosoting Co. v. Maris, 151 S. W. 325.

III. PLEA OR ANSWER, CROSS-COMPLAINT, AND AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE.

(D) Matter in Avoidance.

§ 133 (Ky.) Even under the Code, a plea of son assault demesne must give color.—Shirley v. Renick, 151 S. W. 357.

An answer which in the first paragraph traverses the allegation of malice in the commission of an assault, and the second paragraph alleges that defendant attempted to assist a constable in making an arrest, whereupon plaintiff attempted to restrain defendant, who to protect himself struck plaintiff, amounts to a plea in confession and avoidance.—Id.

IV. REPLICATION OR REPLY AND SUBSEQUENT PLEADINGS.

§ 162 (Tex.Civ.App.) The only purpose of a supplemental petition is to allege new facts in reply to those alleged by the defendant in his pleading.—May v. Anthony, 151 S. W. 602.

The purpose of an amendment to a petition is to add or withdraw something to or from what has been properly pleaded; and, where plaintiff intended to correct the date of an alleged conversion, it should have been done by amendment and not by supplemental petition.—Id.

§ 174 (Tex.Civ.App.) A supplemental petition in an action on a note for drilling a well, denying that plaintiff had guaranteed that the water should be of a certain quality, was responsive to the answer which alleged that the note was given on plaintiff's representation that water struck was suitable for rice irrigation.—Miller v. Layne & Bowler Co., 151 S. W. 341.

§ 183 (Tex.Civ.App.) Supplementary answers are to meet matters appearing for the first time in a supplemental pleading of the opposite party, and facts pleaded in defense for the first time should not be incorporated in a supplemental answer.—Philadelphia Underwriters' Agency of Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. Brown, 151 S. W. 899.

§ 185 (Mo.App.) As the Code specifically provides that the reply shall be the last pleading in a cause, a rebutter to the reply, though filed, will not be considered.—Murphy v. Lorwood Coöperage Co., 151 S. W. 191.

V. DEMURRER OR EXCEPTION.

§ 205 (Tex.Civ.App.) Exceptions to allegations in defendants' answer because they were insufficient, indefinite, and uncertain, failed to show material facts, and in effect attempted to vary the written contract by parol, held merely a general demurrer to each of the allegations attacked.—Parker v. Naylor, 151 S. W. 1098.

§ 214 (Tex.Civ.App.) A demurrer admits the facts well pleaded.—Lanza v. Roe, 151 S. W. 571.

§ 214 (Tex.Civ.App.) A petition tested by a general demurrer must be taken as true.—Chance v. Pace, 151 S. W. 843.

§ 218 (Ark.) On demurrer it is a question of law whether the facts alleged are sufficient to show that a provision of a bill of lading is unreasonable, and not an issue for the jury under act approved April 30, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 558, § 3).—Cumbe v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 237.

VI. AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL PLEADINGS AND REPLEADER.

§ 236 (Mo.) Under Rev. St. 1909, § 1848, it would be gross error not to allow an amendment in the land description in a petition, where, after action commenced, the court orders a survey of the land, and it differs from the prior survey.—Wright v. Groom, 151 S. W. 465.

§ 245 (Ark.) The court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow amendments to the complaint several days after the action was dismissed.—Cumbe v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 237.

§ 246 (Ark.) The court did not err in refusing to allow an amendment which, in the court's view of the complaint would have rendered the same inconsistent and contradictory.—Cumbe v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 237.

§ 252 (Mo.App.) Where, after a demurrer sustained, plaintiff files a new petition, the original petition is abandoned, and goes out of the record.—Korach v. Loeffel, 151 S. W. 790.

XI. MOTIONS.

§ 360 (Tex.Civ.App.) In passing upon a defense upon a motion to strike, the court is required to look alone to the facts alleged, and to take them as true.—Philadelphia Underwriters' Agency of Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. Brown, 151 S. W. 899.

§ 367 (Mo.) The motion will be denied, when the facts are beyond the knowledge of plaintiff, or are particularly within that of defendant.—Benjamin v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 151 S. W. 91.

XII. ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE.

§ 395 (Mo.App.) A plaintiff cannot plead one cause of action and recover on another.—Mad-den v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 489.

XIII. DEFECTS AND OBJECTIONS, WAIVER, AND AID BY VER- DICT OR JUDGMENT.

§ 403 (Mo.App.) Defective allegations of a petition are cured by answer.—Angel v. City of Portageville, 151 S. W. 192.

§ 406 (Ky.) Defect in a petition, in an action for damages for wrongfully mining coal from plaintiff's land, in only describing plaintiff's land as adjoining the property where defendant was operating its plant, was cured by evidence definitely locating the land in absence of demurrer or motion to make more specific.—Burke Hollow Coal Co. v. Lawson, 151 S. W. 657.

§ 409 (Tex.Civ.App.) A verified pleading containing allegations intended as denials and a prayer for dissolution of the injunction and general relief, in the absence of objection as to form, will be held sufficient as an answer, although styled a "motion to dissolve injunction."—Hicks v. Murphy, 151 S. W. 845.

§ 412 (Ky.) Error as to a departure in the reply is waived, where defendant did not demur or move to strike, but traversed the new matter.—Killebrew v. Murray, 151 S. W. 662.

§ 418 (Mo.) A defendant who answers over after the overruling of a demurrer, or a motion in the nature of a demurrer, waives the ruling.—Parkyn v. Churchill, 151 S. W. 446.

§ 418 (Mo.App.) Where defendant answered over, after demurrer overruled, the only question for review, under Rev. St. 1909, § 1804, is the jurisdiction over the subject-matter, and whether the petition states a cause of action.—Angel v. City of Portageville, 151 S. W. 192.

§ 418 (Mo.App.) Where defendant pleaded over after overruling of demurrer, that the petition did not state a cause of an action was not ground for setting aside a verdict for plaintiff, or arresting judgment, if it was sustained by the evidence.—Hight v. American Bakery Co., 151 S. W. 776.

§ 433 (Mo.) Under Rev. St. 1909, § 2119, relating to the sufficiency of a petition after verdict, a petition in an action for negligence held sufficient after verdict in the absence of any demurrer.—Winn v. Kansas City Belt Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 98.

§ 433 (Mo.App.) A petition, in an action for injuries occurring in Kansas to an employe in railroad shops, held to state a cause of action under Rev. St. 1909, § 5434, and Gen. St. Kan. 1909, § 6999, as against an objection raised for the first time after verdict.—Madden v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 489.

§ 433 (Mo.App.) Where the petition in an action depending on a rule of the common law of a sister state which could not be presumed to have adopted the common law failed to allege such adoption, and defendant answered over, it will be presumed after verdict that such rule did exist.—Shelton v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 493.

§ 433 (Mo.App.) Allegations of the complaint, in an action for a miner's death, as to the place where he was killed held sufficient, in absence of demurrer or motion, to sustain a judgment for plaintiff, based upon proof that the rock fall was not over the place where decedent was working.—Goode v. Central Coal & Coke Co., 151 S. W. 508.

PLEDGES.

See Garnishment, § 27.

§ 30 (Ky.) Where a defendant bank assigned a note secured by a mortgage to plaintiff as security for a loan, agreeing to take up the note as soon as it could, such agreement constituted a waiver of diligence in enforcing a judgment on the security.—Deposit & Savings Bank v. Wright, 151 S. W. 679.

I. THE RELATION.

(A) Creation and Existence.

§ 17 (Tex.Civ.App.) An agent may employ a subagent to perform a service involving no discretion or judgment.—Bound v. Simkins, 151 S. W. 572.

(B) Termination.

§ 33 (Ark.) Contract by manufacturer of lumber making another party its exclusive sales agent held not terminable until all the timber owned by it should have been cut into lumber.—Alf Bennett Lumber Co. v. Walnut Lake Cypress Co., 151 S. W. 275.

Principal who borrowed money from agent and who, after requesting the cancellation of the agency, procured a further loan held to have waived previous breaches in the contract of agency.—Id.

§ 41 (Ark.) Evidence, in an action for breach of contract of agency, held insufficient to show that agent's representations as to its ability to sell lumber for manufacturer were false.—Alf Bennett Lumber Co. v. Walnut Lake Cypress Co., 151 S. W. 275.

II. MUTUAL RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES.

(B) Compensation and Lien of Agent.

§ 84 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under an employment of plaintiff to sell nursery stock, he to receive a commission on sales and be charged with all goods shipped, defendants are not chargeable with sales uncollected, whether represented by notes or otherwise.—F. T. Ramsey & Son v. Cook, 151 S. W. 346.

III. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES AS TO THIRD PERSONS.

(A) Powers of Agent.

§ 113 (Mo.App.) Accused's father, who managed and conducted her defense, as agent, had no authority to bind her by an agreement to dismiss an appeal from a judgment of conviction and pay the costs if the amount of the fine was remitted.—Grant City v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 187.

§ 123 (Ark.) Evidence, in an action to charge one with the price of goods bought by another, held insufficient to show apparent or ostensible authority to buy them on its account.—Wales-Riggs Plantations v. Dye, 151 S. W. 998.

Authority of an agent cannot be proved by the mere fact that the person claiming the power has exercised it; but the person to be charged as principal must be shown to have assented to the act.—Id.

(B) Undisclosed Agency.

§ 146 (Ark.) A person who took possession of leased premises was not excused of liability for the rent by informing the landlord that he was merely acting as attorney for the tenant's creditors, where he did not disclose the names of the creditors.—Cooley v. Ksir, 151 S. W. 254.

§ 146 (Mo.App.) An agent, who conceals the fact of his agency and contracts as the ostensible principal, is liable on the contract, as though he were the real principal.—Lewis v. Fisher, 151 S. W. 172.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

See Corporations, § 484; Guaranty; Justices of the Peace, § 191; Limitation of Actions, §§ 28, 83; Subrogation, § 31.

I. CREATION AND EXISTENCE OF RELATION.

(A) Between Individuals.

§ 14 (Mo.App.) One requesting a merchant to let a third person have goods and promising to pay for them is, when the goods are sold and charged to him, a surety.—P. H. Rea Implement Co. v. Smith, 151 S. W. 203.

III. DISCHARGE OF SURETY.

§ 112 (Mo.App.) Where a building contract containing a stipulation that the owner retain part of the contract price as security against possible liens was by its terms made part of the bond, and also required payment of the final installment 10 days after completion, such payment was in effect with the surety's consent, and hence did not discharge him.—Roennigke v. Essig, 151 S. W. 765.

V. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF SURETY.

(B) As to Principal.

§ 182 (Ky.) Where a surety for two persons as assignees satisfies a judgment against them, growing out of their failure to faithfully discharge their duties, he may proceed against them individually.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Sounsley, 151 S. W. 353.

PRIVATE ROADS.

See Mandamus, § 31.

§ 2 (Mo.) Under Rev. St. 1909, § 10,447, the petition for a private road need not state that the petitioner is an inhabitant of the state.—State ex rel. McDermott Realty Co. v. McElhinney, 151 S. W. 457.

In view of Rev. St. 1909, § 4001, and as an appeal in a proceeding for the establishment of a private road is not governed by section 10,440, but by section 3956, the record of a proceeding to establish a private road begun in a county court, need not, to confer jurisdiction on the circuit court to hear the appeal, show that the petitioner was a citizen of the state.—Id.

II. SERVICE.

(A) Personal Service in General.

§ 58 (Ky.) A nonresident owner, who employs a resident agent to rent land and collect the rents, is engaged in business in the state within Civ. Code Prac. § 51, subsec. 6, so that, in an action for damages to a tenant, process may be served on the agent.—Andonique v. Carmen, 151 S. W. 921.

(B) Substituted Service.

§ 70 (Mo.) Statutes giving jurisdiction by constructive service must be strictly construed.—State ex rel. Coleman v. Blair, 151 S. W. 148.

PROFITS.

See Damages, § 40.

PROHIBITION.

I. NATURE AND GROUNDS.

§ 10 (Mo.) The Supreme Court may prevent by prohibition inferior courts from exceeding their jurisdiction.—State ex rel. Deems v. Holtcamp, 151 S. W. 153.

§ 10 (Mo.) Prohibition will lie to prevent the exercise of judicial power by a court having no jurisdiction to exercise any authority, or where the court is exceeding its jurisdiction in a case rightfully before it.—State ex rel. Tuller v. Seehorn, 151 S. W. 724.

In supplemental proceedings to assess benefits from public improvements, the judge of the circuit court will be restrained by prohibition from assuming jurisdiction over assessments on property properly included in the verdict in the original proceeding.—Id.

§ 11 (Mo.) Where a probate court possesses the power to determine the propriety of a sale of incumbered realty in administration, it should not be prohibited from exercising its statutory jurisdiction, since its error can be corrected on appeal.—State ex rel. Deems v. Holtcamp, 151 S. W. 153.

§ 11 (Mo.) Irregularities in eminent domain proceeding held not to affect court's jurisdiction, and therefore it would not be prevented by prohibition from acting in the matter.—State ex rel. Graham v. Seehorn, 151 S. W. 716.

II. JURISDICTION, PROCEEDINGS, AND RELIEF.

§ 35 (Mo.) Where a writ of prohibition is issued against judges, it should go at relator's costs.—State ex rel. Federal Lead Co. v. Reynolds, 151 S. W. 85.

II. SURVEY AND DISPOSAL OF LANDS OF UNITED STATES.(F) Swamp and Overflowed Lands.

§ 61 (Mo.) A certificate of entry on swamp lands does not pass title, although a receiver's receipt for the purchase money confers an equitable interest in the land on the person to whom the receipt is issued.—Hunter v. Pemiscot Land & Cooperaage Co., 151 S. W. 714.

(K) Remedies in Cases of Fraud, Mistake, or Trust.

§ 127 (Mo.) Where public land was patented under an erroneous description, and the patentee transferred same by a warranty deed under the same description, the land department properly issued a corrected patent to the patentee.—Marshall v. Hill, 151 S. W. 131.

III. DISPOSAL OF LANDS OF THE STATES.

§ 172 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 6482, Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4423, giving railroads a right of way over state lands, and article 6484, Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4425, giving them the right to lay out their road not exceeding 200 feet in width, the grant of a right of way, by special charter in 1873 (Sp. Laws 1873, c. 208), to the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company, "to the extent of 200 feet in width through the public lands," is not void for uncertainty.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Southern Kansas Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 850.

A grant of a right of way through the public lands by special charter in 1873 (Sp. Laws 1873, c. 208), to the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company became effective in present, and not after the first 25 miles were built, if completed within three years, and the completion of 30 miles every two years thereafter until completed, as provided by section 12.—Id.

Failure of the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company to file a map of its line of road with the Commissioner of the General Land Office within six months after organization, as required by its special charter of 1873 (Sp. Laws 1873, c. 208) § 15, which contained no conditions of forfeiture, did not forfeit its rights under the grant.—Id.

§ 172 (Tex.Civ.App.) The grant of a right of way to the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company under special act of 1873 (Sp. Laws 1873, c. 208) was effective in present, and binding on subsequent grantees and their assigns.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Western Stockyards Co., 151 S. W. 1172.

Where a grant of a right of way to a railroad in public lands rested upon a condition subsequent, failure to perform such condition did not revoke the grant, but merely authorized a forfeiture by judicial proceedings or legislative act.—Id.

Acceptance by a railroad of deed from settler to part of a right of way granted it by the state held not to estop the railroad from suing for the entire grant.—Id.

By acceptance of contract wherein it admitted another's ownership of one-half the width of its right of way granted to it by the state, railroad company held estopped thereafter to claim the same.—Id.

§ 173 (Tex.Civ.App.) Substitute purchaser of school lands held not to have made sufficient settlement thereon under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4218k, where he did not personally go on the lands for two months after the purchase, and did not reside there continuously thereafter.—McWhorter v. Eriksen, 151 S. W. 624.

§ 174 (Tex.Civ.App.) Acts 12th Leg. (2d Sess.) c. 57, providing in effect that if a headright certificate, etc., is not returned to and filed in the General Land Office within eight months from the passage of the act, the location and survey made thereunder shall be void, is constitutional.—Guedry v. Keith, 151 S. W. 1167.

§ 175 (Tex.Civ.App.) Location under an unconditional land certificate held to have exhausted the holder's right to appropriate public lands, and location under an unconditional certificate subsequently issued, and under a duplicate certificate, the unconditional certificate having been lost, was void.—Thompson Bros. Lumber Co. v. Toler, 151 S. W. 1111.

Issuance of unconditional land certificate and duplicate certificate upon loss of the unconditional certificate held not a judicial determination that the location under the original certificate had been abandoned.—Id.

Where a valid location was made under a land certificate after the passage of the act of August 30, 1856 (Laws 1856, c. 145, § 2; Rev. St. 1895, art. 4134), expressly prohibiting the lifting or floating of certificates, a subsequent location under a duplicate certificate was void.—Id.

A location under a land certificate by the administrator of the original holder who had transferred it was not void, but inured to the benefit of the transferee.—Id.

§ 175 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Acts 12th Leg. (2d Sess.) c. 57, where a headright certificate was not returned to and filed in the General Land Office, a location and survey made thereunder was void.—Guedry v. Keith, 151 S. W. 1167.

§ 177 (Tex.Civ.App.) The state alone may take advantage of fraud in transactions for the acquisition of its lands, where the rights of an individual do not antedate such fraud.—Campbell v. Elliott, 151 S. W. 1180.

I. RIGHT OF ACTION AND DEFENSES.

§ 22 (Mo.) In an action under Rev. St. 1899, § 650, to quiet title, a record title in plaintiff from P., and in defendant from P. and another, did not show a common source, and plaintiff, claiming only a paper title, was required to show a good one.—Hunter v. Pemiscot Land & Cooperaage Co., 151 S. W. 714.

II. PROCEEDINGS AND RELIEF.

§ 44 (Ky.) Evidence held insufficient to warrant a finding that the land which plaintiff claimed was included in a 99-year lease.—McCain v. Joiner, 151 S. W. 406.

§ 49 (Mo.) In an action to quiet title between the owners of the equitable and legal title, in which a purchaser from the owner of the legal title is made a party, the court may, on finding in favor of the equitable owner, enforce the contract of sale, directing payment of the price to the equitable owner; the purchaser having placed valuable improvements on the land, though having notice of the equitable title.—Marshall v. Hill, 151 S. W. 131.

QUITCLAIM.

See Estoppel, § 29.

QUO WARRANTO.

See Appeal and Error, § 171; Election of Remedies, § 3.

I. NATURE AND GROUNDS.

§ 1 (Mo.) Proceedings in the nature of quo warranto, not instituted under the statute, are of common-law origin, and, as a general rule, equitable rules are not applicable to them.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

II. JURISDICTION, PROCEEDINGS, AND RELIEF.

§ 48 (Mo.) Information in a quo warranto proceeding against a combination in restraint of trade held not to be construed after judgment as alleging that competitive conditions existed at all times prior to a specified date, so as to overthrow findings based on evidence of acts prior to that date.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

II. RAILROAD COMPANIES.

§ 18 (Ark.) Railroad corporations have powers not enjoyed by strictly private corporations and are required to perform public duties which such private corporations do not owe.—Freeo Valley R. Co. v. Hodges, 151 S. W. 281.

§ 32 (Ark.) Kirby's Dig. § 957, authorizing the voluntary dissolution of corporations, held not to apply to railroad corporations in view of section 845.—Freeo Valley R. Co. v. Hodges, 151 S. W. 281.

V. RIGHT OF WAY AND OTHER INTERESTS IN LAND.

§ 82 (Tex.Civ.App.) The forfeiture of its charter by a railroad for failure to construct its road in time did not cause the right of way to revert to the original owner, but remained subject to extension of charter or grant of new charter, under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4473.—Scott v. Missouri, O. & G. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 578.

In the absence of proof of the adverse use of a right of way by abutting owners, the easement of the road will not be lost.—Id.

A railroad which graded its right of way, paid taxes, and never ceased trying to use it for railroad purposes, and finally succeeded in so doing cannot be held to have abandoned it, though when first graded the company put gates in each fence, and the owners remained in possession.—Id.

§ 82 (Tex.Civ.App.) In trespass to try title to a strip granted to plaintiff as a railroad right of way, evidence as to the necessity of using the land for switches was admissible on the issue of abandonment.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Southern Kansas Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 850.

VI. CONSTRUCTION, MAINTENANCE, AND EQUIPMENT.

§ 103 (Tex.Civ.App.) The word "field" in Rev. Civ. St. 1911, arts. 6595-6598, regulating cattle guards, defined.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Lee, 151 S. W. 331.

A railroad company held to maintain a track through a field within Rev. Civ. St. 1911, arts. 6595-6598, so that it must maintain cattle guards at points of entry sufficient to turn hogs.—Id.

VII. SALES, LEASES, TRAFFIC CONTRACTS, AND CONSOLIDATION.

§ 121 (Tex.Civ.App.) Railroad lines held not competing or parallel lines, within the prohibition of leases by such lines by Rev. St. 1895, art. 4529.—Scott v. Missouri, O. & G. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 578.

X. OPERATION.

(B) Statutory, Municipal, and Official Regulations.

§ 233 (Ark.) A motor car for passengers operated by a railroad company is a "train" within Acts 1911, p. 275, requiring persons running trains to keep a constant lookout for persons and property on the track.—Central Ry. Co. of Arkansas v. Lindley, 151 S. W. 246.

§ 244 (Tex.) Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 6564, requiring a whistle to be blown and a bell rung at least 80 rods from crossings, requires the signals to be given at such a point beyond the 80 rods as will give notice of the train's approach.—Edwards v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas, 151 S. W. 289.

(D) Injuries to Licensees or Trespassers in General.

§ 281 (Mo.) The act of a flagman required to prevent boys from getting on cars at his crossing in forcibly seizing a boy from a car ladder and causing him to fall under the train is within the scope of his employment, and the railroad company is liable for the resulting injuries.—Winn v. Kansas City Belt Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 98.

§ 282 (Mo.) Whether a flagman required to prevent boys from getting on trains at his crossing was guilty of negligence in forcibly jerking a boy from a car ladder held for the jury.—Winn v. Kansas City Belt Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 98.

(F) Accidents at Crossings.

§ 312 (Ky.) A railroad must take notice of the location, use, and character of public crossings, and exercise that degree of care as may be necessary to perform its duty to give reasonably sufficient notice and warning of the movement of trains and cars to those using the crossing.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Allnutt, 151 S. W. 14.

§ 326 (Ky.) A traveler failing to exercise proper care for his own safety in crossing a defective railroad crossing with knowledge of the defects held not entitled to recover for the injuries sustained.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Meyers, 151 S. W. 19.

§ 327 (Mo.App.) The duty to look and listen for an approaching train before attempting to cross a highway crossing, is absolute.—Farris v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 151 S. W. 979.

The duty to look and listen at a crossing is particularly applicable to pedestrians, whose danger zone is smaller.—Id.

Though a pedestrian knows that a train is due to stop at a nearby station and sees the train approaching, he cannot assume that it is the local train which will stop, so as to excuse him from ascertaining whether it is the expected train.—Id.

§ 328 (Mo.App.) That the view was obstructed in approaching a crossing made it more obligatory to look for approaching trains.—Farris v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 151 S. W. 979.

§ 334 (Mo.App.) A traveler, who without his own fault is placed in imminent peril at a crossing, is not guilty of contributory negligence, thought he did not select the wisest course to extricate himself.—Farris v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 151 S. W. 979.

§ 335 (Mo.App.) Plaintiff's showing that he went on the track without seeing the train, when he could have done so by looking, destroys his prima facie case, made by proof of failure to give signals.—Farris v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 151 S. W. 979.

§ 338 (Ky.) A railroad which has not given a child such warning or notice of the movement of a train as would be reasonably sufficient to prevent a child of his years from putting himself in a place of peril cannot escape liability on the ground of contributory negligence.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Allnutt, 151 S. W. 14.

§ 347 (Ky.) To show the measure of duty a railroad owes the public at a crossing, evidence may be introduced to show the character of the crossing, the conditions existing, and the use of it by the public, not only at the time of an accident under investigation, but for a reasonable time before.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Allnutt, 151 S. W. 14.

§ 347 (Ky.) In an action for injuries to a traveler on a defective railroad crossing, testimony of other accidents at the crossing held admissible.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Meyers, 151 S. W. 19.

§ 348 (Ky.) In an action for injuries to a child at a crossing, evidence held to warrant a verdict for the plaintiff.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Allnutt, 151 S. W. 14.

§ 349 (Ky.) The pushing of cars over a crossing at a time when there were school children at the crossing, without ringing a bell or blowing a whistle, or without any person on the cars to control or give notice or warning, the watchman on duty giving no warning, was "gross negligence" authorizing punitive damages.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Allnutt, 151 S. W. 14.

§ 350 (Ky.) In an action for injuries to a child at a crossing, evidence held sufficient to take the question of the child's contributory negligence to the jury.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Allnutt, 151 S. W. 14.

Where a railroad crossing was an exceptionally dangerous one, and school children had to cross it in numbers, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that having a watchman alone, or ringing the bell or whistle alone, or having a man stationed on the moving cars alone, would be an adequate performance of its duty to afford reasonable protection to the public.—Id.

§ 350 (Ky.) Whether a traveler injured on a defective railroad crossing was guilty of contributory negligence held for the jury.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Meyers, 151 S. W. 19.

§ 350 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injuries to a child evidence held sufficient to go to the jury on the question of the defendant's liability.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Winger, 151 S. W. 586.

(G) Injuries to Persons on or near Tracks.

§ 356 (Tex.Civ.App.) Public use of railroad yards as a passageway held to require employes to use ordinary care to prevent injury.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Winger, 151 S. W. 586.

§ 369 (Tex.Civ.App.) A conductor in charge of a train, who saw persons crossing the yard in which it was located, held chargeable with the duty of keeping a lookout in their direction before giving a signal for the movement of such cars.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Winger, 151 S. W. 586.

§ 370 (Mo.App.) An engineer is required to keep a sharp lookout for pedestrians on the track only at places where he has reason to expect they may be.—Shelton v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 493.

§ 376 (Tex.Civ.App.) Railroad employes in charge of a train standing in a railroad yard, and cars moving therein, were chargeable with the duty of using ordinary care to avoid injuring licensees, of whose presence they were aware.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Winger, 151 S. W. 586.

§ 377 (Ark.) Employes in charge of a train held entitled to presume that a person seen on the track will get out of the way, but required to give extra alarms when he does not do so, and to stop the train if he does not heed the alarm.—St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Newman, 151 S. W. 255.

§ 390 (Mo.App.) The humanitarian rule applies where the servants of a railroad company in charge of its engine could have discovered a person on the track, and averted injury to him.—Shelton v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 493.

§ 398 (Ark.) In an action for the death of a person killed while riding a speeder on a railway track, evidence held to sustain a finding that the train could have stopped in time to have prevented the injury after the discovery of the deceased on the track.—St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Newman, 151 S. W. 255.

(H) Injuries to Animals on or near Tracks.

§ 419 (Tex.) A railroad company may move its trains at farm crossings with the usual and necessary noise, without keeping a lookout for frightened teams.—Edwards v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas, 151 S. W. 289.

§ 441 (Ark.) Under Acts 1911, p. 275, requiring a lookout on railway trains and casting the burden of showing that one was kept on the company, evidence of plaintiff in an action for injuries to stock tending to show that the injury was caused by a failure to keep a lookout cast on the defendant the burden of showing such vigilance.—Central Ry. Co. of Arkansas v. Lindley, 151 S. W. 246.

§ 442 (Ark.) In an action for injury to stock on a railway trestle, brought under Acts 1911, p. 276, evidence of loud talking in the car alleged to have caused the injury near the scene thereof held admissible, where only the motor-man and another were shown to have been in the car.—Central Ry. Co. of Arkansas v. Lindley, 151 S. W. 246.

§ 446 (Ark.) In an action for the death and injury of horses on a railway trestle, evidence held not to warrant directing a verdict for the defendant.—Central Ry. Co. of Arkansas v. Lindley, 151 S. W. 246.

(I) Fires.

§ 459 (Ark.) Under Act April 2, 1907, making railroads liable for damages by fire set out by their locomotives, contributory negligence by the owner, short of an act so grossly negligent as to amount to fraud, is no defense.—Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Harris, 151 S. W. 992.

§ 482 (Ark.) In an action for negligently firing plaintiff's property, evidence held sufficient to support the judgment.—Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Harris, 151 S. W. 992.

RAPE.

See Criminal Law, §§ 369, 406, 1169, 1170, 1173; Indictment and Information, § 189; Witnesses, §§ 277, 344.

I. OFFENSES AND RESPONSIBILITY THEREFOR.

§ 16 (Tex.Cr.App.) Under Pen. Code 1911, arts. 1008, 1063, defendant held guilty of assault with intent to rape, though he was not at any time sufficiently close to prosecutrix to have taken hold of her person.—Gage v. State, 151 S. W. 565.

II. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT.

(B) Evidence.

§ 38 (Tex.Cr.App.) On a trial for statutory rape, evidence as to the whereabouts of the family of prosecutrix, and that her mother was dead at the time of the offense, held admissible.—Kearse v. State, 151 S. W. 827.

On a trial of statutory rape, evidence that a third person charged with having raped prosecutrix had been acquitted was inadmissible.—Id.

§ 40 (Tex.Cr.App.) Under Pen. Code 1911, art. 1063, defining rape on a girl under 15 years of age with her consent, evidence that prosecutrix under 15 years of age was a lewd woman at the time of the alleged offense was inadmissible.—Kearse v. State, 151 S. W. 827.

§ 49 (Tex.Cr.App.) The testimony of prosecutrix that she was prevented by force by defendant's partner in the crime from making complaint until the night of the following day was properly admitted.—Ortiz v. State, 151 S. W. 1059.

§ 52 (Ky.) Evidence held to justify a conviction of rape on a female 14 years of age.—Gamble v. Commonwealth, 151 S. W. 924.

§ 52 (Mo.) Where accused was charged with statutory rape and defilement of a female child and convicted of the latter offense, sufficiency of the evidence held to be tested by rules applicable to cases of rape.—State v. Donnington, 151 S. W. 975.

Evidence held insufficient to support a conviction for defiling a female child.—Id.

§ 54 (Mo.) A conviction for rape may be had on the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix, but if her testimony is contradictory, or not convincing, or leaves the mind clouded with doubts, it must be corroborated.—State v. Donnington, 151 S. W. 975.

§ 101 (Ky.) A receiver having used the fund or commingled it with his own funds is chargeable with interest.—Higgins v. Shields, 151 S. W. 391.

§ 105 (Ky.) A receiver in renting and collecting rents must exercise such care as may reasonably be expected of an ordinarily prudent person under the circumstances, and, failing by negligence to collect rents, is liable therefor.—Higgins v. Shields, 151 S. W. 391.

VII. ACCOUNTING AND COMPENSATION.

REFERENCE.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 924, 1017, 1022; Arbitration and Award; Exceptions, Bill of § 38.

I. NATURE, GROUNDS, AND ORDER OF REFERENCE.

§ 8 (Mo.) Under Rev. St. 1909, § 1906, a compulsory reference is proper in a suit on contracts involving lengthy accounts, credits, and counterclaims.—State ex rel. Federal Lead Co. v. Reynolds, 151 S. W. 85.

§ 34 (Mo.) Objections to a reference should be made when the referee is appointed, and to the court itself.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

II. REFEREES AND PROCEEDINGS.

§ 41 (Mo.) A referee has no power to set aside his own appointment, on the ground that the cause is not referable.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

III. REPORT AND FINDINGS.

§ 99 (Mo.) In case of a compulsory reference, the trial court may act upon the referee's report and find therefrom different conclusions from those reported by the referee.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

In the case of compulsory reference, the referee's power is limited to recommending judgment, and the reference can only aid the trial judge, upon whom rests the responsibility as to the judgment.—Id.

§ 102 (Mo.) Rev. St. 1909, § 2013, giving a referee's report, when confirmed, the same effect as a special verdict, does not apply where the court does not confirm the report, but sustains exceptions thereto and makes independent findings.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

§ 103 (Mo.) In case of reference in equity or under the statute, the trial court may not only set aside the findings, but may supplant them with findings of its own, and enter judgment accordingly.—State ex rel. Federal Lead Co. v. Reynolds, 151 S. W. 85.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF CONTRACT.

§ 23 (Ark.) Where an offer to buy goods is made and the time of acceptance is not limited, the offer may be accepted within a reasonable time.—C. C. Emerson & Co. v. Stevens Grocer Co., 151 S. W. 1003.

III. MODIFICATION OR RESCISSION OF CONTRACT.

(C) Rescission by Buyer.

§ 126 (Mo.App.) A purchaser of shoes, who retained them for more than two weeks after the last consignment, selling them in stock all of the time, delayed an unreasonable time, and cannot then rescind.—Emery v. G. H. Boehmer Shoe Co., 151 S. W. 174.

It is proper for the court, when the unconverted facts show that an unreasonable length of time elapsed before the rescission, to declare the right lost as a matter of law.—Id.

IV. PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT.

(C) Delivery and Acceptance of Goods.

§ 181 (Ark.) The fact that the seller retained the buyer's check for an unreasonable time without notifying him that it was held pending negotiations as to the terms of the contract was admissible on the issue of the seller's acceptance.—C. C. Emerson & Co. v. Stevens Grocer Co., 151 S. W. 1003.

§ 182 (Ark.) Whether a seller accepted a check accompanying the buyer's order, with the understanding that it was sent on condition that its retention was an acceptance of the order, was for the jury.—C. C. Emerson & Co. v. Stevens Grocer Co., 151 S. W. 1003.

VII. REMEDIES OF SELLER.

(E) Actions for Price or Value.

§ 355 (Mo.App.) Under a general denial defendant, in an action for the price of goods, cannot establish a partial failure of consideration by showing that they were not in accordance with the sample.—Emery v. G. H. Boehmer Shoe Co., 151 S. W. 174.

VIII. REMEDIES OF BUYER.

(C) Actions for Breach of Contract.

§ 411 (Mo.App.) The petition showing agreement that plaintiff should erect a mill on defendant's land for manufacture of hubs, and that defendant should furnish plaintiff timber to manufacture into hubs, that plaintiff erected the mill, and defendant failed to furnish the timber, states a cause of action.—Martin v. Bunker-Culler Lumber Co., 151 S. W. 984.

§ 418 (Mo.App.) The damages for breach of defendant's contract to sell plaintiff timber for wagon hubs are not limited to the difference between the contract price and the market value, but include loss of profits; it being understood plaintiff was buying the timber to manufacture into hubs to sell, and plaintiff being unable elsewhere to obtain such timber.—Martin v. Bunker-Culler Lumber Co., 151 S. W. 984.

The petition showing agreement that plaintiff should erect a mill on defendant's land for manufacture of hubs, and that defendant should furnish plaintiff timber to manufacture into hubs, that plaintiff erected the mill, and defendant failed to furnish the timber, authorizes recovery of nominal damages.—Id.

§ 421 (Ark.) Instructions in action for breach of a contract to sell and deliver a car load of potatoes held to fairly submit the contentions of the parties as to the effect of the seller's acceptance and retention of the buyer's check.—C. C. Emerson & Co. v. Stevens Grocer Co., 151 S. W. 1003.

IX. CONDITIONAL SALES.

§ 454 (Mo.App.) Contract between consignor and consignee held to show a bailment, and not a conditional sale, within Rev. St. 1909, § 2880, making conditional sales fraudulent as to creditors unless acknowledged or recorded.—Packard Piano Co. v. Williams, 151 S. W. 211.

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS.

See Assignments, § 50; Public Lands, § 173.

II. PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

(D) District Property, Contracts, and Liabilities.

§ 68 (Ky.) A school board may erect a school on a site held under a deed providing that, on the abandonment of such site for common school purposes, the site should revert to the grantor. under Ky. St. § 4426a. Section 4437, requiring a fee title, being an earlier statute, and in conflict, does not apply.—Ritter v. Board of Education of Edmonson County, 151 S. W. 5.

In an action to restrain the erecting of a schoolhouse, evidence held to warrant a finding that the board did not abuse its discretion in choosing the old site.—Id.

§ 69 (Ky.) The intention of a school board to change the site of a school and the letting of a contract to build on the new site on which work was begun, but discontinued by order of the board, who decided to build on the old site, was not an abandonment of the old site; school at the time being taught in it.—Ritter v. Board of Education of Edmonson County, 151 S. W. 5.

§ 86 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Const. art. 16, § 37, and the statutes enacted in pursuance of it, a materialman's notice to school trustees of his claim for material for a school building does not fix a lien on funds in the hands of the trustees.—A. A. Fielder Lumber Co. v. Smith, 151 S. W. 605.

(E) District Debt, Securities, and Taxation.

§ 111 (Mo.App.) In an action to enjoin the removal of a school building, plaintiffs must allege and prove the existence of their property rights and the facts constituting the irreparable injury thereto.—Williams v. School Dist. No. 5, 151 S. W. 506.

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 2634, providing that threatened irreparable injury to property may be enjoined, taxing residents of a school district may restrain the district officers from exceeding their powers in any way that will injuriously affect plaintiffs, such as by an unauthorized removal of a school building.—Id.

Injunction will not lie to restrain improper or unlawful acts of a school district or its officers, at the suit of a resident merely, but it must be averred that plaintiff is also a taxpayer.—Id.

In the absence of proof that plaintiff will sustain irreparable injury, or special or pecuniary damages, from the removal of a school building, such act will not be enjoined.—Id.

Allegation, in a petition to enjoin the removal of a school building, that the plaintiffs were resident taxpayers, and that the removal was unauthorized, shows a special interest in plaintiffs entitling them to an injunction, and such allegation is put in issue by a general denial.—Id.

II. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY.

§ 46 (Tex.Cr.App.) The corroboration of prosecutrix is sufficient if it tends to connect accused with the commission of the offense, and to satisfy a jury of the truth of the charge, in connection with the testimony of the prosecutrix.—Curry v. State, 151 S. W. 319.

§ 46 (Tex.Cr.App.) In a prosecution for seduction, where prosecutrix alone testified that certain letters offered in evidence at the trial had been written to her by defendant, such letters could not furnish corroborative evidence, since she could not corroborate herself.—Bishop v. State, 151 S. W. 821.

§ 20 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action on certain claims assigned by F., defendant company held not entitled to set off an overpayment made to a construction company for work performed by F., in the absence of an agreement by F. that it might be set off against the defendant's indebtedness to him for other work.—Gulf, T. & W. Ry. Co. v. Stark, 151 S. W. 641.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

See Venue, § 5.

I. NATURE AND GROUNDS OF REMEDY IN GENERAL.

§ 6 (Tex.) The right to specific performance must be mutual.—Ansley Realty Co. v. Pope, 151 S. W. 525.

II. CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE.

§ 32 (Tex.) An executory contract to sell land as an agent is not subject to specific performance.—Ansley Realty Co. v. Pope, 151 S. W. 525.

IV. PROCEEDINGS AND RELIEF.

§ 127 (Tex.Civ.App.) A party may, in the same suit on a contract, pray for performance and, in the alternative, for rescission without being put to the election of either remedy.—Seiber v. Newman, 151 S. W. 585.

III. PROPERTY, CONTRACTS, AND LIABILITIES.

§ 88 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Act Jan. 26, 1905 (Acts 29th Leg. c. 7), giving the Daughters of the Republic of Texas, a private corporation, the "care and custody" of the "Alamo property," owned by the state, held, that the corporation took exclusive control and possession within the conditions prescribed by the act.—Conley v. Daughters of the Republic of Texas, 151 S. W. 877.

Act Jan. 26, 1905 (Acts 29th Leg. c. 7), giving to the Daughters of the Republic of Texas exclusive care and custody of the "Alamo property," owned by the state, charged with its repair and maintenance and with plans for remodeling it subject to the Governor's approval, held not repealed by an item in the appropriation act of 1911 (Acts 32d Leg. c. 3) appropriating $5,000 for the improvement of the property.—Id.

The superintendency of public buildings is a legislative office which may have its powers increased or restricted or be abolished by the Legislature, and Act Jan. 26, 1905 (Acts 29th Leg. c. 7), which gave the Daughters of the Republic of Texas, a private corporation, the exclusive care and custody of the so-called "Alamo property," charged with its care and maintenance, was constitutional.—Id.

It was not a condition precedent to an action to enjoin trespass to real property, owned by the state and given by it into the exclusive possession of a private corporation charged with its maintenance, that the corporation should allege or prove that it was executing the charge reposed in it.—Id.

In an action by a private corporation vested by the Legislature with exclusive possession and control of state property to enjoin a trespass, defendants cannot object that the corporation has not acted in good faith with the state.—Id.

VI. ACTIONS.

§ 191 (Tex.Civ.App.) State officers trespassing upon property given by legislative enactment to the exclusive custody and possession of a private corporation held liable as any other trespasser would be; a suit against them not being a suit against the state.—Conley v. Daughters of the Republic of Texas, 151 S. W. 877.

For statutes relating to particular subjects, see the various specific topics.

I. ENACTMENT, REQUISITES, AND VALIDITY IN GENERAL.

§ 40 (Ark.) Sp. & Priv. Acts 1911, p. 472, enacted by "the General Assembly of the state of Arkansas," instead of by "the people of the state of Arkansas," as required by the initiative and referendum amendment to the Constitution, is not thereby rendered unconstitutional.—Adcock v. Coker, 151 S. W. 253.

§ 40 (Ark.) The provision relating to the style of bills contained in the initiative and referendum amendment to the Constitution, amending Const. art. 5, § 1, held to only relate to bills initiated by the people and not to repeal Const. art. 5, § 19 (Kirby's Dig. § 18), making the style of all laws, "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Arkansas," so that bills not initiated by the people are still properly so styled.—Ferrill v. Keel, 151 S. W. 269.

§ 47 (Ark.) Act approved March 9, 1911 (Sp. & Priv. Laws 1911, p. 184), creating the Village Creek and White River levee district, held invalid for uncertainty in the description of the territory proposed to be embraced within the district.—Ferrill v. Keel, 151 S. W. 269.

II. GENERAL AND SPECIAL OR LOCAL LAWS.

§ 104 (Ky.) A special act in favor of an attorney, validating a contract between him and the state for rendition of services, is not invalid under Const. § 59, subsec. 13, providing that the Legislature shall pass no local or special act to legalize, except as against the commonwealth, the unlawful or unauthorized act of any officer of the same.—Carroll v. Bosworth, 151 S. W. 916.

While Const. § 58, prohibits an act to audit or allow private claims against the commonwealth, a special act validating a contract made by plaintiff with the state officers, and giving him permission to sue the State Auditor, is not prohibited, because showing on its face that the claim must be audited by the Auditor himself.—Id.

III. SUBJECTS AND TITLES OF ACTS.

§ 107 (Ky.) An act entitled "An act permitting C. C. to sue the state for legal services rendered," while also validating a contract between him and the Attorney General for the rendition of such services, is not invalid under Const. § 51, providing that no law shall relate to more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title.—Carroll v. Bosworth, 151 S. W. 916.

§ 114 (Mo.) Local option law (Laws 1887, p. 179), providing for local option elections, held valid, under Const. art. 4, § 28, requiring a single subject and its expression in the title.—State ex rel. Million v. Graham, 151 S. W. 729.

V. REPEAL, SUSPENSION, EXPIRATION, AND REVIVAL.

§ 150 [New, vol. 2 Key-No. Series] (Tex. Civ.App.) Const. art. 3, § 35, which provides that "no bill except general appropriation bills, which may embrace the various subjects and accounts for and on which moneys are appropriated, shall contain more than one subject which shall be expressed in its title," does not authorize the passage of new laws or the repeal of old ones by a general appropriation bill.—Conley v. Daughters of the Republic of Texas, 151 S. W. 877.

§ 154 (Tex.Civ.App.) An item in a general appropriation act could not amend a previous legislative act, since Const. art. 3, § 36, provides that no law shall be amended by reference to its title, but only by re-enactment and publication at length.—Conley v. Daughters of the Republic of Texas, 151 S. W. 877.

§ 159 (Tex.Civ.App.) Repeals by implication are not favored, and a statute will not repeal an existing one unless there is irreconcilable repugnancy, or unless there is an evident design to supersede all prior legislation in connection with the subject-matter and to enact a complete law in regard to it.—Conley v. Daughters of the Republic of Texas, 151 S. W. 877.

VI. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.(A) General Rules of Construction.

§ 174 (Mo.App.) A construction should not be entertained which would attribute to the Legislature an intention to apply the statute to an impossible situation.—Crowley v. Crowley, 151 S. W. 512.

§ 181 (Mo.) The primary rule in construing statutes is to ascertain and give effect to the intent.—State ex rel. Tuller v. Seehorn, 151 S. W. 724.

§ 184 (Mo.App.) Where two constructions of a statute are equally permissible, the one which will best carry out the object of the statute will be adopted.—Granite Bituminous Paving Co. v. Parkview Realty & Improvement Co., 151 S. W. 479.

§ 185 (Mo.) Whatever is implied is as much a part of a statute as though expressly inserted therein.—State ex rel. Coleman v. Blair, 151 S. W. 148.

§ 188 (Mo.App.) The plain terms of a statute cannot be frittered away by refined reasoning.—Crowley v. Crowley, 151 S. W. 512.

§ 227 (Mo.) The word "may" is sometimes construed as mandatory, but more frequently as directory.—State ex rel. Coleman v. Blair, 151 S. W. 148.

(D) Retroactive Operation.

§ 267 (Mo.) The amendment of 1909 (Laws 1909, p. 343) to Rev. St. 1899, § 650, giving actions to quiet title, cannot affect judgments recovered prior to such amendment.—Mayhew v. Toddsman, 151 S. W. 436.

VII. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.

§ 281 (Mo.App.) One relying on the law of a sister state for his cause of action must allege in his pleading what the law is.—Madden v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 489.

§ 281 (Mo.App.) A foreign law on which a cause of action is based must be pleaded and proven as a fact.—Shelton v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 493.

II. REGULATION AND OPERATION.

§ 81 (Mo.App.) Where the trestle of a street railway company was used by the public so constantly and continuously as to raise a presumption of knowledge on the part of the company, its servants are bound to use the same vigilance in looking for travelers at that place as in places where the public has a right to go on the tracks.—Shelton v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 493.

§ 98 (Mo.App.) A pedestrian who, at night, started to cross a trestle of a street railway without looking for approaching cars which passed at frequent intervals, was guilty of contributory negligence.—Shelton v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 493.

§ 103 (Mo.App.) The humanitarian rule applies where the employes of a street railroad in charge of a car could have discovered a person on the track, and averted injury to him.—Shelton v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 493.

§ 117 (Mo.App.) Although a motorman is not required to take precautions as to a person on the track, unless he is apparently oblivious of the approach of the car, if it appears that the traveler was not aware of the approach of a car, and the motorman could have avoided injuring him, the question of negligence is for the jury.—Shelton v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 493.

SUBROGATION.

§ 31 (Ky.) Where a creditor obtains judgment against the principal in F. county, and by a suit thereon in J. county recovers the amount of the first judgment from the surety, it is only necessary that the surety, as a condition precedent to action against the principal after satisfaction of the J. county judgment, should take from the creditor an assignment of the F. county judgment.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Souseley, 151 S. W. 353.

A surety who pays a judgment against his principal, without taking an assignment thereof, can only recover from the principal upon an implied promise.—Id.

Under Ky. St. § 4666, entitling a surety who has satisfied a judgment against his principal to an assignment thereof, such assignment need not be in writing nor made a matter of record.—Id.

After a surety's right of action against his principal is barred, he may not revive it by an order of court without notice to the principal; but, when his right of action is not barred, notice to the principal of his intention to obtain an assignment of the creditor's judgment is not necessary, since without such notice the principal may interpose his defenses.—Id.

Where a creditor obtaining judgment against a principal in F. county recovered thereon against the surety in J. county, the surety's payment of the J. county judgment and taking the creditor's assignment of the F. county judgment did not extinguish the liability of the principal under the F. county judgment.—Id.

The presumption is that a surety's payment of a judgment against the principal does not extinguish it so as to deprive the surety of the right to an assignment thereof.—Id.

V. LEVY AND ASSESSMENT.

(C) Mode of Assessment in General.

§ 363 (Ky.) An assessment of taxes by the county board of supervisors, without notice to the taxpayer, is void.—Durbin v. Ohio Valley Tie Co., 151 S. W. 12.

(G) Review, Correction, or Setting Aside of Assessment.

§ 453 (Ark.) Acts 1911, p. 230, amending Kirby's Dig. § 7003, furnishes an exclusive remedy in case of overvaluation by first applying to the board of equalization, and thereafter by appeal to the county court, and then to the circuit court.—Clay County v. Bank of Knobel, 151 S. W. 1013.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 6992, relating to the meeting of the board of equalization, and section 1361 and Acts 1895, p. 36, fixing the terms of the county court of Clay county, and Acts 1911, p. 161, providing for separate county courts for the western district of Clay county, the provisions for the meeting of the equalization board and the session of the county court for Clay county apply to the western district, and a taxpayer in the western district may pursue the remedy prescribed by Acts 1911, p. 230, in case of overvaluation.—Id.

VIII. COLLECTION AND ENFORCEMENT AGAINST PERSONS OR PERSONAL PROPERTY.

(B) Summary Remedies and Actions.

§ 595 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where defendant in an action for delinquent taxes made his vendors parties, and prayed for judgment over against them, if plaintiff recovered judgment for taxes, penalties, and costs, judgment against the vendors for the taxes, penalties, and interest was proper.—Gordon v. State, 151 S. W. 867.

(C) Remedies for Wrongful Enforcement.

§ 610 (Tex.Civ.App.) A property owner who has not paid taxes assessed against him, nor offered to pay them, cannot sue to enjoin an excessive levy.—McMahan v. Morgan, 151 S. W. 1123.

§ 611 (Ky.) Evidence, in an action to enjoin a collection of taxes, held to support a finding that the owner had no notice of the assessment by the supervisors.—Durbin v. Ohio Valley Tie Co., 151 S. W. 12.

§ 611 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action to restrain the collection of taxes, the burden is on plaintiff to show that the taxes are not due and owing by him.—McMahan v. Morgan, 151 S. W. 1123.

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES.

See Appeal and Error, § 1064; Licenses, § 7; Trial, § 258.

I. ESTABLISHMENT, CONSTRUCTION, AND MAINTENANCE.

§ 10 (Ky.) The imposition by the state board of valuation and assessment of a franchise tax upon a telephone company under Ky. St. § 4077, and the payment to the municipality of its part of the tax, does not give the company which had no franchise any right to use the streets.—Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Calhoun, 151 S. W. 659.

§ 15 (Ky.) Though a telephone company was negligent in insulating its wires, it is not liable for a fire caused by lightning carried into a building on the wire, unless but for its negligence the building would not have burned.—Wood v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co., 151 S. W. 29.

§ 20 (Ky.) In an action to recover damages for a fire alleged to have been caused by the negligent failure of a telephone company to insulate its wires which entered a building, evidence held insufficient to go to the jury.—Wood v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co., 151 S. W. 29.

In an action for damages for a fire alleged to have been caused by a telephone company's negligence in failing to insulate its wires which entered a building, the plaintiff has the burden of showing that the fire was caused by the company's negligence.—Id.

II. REGULATION AND OPERATION.

§ 30 (Ky.) Where a telephone company, having a franchise for a telephone exchange and to occupy the streets of the municipality, pays a property tax to the city, the municipality cannot levy a license tax or tax on the privilege of conducting its business.—Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Calhoun, 151 S. W. 659.

A resolution of the board of trustees of a town to let a telephone company put up telephone poles on certain streets, though acted upon by the company, is not a franchise within Const. § 164, but only a license which may be withdrawn at any time, and hence the municipality may impose on it a license or occupation tax.—Id.

As Const. §§ 163, 164, do not require a franchise for the maintenance of a telephone exchange, a license tax imposed on a telephone company, which had no franchise, based upon its maintenance of an exchange, cannot be defeated on the ground that it was occupying the streets without authority.—Id.

§ 37 (Tex.Civ.App.) If the recipient's residence beyond the free delivery limits was not known to the sender of a telegram when he filed it for transmission, the agent at the receiving office should notify the sender so as to give him an opportunity to pay the extra charges.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Vance, 151 S. W. 904.

A telephone company was not justified in abandoning all effort to deliver a telegram merely because the recipient was not found at the address stated, and his actual address was beyond the free delivery limits.—Id.

§ 38 (Tex.Civ.App.) That the sender of a telegram did not advise the company that the recipient lived beyond the free delivery limits, nor offered to pay the extra charges for service, was not a defense to an action for negligent delay in delivery.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Vance, 151 S. W. 904.

§ 66 (Tex.Civ.App.) Evidence in an action for negligent delay in delivering a telegram held to sustain a finding of negligence in transmitting and delivering the message.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Vance, 151 S. W. 904.

Evidence in an action for negligent delay in delivering a telegram announcing the probable death of plaintiff's daughter held to show that plaintiff's inability to reach his daughter's bedside before her death was proximately caused by the negligent transmission and delivery.—Id.

§ 70 (Tex.Civ.App.) The jury has a large discretion in estimating damages to be awarded for mental anguish as from the negligent delivery of a telegram.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Vance, 151 S. W. 904.

§ 71 (Tex.Civ.App.) A verdict for $947.50 for failure to promptly deliver a telegram announcing the death of plaintiff's daughter held not excessive, though the daughter was unconscious from the sending of the message until she died, and could not have recognized plaintiff.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Vance, 151 S. W. 904.

TENANCY IN COMMON.

See Partition, § 85.

II. MUTUAL RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES OF COTENANTS.

§ 15 (Ark.) The possession of a tenant is not adverse to his cotenant.—Keith v. Wheeler, 151 S. W. 284.

§ 28 (Mo.App.) One cotenant, who rents the land and collects the rent, will be liable therefor to the other cotenant.—Crowley v. Crowley, 151 S. W. 512.

III. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF COTENANTS AS TO THIRD PERSONS.

§ 43 (Tex.Civ.App.) In order for a person to ratify a land sale contract executed by his owner, it is essential that he answer or agree to same with knowledge of its material terms.—Parker v. Naylor, 151 S. W. 1096.

§ 10 (Tex.Civ.App.) The time within which to commence a suit is not extended because the last day of the period of limitation was Sunday.—Standard v. Thurmond, 151 S. W. 627.

II. ACTIONS.

(E) Trial, Judgment, and Review.

§ 87 (Ky.) In an action to recover damages for timber alleged to have been cut and removed from land owned by the plaintiff, the evidence held sufficient to go to the jury on the issue of the plaintiff's title to such lands.—Lovely v. Kentucky Union Co., 151 S. W. 392.

TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE.

See Appeal and Error, § 1029; Evidence, §§ 244, 318; Homestead, § 212; Railroads, § 82.

I. RIGHT OF ACTION AND DEFENSES.

§ 6 (Tex.) Failure of the acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman to state that she did not wish to retract, will not defeat a suit by her remote grantee against a mere intruder, where she lived near the land, and for over 50 years neither she nor her heirs ever questioned the deed.—Spivy v. March, 151 S. W. 1037.

II. PROCEEDINGS.

§ 32 (Tex.Civ.App.) Though plaintiff is not required to plead his title, yet if he does so, and it is insufficient, a general demurrer should be sustained.—National Lumber & Creosoting Co. v. Maris, 151 S. W. 325.

§ 39 (Tex.Civ.App.) Evidence relating to an interlocking agreement between plaintiff and defendant railroad companies as to a crossing, not touching the land in controversy, was not admissible in trespass to try title.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Southern Kansas Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 850.

§ 40 (Tex.Civ.App.) In trespass to try title to a part of a railroad right of way, a deed from plaintiff to defendant, transferring another part of its right of way, was not admissible.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Southern Kansas Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 850.

§ 40 (Tex.Civ.App.) Plaintiff held entitled to introduce prior deeds in its chain of title to prove title claimed.—Rider v. Radford, 151 S. W. 1181.

Where plaintiff claimed title through a deed from a mercantile company to a grocery company in consideration of a credit on debt due the grantee, it was immaterial that the credit was not in fact entered on the grantee's books until after defendant ceased to be a member of the mercantile company.—Id.

§ 41 (Tex.Civ.App.) Evidence held to warrant a finding that the numbers of certain surveys were changed in the land office by the commissioner and orders given to the surveyor to make the same changes in the field notes.—Lee v. Simmons, 151 S. W. 868.

III. COURSE AND CONDUCT OF TRIAL IN GENERAL.

§ 25 (Ky.) Under Civ. Code Prac. § 526, imposing the burden of proof on the party who would be defeated if no evidence were adduced, a defendant who, though denying malice in making an assault, pleads confession and avoidance has the burden of proof, and hence is entitled to open and close the argument, under section 317, subsec. 6.—Shirley v. Renick, 151 S. W. 357.

§ 25 (Ky.) Defendants' motion for leave to make the concluding argument held properly overruled, where they denied the allegations of the petition, because the burden was on plaintiff.—Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Rustin, 151 S. W. 366.

IV. RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE.

(A) Introduction, Offer, and Admission of Evidence in General.

§ 41 (Tex.Civ.App.) It is within the court's discretion to permit particular witnesses to remain in the courtroom where the rule is invoked.—Armstrong Packing Co. v. Clem, 151 S. W. 576.

In a husband's action for injuries to his wife in which the rule was invoked, the court did not abuse its discretion in permitting both the husband and wife to remain in the courtroom.—Id.

(B) Order of Proof, Rebuttal, and Re-opening Case.

§ 62 (Ky.) The trial court has a discretion in permitting introduction of evidence in rebuttal.—Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Rustin, 151 S. W. 366.

(C) Objections, Motions to Strike Out, and Exceptions.

§ 89 (Tex.Civ.App.) In a personal injury action, held proper to strike testimony concerning a wound previously received by plaintiff in a difficulty; it not being claimed that such wound was received in the accident sued on.—Knox v. Robbins, 151 S. W. 1134.

V. ARGUMENTS AND CONDUCT OF COUNSEL.

§ 124 (Ark.) It was highly improper for plaintiff's counsel to state in argument that a man who had committed the act shown to have been committed by defendant should be in the penitentiary.—Jenkins v. Quick, 151 S. W. 1021.

§ 125 (Ky.) It is highly improper for counsel to go without the record for the purpose of appealing to the passion and prejudice of the jurors.—Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Rowell, 151 S. W. 950.

§ 125 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injuries to a child, remarks by plaintiff's counsel that defendants "make me tired in talking about sympathy for this little girl (plaintiff). I wonder how about the bondholders and coupon clippers that own this road"—were improper.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Wininger, 151 S. W. 586.

§ 133 (Ark.) Statements of counsel that defendant, though having time to offer, had offered no settlement before suit, held not prejudicial, where they were immediately withdrawn, and the jury admonished not to consider them.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Brogan, 151 S. W. 699.

§ 133 (Ark.) Statement by plaintiff's counsel that defendant ought to go to the penitentiary for his conduct toward plaintiff held harmless, where the court told the jury not to consider it, and counsel apologized, and withdrew the statement.—Jenkins v. Quick, 151 S. W. 1021.

VI. TAKING CASE OR QUESTION FROM JURY.

(A) Questions of Law or of Fact in General.

§ 139 (Ark.) A directed verdict for defendant is proper only when, under the evidence and all reasonable inferences therefrom, the plaintiff is not in law entitled to recover.—Wortz v. Ft. Smith Biscuit Co., 151 S. W. 691.

§ 139 (Mo.App.) Evidence may be withheld from the jury as unworthy of belief only when it is opposed to the plain, undisputed physical facts.—Goode v. Central Coal & Coke Co., 151 S. W. 508.

§ 140 (Mo.App.) Whether the testimony of witnesses as to the appearance, movements, and attitude of a person walking on an elevated railroad above them as they stood in the street at twilight, and while they could see him merely in silhouette, was entitled to credit, was a question for the jury.—Shelton v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 493.

§ 143 (Ky.) That defendant's evidence strongly contradicts that of plaintiff does not justify a peremptory instruction for defendant; it being the province of the jury to weigh all the evidence.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Goodwin, 151 S. W. 376.

(B) Demurrer to Evidence.

§ 155 (Tenn.) A demurrer to evidence withdraws the case from the jury, and submits it to the court to apply the law to the admitted facts; and where the evidence is written, or, though parol, is certain, the other party must join, or waive such evidence.—King v. Cox, 151 S. W. 58.

§ 156 (Tenn.) That evidence is conflicting does not prevent a demurrer to the evidence, as all reasonable inferences are in plaintiff's favor.—King v. Cox, 151 S. W. 58.

On demurrer to the evidence, all the evidence on damages must be found in the demurrer, and the amount fixed by the court.—Id.

(D) Direction of Verdict.

§ 176 (Tenn.) Moving for peremptory instruction is not a waiver of objections to rulings on evidence.—King v. Cox, 151 S. W. 58.

§ 177 (Tenn.) Concurring motions by both parties for peremptory instructions do not constitute an agreement that the controversy shall be determined by the court without the jury.—King v. Cox, 151 S. W. 58.

§ 178 (Tenn.) Upon sustaining a motion for peremptory instructions, the case may be remanded to the jury for assessment of damages.—King v. Cox, 151 S. W. 58.

VII. INSTRUCTIONS TO JURY.

(A) Province of Court and Jury in General.

§ 191 (Mo.App.) In an action for injuries from an automobile, where the only issue was as to its ownership and control, and the evidence upon that issue was conflicting, an instruction assuming its ownership or control was error.—Warrington v. Bird, 151 S. W. 754.

§ 191 (Tex.Civ.App.) A charge not to consider the annoyance or harm caused by flies was properly refused as assuming that the slaughterhouse sought to be abated was not responsible for the flies.—Nations v. Harris, 151 S. W. 334.

§ 191 (Tex.Civ.App.) An instruction assuming a disputed fact is properly refused.—Freeman v. Kennerly, 151 S. W. 680.

§ 191 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injuries to a child while crossing railway tracks, an instruction assuming that the child attempted to cross the defendant's train held properly refused.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Winger, 151 S. W. 586.

§ 191 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Rev. St. 1911, art. 1971, an instruction in an action for conversion held erroneous as assuming that plaintiff had tendered the correct amount.—May v. Anthony, 151 S. W. 602.

In an action for conversion, an instruction held erroneous as assuming that defendant had sold the property at the time of the tender.—Id.

§ 192 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the president of an insurance company, also named as the trustee in a deed of trust given to the company, in negotiating the loan, insisted that the insurance should be carried in his company, the court did not err in treating it as undisputed that the company selected itself to carry the insurance.—Commonwealth Fire Ins. Co. v. Obenchain, 151 S. W. 611.

§ 194 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the court fully charged as to the issues of contributory negligence and assumption of risk, the giving at the request of the master of numerous special charges thereon held error as a comment on the weight of the evidence.—Rutlin v. Trinity Oil Co., 151 S. W. 584.

§ 194 (Tex.Civ.App.) An instruction on the weight of evidence is properly refused.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Good, 151 S. W. 617.

§ 194 (Tex.Civ.App.) A charge that if feeding and watering plaintiff's cattle was made necessary by defendant's negligence in delaying shipment, if it did delay the cattle, then plaintiff, if he paid for the feeding, would be entitled to recover the sum paid, is not on the weight of the evidence as telling the jury that the delay was caused by defendant's negligence.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Knox, 151 S. W. 902.

An instruction that if the jury find for a shipper of cattle his measure of damages is the difference between the market value at the time of arrival in the condition they were in and what would have been their value, had there been no delay or negligence, is not on the weight of the evidence.—Id.

§ 194 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the answer pleaded three issues of contributory negligence, all of which were substantiated by testimony, separate charges thereon were not on the weight of the evidence because giving undue prominence to the issue of contributory negligence.—Walker v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 1142.

(B) Necessity and Subject-Matter.

§ 203 (Mo.App.) The court, undertaking to give an instruction on the whole case, must cover not only plaintiff's, but also defendant's side.—Thornton v. Mersereau, 151 S. W. 212.

§ 203 (Mo.App.) An instruction which is merely a statement of the facts on which plaintiff based her claim of recovery is not erroneous.—Ledbetter v. City of Kirksville, 151 S. W. 228.

(C) Form, Requisites, and Sufficiency.

§ 233 (Mo.App.) Where plaintiff states the same cause of action in different counts, the court should charge that, if the jury finds for him on one of the counts, it should find no damages, or at the most mere nominal damages, on the other counts.—Blackmer & Post Pipe Co. v. Mobile & O. R. Co., 151 S. W. 164.

§ 233 (Tex.Civ.App.) An instruction properly submitting an issue need not include all the other material issues submitted by other instructions.—Anderson v. Crow, 151 S. W. 1080.

§ 234 (Tex.Civ.App.) Instructions that defendants have the burden of proving their respective pleas of contributory negligence by a preponderance of evidence held proper.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Good, 151 S. W. 617.

§ 236 (Mo.) Instruction held bad, in that it especially called attention to plaintiff's interest as an inducement to swear falsely, and declared all her testimony against interest to be true, and required all in her behalf to be scrutinized with care.—Benjamin v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 91.

§ 237 (Tex.Civ.App.) An instruction that, if plaintiff had "established" certain facts, the jury should answer an interrogatory in the affirmative held not to require too high a degree of proof.—Gamble v. Martin, 151 S. W. 327.

§ 244 (Ark.) It was not error to refuse an instruction stating and emphasizing the purpose for which plaintiff's affidavit in replevin could be considered.—Jenkins v. Quick, 151 S. W. 1021.

§ 244 (Mo.App.) An instruction, in an action for commissions for procuring a purchaser, held not an undue comment on a single fact.—Gillfillan v. Schmidt, 151 S. W. 161.

§ 244 (Mo.App.) An instruction, in an action against a landlord for injuries to the tenant's wife caused by a defect in the premises, held not objectionable as an undue comment on the evidence.—Haywood v. Kuhn, 151 S. W. 204.

§ 244 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injuries to a child while crossing railroad yards, the court's charge held not improper as giving undue emphasis to the question of exemption from contributory negligence on account of the tender years of the plaintiff.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Winger, 151 S. W. 586.

§ 244 (Tex.Civ.App.) Instruction, on partnership accounting, that certain facts not amounting to an estoppel might be considered on the question of whether land was partnership property, held erroneous as singling out a portion of the evidence.—Hengy v. Hengy, 151 S. W. 1127.

(D) Applicability to Pleadings and Evidence.

§ 251 (Ky.) Where a mining company sued for injuries to an employé pleaded contributory negligence in general terms only, an instruction on contributory negligence based on the loading of a car in a particular manner was properly refused.—Jellico Coal Mining Co. v. Lee, 151 S. W. 28.

An instruction on acts of contributory negligence contemporaneous with the injury, though not pleaded, is proper, but it is otherwise as to acts occurring before or after the injury.—Id.

§ 251 (Tex.Civ.App.) An issue raised by the evidence but not by the pleadings should not be submitted.—Miller v. Layne & Bowler Co., 151 S. W. 341.

§ 251 (Tex.Civ.App.) The refusal of an instruction requested by defendant, relative to an issue not submitted to the jury as a ground of recovery, was not error.—St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Cartwright, 151 S. W. 630.

§ 251 (Tex.Civ.App.) A requested instruction which authorizes a recovery for negligence not counted on in the petition is properly refused.—Walker v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 1142.

§ 252 (Ark.) In an action for the death of a person killed on a railroad track, that the evidence did not show drunkenness of such person held not to render improper the giving of an instruction on the duty of the employes on discovering his insensibility to danger from drunkenness or other cause.—St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Newman, 151 S. W. 255.

§ 252 (Ky.) In absence of evidence of a passenger's contributory negligence while boarding a car, it was error to instruct on such negligence.—Samuels v. Louisville Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 37.

§ 252 (Ky.) An instruction on contributory negligence of a property owner suing for injuries from an inadequate sewer to the effect that, if there was a drain in plaintiff's basement below the level of the sewer, he could not recover, was properly refused, where there was no evidence that the drain was connected with the sewer.—City of Louisville v. Kramer's Adm'x, 151 S. W. 379.

§ 252 (Mo.) An instruction in a boundary case as to the effect of a fence built by previous owners "for their convenience" held not objectionable; there being no evidence of the purpose of such owners in erecting the fence.—Hilgedick v. Gruebbel, 151 S. W. 731.

§ 252 (Mo.App.) An instruction that defendants could not recover on their counterclaim, if they knew of the damaged condition of the property at the time they purchased it from plaintiffs, held not erroneous, on the ground that there was no evidence that they knew thereof.—Mullinax v. Lowry, 151 S. W. 745.

§ 252 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injuries to a child while crossing railroad tracks, an instruction as to the duty of railroad employes held justified by the evidence.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Wininger, 151 S. W. 586.

In an action for injuries to a child received in a railroad yard, instructions on ordinary care and contributory negligence, as affected by the age and intelligence of the person injured held warranted by the evidence.—Id.

§ 252 (Tex.Civ.App.) There must be some proof that rules were promulgated for the safety of an inexperienced minor employé, or a specific order given as to the manner in which his work should be carried on, before it is error to refuse to submit an instruction based on contributory negligence for violating such known rules or specific order.—Armour & Co. v. Morgan, 151 S. W. 861.

§ 252 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where a peace officer, while acting in his capacity as employé for defendant, who was running a show, arrested plaintiff, in a dispute over a seat, an instruction as to the official duties of a peace officer was properly refused as abstract.—Rucker v. Barker, 151 S. W. 871.

§ 252 (Tex.Civ.App.) A requested instruction ignoring issues raised by the evidence is properly refused.—Anderson v. Crow, 151 S. W. 1080.

§ 253 (Ark.) An instruction that, if the jury found certain facts, plaintiff should not be regarded as having assumed any danger from the defective appliance, and the jury should find for him if he was injured as he claims is erroneous, as disregarding claim of contributory negligence.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Steed, 151 S. W. 257.

§ 253 (Mo.App.) In an action for services, defended on the ground that plaintiff was a partner, an instruction undertaking to cover the whole case, without submitting the issue of partnership, was erroneous.—Thornton v. Merseureau, 151 S. W. 212.

§ 253 (Mo.App.) An instruction that the only question was whether decedent coal miner was killed by a rock fall while working at his place of work was erroneous, as ignoring the issue of whether the dangerous character of the rock should have been discovered by the employer in the exercise of ordinary care.—Goode v. Central Coal & Coke Co., 151 S. W. 508.

§ 253 (Mo.App.) In an action on a note, defended on the ground of failure of consideration and fraud, an instruction submitting the issue of fraud, but leaving out of consideration the question of the materiality of the representations relied on, or whether injury resulted, held erroneous.—Birch Tree State Bank v. Dowler, 151 S. W. 784.

§ 253 (Tex.Civ.App.) An instruction in an action for injuries to a railroad employé which ignores Acts 31st Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 10, relating to comparative contributory negligence, held properly refused.—Freeman v. Kennerly, 151 S. W. 580.

(E) Requests or Prayers.

§ 256 (Mo.App.) In an action against a landlord for injuries to the tenant's wife caused by a defect in the premises, the landlord, if desiring a specific instruction on the question of the condition of the premises at the time of the accident and at the time of the letting should have asked it.—Haywood v. Kuhn, 151 S. W. 204.

§ 256 (Tex.Civ.App.) An instruction that a telegraph company is held to the exercise of reasonable care and diligence was not error, in the absence of request for a more specific charge, on the ground that the company need only exercise "ordinary care" under the circumstances.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Vance, 151 S. W. 904.

§ 256 (Tex.Civ.App.) A charge to find for defendant unless certain facts existed was affirmatively erroneous, since a special charge to find for plaintiff upon other facts would have been contradictory thereof.—Hengy v. Hengy, 151 S. W. 1127.

Where plaintiff claimed that partnership was dissolved, and a new partnership afterwards formed, an instruction that the old partnership was presumed to continue unless a dissolution was shown by the evidence held correct as far as it went, and failure to instruct as to plaintiff's theory was not reversible error in the absence of a request for special charges.—Id.

The failure of the trial court in its charge to apply all of the law applicable to the case should have been cured by offering special charges.—Id.

§ 260. An instruction covered by the charge as given is properly refused.

(Tex. Civ. App.) Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Good, 151 S. W. 617; St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Knox, Id. 902; Anderson v. Crow, Id. 1080.

§ 260 (Ky.) It is not error to refuse instructions substantially covered by the charge given.—City of Carlisle v. Campbell, 151 S. W. 673.

§ 260 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action for injuries to a brakeman, the refusal to give a charge on contributory negligence held not erroneous in view of the charge given.—Freeman v. Kennerly, 151 S. W. 580.

§ 260 (Tex.Civ.App.) A special charge requested was properly refused where the proposition presented was fully covered by the general charge of the court.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Wininger, 151 S. W. 586.

§ 260 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where the main charge in a servant's action for injuries required the jury to find both that the failure to provide safeguards was negligence and that such failure was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury, a special charge on the issue of proximate cause was not required.—Armour & Co. v. Morgan, 151 S. W. 861.

§ 263 (Tex.Civ.App.) It was not error for the court, after stating the case and giving some principles of law applicable thereto, to give such special charges prepared by the parties as were applicable.—Armstrong Packing Co. v. Clem, 151 S. W. 576.

(F) Objections and Exceptions.

§ 279 (Ark.) Where an instruction is confusing or misleading, the party aggrieved should specifically point out such objection, so that the court may correct it.—C. C. Emerson & Co. v. Stevens Grocer Co., 151 S. W. 1003.

(G) Construction and Operation.

§ 295 (Tex.Civ.App.) All parts of instructions must be considered together in determining their meaning.—Freeman v. Kennerly, 151 S. W. 580.

§ 296 (Ark.) Where, in other instructions, the jury had been told that their finding of negligence, or not, must be based on the evidence, an instruction defining negligence, and stating that if they believed a certain thing was done, and was negligence, and caused plaintiff's injury, he, unless guilty of contributory negligence, could recover, is not objectionable as leaving the jury to believe defendant negligent, regardless of the evidence.—Oak Leaf Mill Co. v. Littleton, 151 S. W. 282.

§ 296 (Ark.) Instruction to find for plaintiff, if his injury resulted from defendant's failure to exercise reasonable care in placing on a switch track the car with which his engine collided, held not erroneous, as assuming that defendant was negligent, when followed by other instructions clearly showing the court's intention to submit the question of defendant's negligence.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Brogan, 151 S. W. 699.

§ 296 (Mo.App.) In an action for commissions for procuring a purchaser of real estate, an instruction held not objectionable as leaving the jury to determine the contract of employment, in view of another instruction stating the terms of such contract.—Gillfillan v. Schmidt, 151 S. W. 161.

§ 296 (Mo.App.) An erroneous instruction, which directed a verdict on the hypothesis stated, was not cured by contrary instructions.—Goode v. Central Coal & Coke Co., 151 S. W. 508.

§ 296 (Tex.Civ.App.) The giving of a confusing and misleading charge is harmless; numerous special charges clearly instructing in the matter being given.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Good, 151 S. W. 617.

§ 296 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Courts of Civil Appeals Rules, 62a, providing that a judgment shall not be reversed for nonprejudicial error, an erroneous instruction defining a land partnership held not reversible error where, considered with another instruction, it could not have misled the jury.—Parker v. Naylor, 151 S. W. 1096.

IX. VERDICT.

(A) General Verdict.

§ 329 (Mo.App.) A verdict must be responsive to the issues.—Advance Thresher Co. v. Speak, 151 S. W. 235.

(B) Special Interrogatories and Findings.

§ 348 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, arts. 1328, 1333, the case should not be submitted to the jury so as to require a verdict in part general and in part special. Hence, the court having decided not to submit special issues, refusal of two special issues was proper.—Hengy v. Hengy, 151 S. W. 1127.

§ 349 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1333, as amended by Acts 26th Leg. c. 111, the submission of a case on special issues is in the trial court's discretion.—Hengy v. Hengy, 151 S. W. 1127.

X. TRIAL BY COURT.

(A) Hearing and Determination of Cause.

§ 386 (Mo.) In a case tried before the court without a jury, the rules of law governing the giving and refusing of instructions are not changed.—Cousins v. White, 151 S. W. 737.

I. CREATION, EXISTENCE, AND VALIDITY.

(A) Express Trusts.

§ 41 (Tex.Civ.App.) A party seeking to establish a trust in his favor in land the legal title to which is in another has the burden of proving the facts necessary to constitute a trust.—Hengy v. Hengy, 151 S. W. 1127.

§ 44 (Ky.) Evidence held to sustain a finding that land was purchased at an execution sale by defendant's intestate for his own benefit, and not in trust for others.—Hall v. Bartram's Adm'r, 151 S. W. 40.

(B) Resulting Trusts.

§ 72 (Ark.) A trust results in favor of one purchasing land with his own money and taking title in another's name, unless the nominal purchaser occupies a fiduciary relation such as wife or child.—Keith v. Wheeler, 151 S. W. 284.

§ 86 (Ark.) The burden of showing a purchase-money trust is upon the party claiming its existence.—Keith v. Wheeler, 151 S. W. 284.

§ 86 (Mo.) One seeking to establish a resulting trust in real estate on the ground that his money went into the purchase thereof, while the legal title was taken in the name of another, has the burden of proving the fact clearly and convincingly.—Easter v. Easter, 151 S. W. 413.

§ 89 (Ark.) Evidence held to show that land purchased by a father and which he caused to be conveyed to his wife and a stepdaughter amounted to a gift to the stepdaughter so that no trust resulted in favor of the father of which his son after his death could take advantage.—Keith v. Wheeler, 151 S. W. 284.

A purchase-money trust can only be established by clear, convincing, and satisfactory evidence.—Id.

§ 89 (Mo.) A purchase-money trust can only be established by clear, strong, and unequivocal parol evidence.—Waddle v. Frazier, 151 S. W. 87.

§ 89 (Mo.) Evidence held not to establish a resulting trust in real estate, on the theory that plaintiff's money went into the purchase of the property.—Easter v. Easter, 151 S. W. 413.

(C) Constructive Trusts.

§ 94 (Mo.) Issuance of a patent in correction of a prior patent, which erroneously described the land, held to vest in the patentee the legal title in trust for his grantee in a warranty deed, or their representatives.—Marshall v. Hill, 151 S. W. 131.

§ 102 (Tex.Civ.App.) Certain stockholders of a corporation, having taken title to certain real property in their own names pursuant to an option belonging to the corporation, held constructive trustees of the title for the corporation's benefit.—National Lumber & Creosoting Co. v. Maris, 151 S. W. 325.

IV. MANAGEMENT AND DISPOSAL OF TRUST PROPERTY.

§ 193½ (Ky.) A court held to properly permit sale of a trust estate, consisting of unproductive property, and the advantageous reinvestment of the proceeds in other property.—Owen v. Burks, 151 S. W. 369.

§ 240 (Mo.App.) A minority trustee is not personally liable on a contract which he did not personally make merely because a majority of the trustees authorized it.—Markel v. Peck, 151 S. W. 772.

The provision in a will creating a trust and giving trustees power to sell or lease that a majority of the trustees shall govern concerns only the matter of binding the estate, and does not render minority trustees personally liable on contracts made by the majority.—Id.

§ 265 (Mo.App.) The only judgment which may be rendered in an action at law against defendants as trustees under a testamentary trust is one based on their personal liability.—Markel v. Peck, 151 S. W. 772.

VI. ACCOUNTING AND COMPENSATION OF TRUSTEE.

§ 312 (Ark.) A trustee under an express trust for the care of an imbecile held entitled to recover from the estate of the imbecile moneys required to be returned to the purchasers of lands which did not pass to the trustee because of the invalidity of a will.—Hare v. Sisters of Mercy, 151 S. W. 515.

USURY.I. USURIOUS CONTRACTS AND TRANSACTIONS.*(A) Nature and Validity.

§ 57 (Ark.) The payment of a bonus by a borrower to his own agent for procuring a loan does not make the transaction usurious.—Smith v. Mack, 151 S. W. 431.

(B) Rights and Remedies of Parties.

§ 113 (Ark.) The burden is upon the party pleading usury to clearly show that the transaction was usurious.—Smith v. Mack, 151 S. W. 431.

§ 117 (Ark.) Evidence in a foreclosure action on secured notes held to sustain findings against the defense of usury.—Smith v. Mack, 151 S. W. 431.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF CONTRACT.

§ 3 (Tex.) A contract by A. to give B. exclusive sale of land for 90 days, and to execute deed either to B. or persons to whom he might sell, B. to take any land remaining after the expiration of such time, was a contract of sale and not of agency.—Ansley Realty Co. v. Pope, 151 S. W. 525.

§ 16 (Tex.Civ.App.) A parol stipulation that a written contract for the sale of land shall not become effective until the consent of the vendor's copartner or principal shall have been obtained is binding.—Parker v. Naylor, 151 S. W. 1096.

§ 36 (Mo.App.) A vendor's false representations that the soil was rich and did not need fertilizer, knowing that a good crop could not be produced otherwise, held representations of a material fact, as distinguished from an expression of opinion.—Williamson v. Harris, 151 S. W. 500.

§ 38 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where a vendor is induced by fraudulent representations to sign a contract under which the purchaser buys "subject to" and not "assuming" a certain debt, the contract is unenforceable though the vendor reads it, but without understanding its legal effect.—Parker v. Naylor, 151 S. W. 1096.

§ 45 (Mo.App.) In an action for the price of land defended on the ground of plaintiff's fraudulent representations, held on the evidence that whether the purchaser relied upon such representations was for the jury.—Williamson v. Harris, 151 S. W. 500.

V. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES.(A) As to Each Other.

§ 198 (Ky.) Land conveyed after the order for an improvement and the letting of the contract, but before the work is done, is not incumbered by a lien for the cost.—Long v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 151 S. W. 6.

(C) Bona Fide Purchasers.

§ 227 (Mo.) A purchaser has actual notice when he knows of the existence of an adverse claim, or is conscious of having the means of knowledge, though he may not use them.—Marshall v. Hill, 151 S. W. 131.

§ 228 (Mo.) Where one has actual notice of an equitable claim affecting the legal title, he purchases at his own risk.—Marshall v. Hill, 151 S. W. 131.

Where the purchaser from the holder of the legal title has formal notice of an equitable title before payment of the price, he is not a purchaser in good faith, for value, without notice.—Id.

§ 231 (Mo.) Purchaser held not chargeable with notice of proceedings to procure a corrected patent, or of a chain of title adverse to the patent, from a recital in the recorded patent that it was in lieu of a prior one, "in which the description was erroneous, the record of which has been canceled."—Marshall v. Hill, 151 S. W. 131.

§ 231 (Mo.) The recording of an instrument which is not entitled to registration does not constitute constructive notice.—Heintz v. Moore, 151 S. W. 449.

§ 231 (Tex.Civ.App.) A recorded deed disconnected from the title is not notice.—Gamble v. Martin, 151 S. W. 327.

VI. REMEDIES OF VENDOR.

(A) Lien and Recovery of Land.

§ 277 (Tex.Civ.App.) Though Rev. St. 1895, art. 304, fixes an indorser's liability, without protest, under art. 315, by institution of suit before the first term of the district or county court, a suit to enforce a vendor's lien note and to foreclose the lien was properly brought in the district court at the first term, under Const. 1876, art. 5, § 8 (Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1098, subd. 4), giving it original jurisdiction of such suits.—Robinson v. Belt, 151 S. W. 598.

§ 279 (Tex.Civ.App.) A junior mortgagee holding under an unrecorded mortgage, and of whose lien the plaintiff was not advised, was not a necessary party to a suit to foreclose a prior vendor's lien, and his rights were cut off by such foreclosure.—Gamble v. Martin, 151 S. W. 327.

§ 289 (Tex.Civ.App.) Right of a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer to redeem from foreclosure of a vendor's lien held not affected by the judgment where he was not a party.—Gamble v. Martin, 151 S. W. 327.

Where a junior incumbrancer holding under an unrecorded mortgage was not made a party to a suit to foreclose a prior vendor's lien; the burden was on him to show possession or notice to the holder of the vendor's lien in order to sustain his right to redeem.—Id.

(B) Actions for Purchase Money.

§ 308 (Tex.Civ.App.) Notes given as a part of the price of certain land held enforceable irrespective of whether plaintiff had knowledge of defendants' occupancy of the premises.—Rider v. Radford, 151 S. W. 1181.

VENUE.

See Witnesses, § 392.

I. NATURE OR SUBJECT OF ACTION.

§ 5 (Tex.Civ.App.) Tested by the averments of a petition, a suit for damages for breach of contract to convey lands, for specific performance, for damages, and for judgment and title and possession held a suit for specific performance, and not in the alternative for possession, and as such to require the court to sustain a defendant's plea of privilege to be tried in the county of his residence.—Garrison v. Stokes, 151 S. W. 808.

II. DOMICILE OR RESIDENCE OF PARTIES.

§ 32 (Tex.Civ.App.) Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1243, providing that a motion to quash is an entry of appearance, and article 1241, declaring that an appearance shall have the effect of service of citation, defendant's motion to quash does not bar a plea of privilege to be sued in another county.—F. T. Ramsey & Son v. Cook, 151 S. W. 346.

The filing of a cross-action against plaintiff and a trial on the merits waived defendant's privilege of being sued in another county.—Id.

III. CHANGE OF VENUE OR PLACE OF TRIAL.

§ 41 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where plaintiff joined as defendant a party who was clearly entitled to a change of venue to another county, and did not dismiss as to such party, the court, having no power under the statute to dismiss as against that party, properly transferred the suit as to all parties.—Garrison v. Stokes, 151 S. W. 808.

§ 77 (Mo.) Change of venue held properly denied where, after the application was made and before it was presented, the moving party filed several other motions.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S. W. 101.

WASTE.

§ 4 (Ky.) "Equitable waste" is such acts as at law would not be esteemed to be waste under the circumstances of the case, but which is so esteemed by a court of equity because of their manifest injury to the inheritance, although not inconsistent with the legal rights of the party committing them. It is a wanton and unconscientious abuse of the rights of the party in possession, ruinous to the interests of other parties; such acts as a prudent man would not do with his own property.—Landers v. Landers, 151 S. W. 386.

§ 5 (Ky.) The owner of a defeasible fee is not chargeable with waste, although equity will sometimes restrain him from committing equitable waste.—Landers v. Landers, 151 S. W. 386.

§ 63 (Ark.) An instruction in an action against a railroad company for causing the waters of a creek to overflow the land of plaintiff held not erroneous, but susceptible of the meaning that the company is liable only for the part of the injury to which its negligent acts contributed.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Williams, 151 S. W. 243.

knew that a police officer was within calling distance, but went 700 yards to his residence, returning with a pistol, and himself attempting to arrest the robber, was guilty of unlawfully carrying a pistol.—Wilson v. State, 151 S. W. 804.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

§ 8 (Tex.Civ.App.) Neither the statutes creating the office of official weigher nor the amendment of 1905 (Acts 1905, c. 84; Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 7834), requiring private weighers doing business at places where there are no public weighers to give bond, prevents an owner of produce from engaging other than official weighers, who were not factors or commission merchants, etc.—Paschal v. Inman, 151 S. W. 569.

§ 8 (Tex.Civ.App.) A petition by a public weigher to enjoin an unauthorized weigher held not open to general demurrer for failure to allege that the office of public weigher had been created by the commissioner's court of the county, and that necessary steps had been taken by the voters to the creation of such office.—Perry v. Carlisle, 151 S. W. 1155; Carlisle v. Perry, Id. 1158.

Under Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 7828, supplanting Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4308, and in view of Pen. Code 1911, art. 996, the petition of a public weigher seeking to enjoin an unauthorized weigher need not allege that the weighing was not done at the requests of the owner in order to entitle him to a preliminary injunction.—Id.

The petition of a public weigher who sought to enjoin an unauthorized weigher from weighing produce which alleged that the plaintiff was the public weigher for the town of S. is not deficient for failing to allege that S. was a city; the word "town" being a generic word which includes cities, boroughs, and villages.—Id.

Under Pen. Code 1911, art. 996, the public weigher of a municipality is entitled to restrain an unauthorized weigher who set up his establishment just outside the municipality so as to weigh property bought and offered for sale therefrom.—Id.

WILLS.

See Descent and Distribution; Estoppel, § 91; Execution, § 45; Executors and Administrators, § 138; Jury, § 142; Trusts, §§ 240, 265.

II. TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

§ 55 (Ky.) Evidence held to show that testator was not competent to make a will.—Orothwaite v. Orothwaite, 151 S. W. 945.

IV. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(A) Nature and Essentials of Testamentary Dispositions.

§ 88 (Ky.) Instruments held to be deeds and not wills.—Smith v. Scott's Ex'r, 151 S. W. 42.

§ 88 (Ky.) An instrument in the form of a deed, acknowledged as such, and containing a grant in the present tense, and not authenticated as a will, is not a testamentary instrument.—Taylor v. Purdy, 151 S. W. 45.

(C) Execution.

§ 114 (Ky.) A writing of a decedent which is not holographic, and is not attested by witnesses, could not be probated as a part of her will.—Baldwin's Ex'r v. Barber's Ex'rs, 151 S. W. 686.

(F) Mistake, Undue Influence, and Fraud.

§ 164 (Ky.) In a will contest for undue influence by testator's third wife, evidence that he owed the largest part of his fortune to his second wife, and that the will practically disinherited a daughter by her, was admissible.—Rhea v. Madison, 151 S. W. 667.

Evidence that testator's third wife had little or no property when she married testator was admissible.—Id.

§ 165 (Ky.) In a will contest for undue influence exerted by testator's wife, evidence of a conversation between testator and his friend held admissible.—Rhea v. Madison, 151 S. W. 667.

§ 166 (Ky.) Evidence held to sustain finding of undue influence.—Rhea v. Madison, 151 S. W. 667.

V. PROBATE, ESTABLISHMENT, AND ANNULMENT.

(L) Fees and Costs.

§ 402 (Ky.) A court on appeal in a will contest will not fix counsel fees; that being a matter for the lower court upon evidence taken.—Baldwin's Ex'r v. Barber's Ex'rs, 151 S. W. 686.

§ 405 (Ky.) A legatee whose portion of an estate was increased by a will contest, and who did not employ an attorney to look after his interest, held chargeable with a pro rata share of attorney's fees, under Ky. St. § 489, providing that in actions to settle an estate the court shall allow legatees reasonable compensation.—Baldwin's Ex'r v. Barber's Ex'rs, 151 S. W. 686.

(M) Operation and Effect.

§ 433 (Tex.Civ.App.) Where title to land is claimed by a devise, evidence of the will of the alleged decedent and the proceeding of the county court admitting it to probate is admissible.—McDoel v. Jordan, 151 S. W. 1178.

VI. CONSTRUCTION.

(A) General Rules.

§ 441 (Ky.) A testator's intention must be gathered, not only from the instrument itself, but from his relation to the parties in interest, the family arrangements, and circumstances surrounding him.—Levy's Ex'x v. Leeds, 151 S. W. 1.

(E) Nature of Estates and Interests Created.

§ 602 (Ky.) A will devising property in trust for life to testatrix's children, and on their death, without issue, before distribution to certain reversionaries, held, after a distribution, to convey a defeasible fee.—Owen v. Burks, 151 S. W. 369.

§ 616 (Ky.) Devise to wife for life with power to sell, with remainder in trust for daughter, her share to include a specified house and lot to be occupied by her during her life, held not to limit the wife's right to dispose of such house and lot.—Levy's Ex'x v. Leeds, 151 S. W. 1.

(H) Estates in Trust and Powers.

§ 673 (Ark.) A will devising one-half of testatrix's estate to specified Sisters of Mercy "for the support and maintenance" of testatrix's daughter during her life, and after the daughter's death "for the purpose of educating poor Catholic children," created an express trust, and not an absolute gift.—Hare v. Sisters of Mercy, 151 S. W. 515.

VII. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF DEVISEES AND LEGATEES.

(C) Advancements, Ademption, Satisfaction, and Lapse.

§ 775 (Ark.) As a will is ambulatory, the death of a legatee during the lifetime of the testator will cause a lapse in the legacy, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, and Kirby's Dig. § 8022, saves from lapse only bequests and devises to surviving children or descendants of the testator.—Galloway v. Darby, 151 S. W. 1014.

A general provision in a will that all the property devised and bequeathed, unless otherwise specifically stated, shall vest in the devisees, their heirs and assigns, in fee simple, must be construed as words of limitation fixing the estate of such devisees, and not as equivalent to children, and as showing an intention to prevent lapse by prescribing a line of succession.—Id.

(D) Election.

§ 782 (Ky.) A widow is not entitled to dower or a distributable share of her husband's estate, where she fails to renounce the provisions of his will in her favor within 12 months from its probate.—Landers v. Landers, 151 S. W. 388.

Widow held not required to elect between dower and devise where husband had no devisable interest, and hence a claim of ownership under devise did not preclude her from claiming dower.—Id.

(H) Void, Lapsed, and Forfeited Devises and Bequests, and Property and Interests Undisposed of.

§ 858 (Ark.) The distinction between personality and realty having been abolished, a general residuary clause will carry a lapsed devise of realty as well as a bequest of personality.—Galloway v. Darby, 151 S. W. 1014.

A general residuary clause, though reciting that it only disposed of property "not hereinbefore specifically devised," will carry a lapsed legacy where the introduction to the will stated that the instrument disposed of all of testator's property.—Id.

WITNESSES.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 204, 994, 1002, 1043; Continuance, § 26; Criminal Law, §§ 594-608; Evidence; Libel and Slander, § 38; New Trial, § 90; Obstructing Justice, § 4; Trial, § 41.

II. COMPETENCY.

(D) Confidential Relations and Privileged Communications.

§ 190 (Tex. Civ. App.) Conversations between husband and wife concerning her property rights and the admission of the husband of his wrongful transfer of her separate personality are not privileged communications within Rev. St. 1895, art. 2301.—First Bank of Springtown v. Hill, 151 S. W. 652.

§ 193 (Tex. Civ. App.) Communications between husband and wife are not privileged within Rev. St. 1895, art. 2301, when made in the presence of third persons.—First Bank of Springtown v. Hill, 151 S. W. 652.

III. EXAMINATION.

(A) Taking Testimony in General.

§ 236 (Tex. Civ. App.) A defendant, in an action for injuries to a child while crossing a railroad yard, held not entitled to complain of the plaintiff's counsel's failure to interrogate the plaintiff as to her appreciation of her danger at the time of the accident.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Winger, 151 S. W. 586.

(B) Cross-Examination and Re-examination.

§ 277 (Mo.) Cross-examination of a person accused of defiling a female child concerning a visit by him to the house of a woman of ill repute was proper at tending to discredit his testimony that he was impotent.—State v. Donnington, 151 S. W. 975.

§ 277 (Tex. Cr. App.) When a defendant himself brings a former crime into a case, and seeks to arouse sympathy for himself thereby, then the state may show the real facts, and if on cross-examination it develops that defendant committed another crime, which the state's attorney immediately asked the court to instruct the jury not to consider, there is no error.—Kelly v. State, 151 S. W. 304.

§ 277 (Tex. Cr. App.) Where it was claimed that defendant slandered his wife to obtain grounds for a divorce that he might marry M., he was properly cross-examined with reference to his attentions to M.—Elder v. State, 151 S. W. 1052.

§ 277 (Tex. Cr. App.) Where defendant testified that he could not remember after 10 o'clock on the night of the offense, the court properly permitted him to be cross-examined as to whether his lack of remembrance was due to a blow received prior to that hour.—Shaffer v. State, 151 S. W. 1061.

§ 287 (Tex. Civ. App.) Plaintiff could explain inconsistencies in his impeached testimony.—Mason v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas, 151 S. W. 350.

IV. CREDIBILITY, IMPEACHMENT, CONTRADICTION, AND CORROBORATION.

(A) In General.

§ 311 (Tex. Civ. App.) Testimony that persons whose depositions had been admitted were negroes was an attempt at impeachment in an improper way.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Good, 151 S. W. 617.

(B) Character and Conduct of Witness.

§ 337 (Tex. Cr. App.) The defendant having testified, the state could properly show that he had been arrested on a charge of burglary.—Black v. State, 151 S. W. 1053.

§ 344 (Tex. Cr. App.) Accused, on a trial for rape on a female under the age of 15 years, may to affect her credit, show that she had been prior to the alleged offense an inmate of houses of ill fame.—Bigiben v. State, 151 S. W. 1044.

Though accused, on a trial for rape on a female under the age of 15 years, showed on her cross-examination that her act with him was the first act committed, he could not impeach her by showing her prior isolated acts of immorality.—Id.

§ 346 (Tex. Civ. App.) The credibility of a witness may be impeached by proof that he attempted to have a material witness evade the process of the court.—First Bank of Springtown v. Hill, 151 S. W. 652.

§ 347 (Tex. Cr. App.) Where a witness for defendant testified, among other things, that deceased had confessed to him that he had stolen a head of cattle, the state could properly prove that deceased was not indicted for the offense, and that the witness was a member of the grand jury that investigated the case and had not called the attention of the grand jury to the fact of such confession, since it affected his credit.—Kelly v. State, 151 S. W. 304.

§ 350 (Ky.) Though defendant sued for assault and battery may be asked if he had been convicted of a felony, he having testified that he had not, further interrogation as to a charge upon which he had been indicted, tried, and acquitted was improper.—Shields' Adm'r's v. Rowland, 151 S. W. 408.

§ 359 (Tex. Civ. App.) In the absence of proper objection, the fact that a witness has been convicted of felony may be shown by parol.—Chambers v. Wyatt, 151 S. W. 864.

(D) Inconsistent Statements by Witness.

§ 379 (Tex. Civ. App.) In an action on contract, evidence that defendant's agent said that he would advise defendant to settle was not admissible to impeach the testimony of the agent.—S. W. Slayden & Co. v. Palmo, 151 S. W. 649.

§ 379 (Tex.Civ.App.) In an action by a wife to recover a note constituting her separate property actually transferred by her husband, the husband, testifying that she consented to the transfer, could be impeached by proof of his confession that he had wrongfully transferred the note.—First Bank of Springtown v. Hill, 151 S. W. 652.

§ 380 (Tex.Cr.App.) Under Code Cr. Proc. 1911, art. 815, modifying the rule against impeaching one's own witness, held, that the prosecuting attorney was entitled to impeach a witness who had testified injuriously.—Alexander v. State, 151 S. W. 807.

§ 391 (Mo.App.) An answer made by impeaching witness as to statements by plaintiff held properly admitted as against the objection that the answer had no bearing on the issues and tended to prejudice the jurors against plaintiff.—Kiel v. Ott, 151 S. W. 182.

The answer of an impeaching witness held admissible as tending to give the entire conversation of the witness sought to be impeached.—Id.

§ 392 (Ark.) Plaintiff's affidavit in replevin held irrelevant, where he did not deny making it, and it did not tend to controvert his testimony.—Jenkins v. Quick, 151 S. W. 1021.

§ 392 (Tex.Cr.App.) Where defendant's witness on cross-examination was asked if he had not made an affidavit to secure a change of venue for defendant, and he admitted doing so, but denied he knew what was in the application, it was proper to show that in his affidavit he had stated he had "been fully informed of and had read the contents of the application, and that the facts stated therein were true."—Kelly v. State, 151 S. W. 304.

(E) Contradiction and Corroboration of Witness.

§ 406 (Mo.) Where it was in issue whether previous owners had agreed upon a boundary line, cross-examination of a witness to the agreement to show that such agreed line was not the true line held admissible in contradiction of the witness.—Hilgedick v. Greubbel, 151 S. W. 731.

§ 414 (Tex.Civ.App.) A passenger, in an action for injuries, was entitled to prove statements made after the accident to corroborate his version, which was impeached by evidence of contradictory statements.—Mason v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas, 151 S. W. 350.
